SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 22, 1936

(Legislative day of Monday, Feb. 24, 1936)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, April 21, 1936, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are absent from the Senate because of illness; and that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] are unavoidably detained.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], having accepted an invitation to deliver an address before the North Carolina State Bar Association, is absent on that mission.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] is necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chief Examiner of the United States Civil Service Commission, reporting, pursuant to law, that there are on the files of the Commission in Washington and in the field an accumulation of papers which are not needed in the transaction of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition, which, with the accompanying schedule, was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BULOW and Mr. WHITE members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a mass meeting held at Los Angeles, Calif., of officers and workers representing about 300,000 members of the Townsend old-age revolving pension plan movement in southern California, protesting against the enactment of the bill (H. R. 11663) to require reports of receipts and disbursements of certain contributions, to require the registration of persons engaged in attempting to influence legislation, to prescribe punishments for violation of this act, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wichita, Kans., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 4174) to foster and protect interstate commerce by authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve or disapprove of the consolidation or abandonment of carrier facilities of public service, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented letters in the nature of petitions from Wichita Lodge No. 571, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, by Thomas P. Page, secretary-treasurer, of Wichita; Osawatomie Lodge No. 64, International Association of Machinists, by A. W. Farley, recording secretary, of Osawatomie; and Wilson Lodge No. 628, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, by Fred M. Cathell, legislative representative, of Topeka, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 4174) to foster and protect interstate commerce by authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve or disapprove of the consolidation or abandonment of carrier facilities of public service, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 3475) to provide for the establishment of a Nation-wide system of social insurance, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Branch No. 169 of the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund, of Baltimore, Md., favoring the enactment of the bill (S. 3475) to provide for the establishment of a Nation-wide system of social insurance, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Lodge No. 294, International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers, Iron Ship Builders, and Helpers of America, of Baltimore, Md., favoring the enactment of the bill (S. 4174) to foster and protect interstate commerce by authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve or disapprove of the consolidation or abandonment of carrier facilities of public service, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BYRNES presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of South Carolina, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolution endorsing a bill in the Congress of the United States making it a felony to transport in interstate or foreign commerce persons to be employed to obstruct or interfere with the right of peaceful picketing during labor controversies

Whereas there has been introduced in the Congress of the United States by Senator JAMES F. BYRNES, of South Carolina, and known as Senate bill no. 2039 entitled, "A bill making it a felony to transport in interstate or foreign commerce persons to be employed to obstruct or interfere with the right of peaceful picketing during labor controversies", and the same is now pending; and

Whereas we believe it an inalienable right of labor for peaceful picketing without foreign interference; and

Whereas in the past there have been those who have capitalized and make a commercial proposition out of disputes between labor and capital; and

Whereas we believe that Senate bill no. 2039 will do much to eliminate such conditions and is in the interest of labor: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives, That we commend Senator BYRNES for introducing and attempting to secure the passage of and respectfully urge upon the South Carolina delegation their support of said bill; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the clerk of the United States Senate, a copy also to be sent to Senator JAMES F. BYRNES and the other Members of the South Carolina delegation.

LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred three resolutions, all approving the pending so-called housing bill, one adopted by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of the City of New York, another adopted by the Lower East Side Public Housing Conference of New York City, and the third by the State Board of Housing of the State of New York.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved, That the Board of Estimate and Apportionment of the City of New York does strongly and earnestly request the Congress of the United States to enact at the earliest possible date the United States Housing Act of 1936, known as the Wagner housing bill (S. 4424); and be it

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Senator WAGNER, and the chairmen of the House and Senate committees having jurisdiction thereof.

A true copy of resolution adopted by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, April 17, 1936.

PEARL BERNSTEIN, Secretary.

Whereas it has been proven that bad housing is detrimental to the health of the people in a community and that slums constitute an economic waste; and

Whereas it is an acknowledged fact that good housing for persons of low incomes cannot be provided through the ordinary channels of private enterprise; and

Whereas city, State, and National Governments have accepted the principles and acknowledged the obligation of governmental responsibility for the housing of persons who cannot be reached through private enterprise; and

Whereas private enterprise finds it unprofitable to provide housing accommodations of modern standard at rents sufficiently low to meet the needs of low-income wage workers, and therefore it becomes the responsibility of Government to do so: And, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Lower East Side Public Housing Conference endorses a bill introduced in the Senate by the Honorable ROBERT F. WAGNER, United States Senator from New York, and in the House of Representatives by the Honorable HENRY ELLENBOGEN, Congressman from Pennsylvania; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER and ROYAL S. COPELAND, Senators from New York, and the Honorable DAVID I. WALSH, chairman of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, and the following Representatives: Hon. HENRY ELLENBOGEN, Hon. JAMES A. O'LEARY, Hon. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN, Hon. CHRISTOPHER D. SULLIVAN, Hon. WILLIAM I. SIROVICH, Hon. JOHN O'CONNOR, Hon. MARTIN J. KENNEDY, Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL; and be it further

Resolved, That the Lower East Side Public Housing Conference requests of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives that public hearings be held to enable the proponents of the bill to set forth publicly their reasons for their support.

This is a true copy of resolution of the Lower East Side Public Housing Conference, dated April 20, 1936.

MAC GOLDSMITH, President.

RESOLUTION OF THE STATE BOARD OF HOUSING ADOPTED APRIL 17, 1936

Whereas the Legislature of the State of New York, by chapter 823 of the Laws of 1926, declared that congested and unsanitary housing conditions which exist in certain areas of the State in low-priced dwellings are a menace to the health, safety, morals, and welfare, and the reasonable comfort of the citizens of the State; that correction of these conditions in such areas being otherwise impossible, it is essential that provision be made for the investment of private funds at low interest rates, the acquisition at fair prices of adequate parcels of land, the gradual demolition of existing unsanitary and unsafe housing, and the construction of new housing facilities under public supervision in accord with proper standards of sanitation and safety at a cost which will permit monthly rentals which wage earners can afford to pay; and

Whereas by further legislative declaration in 1934 the Legislature of the State of New York having further found that the clearance, replanning, and reconstruction of the areas in which unsanitary or substandard housing conditions exist and the providing of decent, safe, and sanitary dwelling accommodations in said areas and elsewhere for persons of low income are public uses and purposes for which public money may be spent and private property acquired; and

Whereas the legislature having created the State board of housing and authorized the organization of limited dividend housing corporations and the establishment of municipal housing authorities, which are declared to be agencies and instrumentalities of the State for the purpose of promoting the public health and safety by providing for the elimination of unsanitary and dangerous housing conditions, for the relief of congested areas and the construction and supervision of dwellings, and for the letting of apartments at reasonable rentals; and

Whereas mortgage funds are not available in amount sufficient to finance large-scale limited dividend corporation projects, or public funds available in amounts sufficient to finance projects of municipal housing authorities without the aid of the Federal Government in the manner substantially as set forth under the terms of the proposed United States Housing Act, being S. 4424, by WAGNER, and H. R. 12164, by ELLENBOGEN; and

Whereas it is desirable that the benefits of a continuing Federal housing policy be extended throughout the United States by providing for a permanent housing agency in the Federal Government: Be it

Resolved, That the New York State Board of Housing respectfully urges upon the United States Senate the enactment at the earliest date possible of the United States Housing Act of 1936, being Senate bill 4424, introduced by Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, of New York, and urges upon the House of Representatives the enactment at the earliest possible date of the identical measure introduced by Congressman HENRY ELLENBOGEN, of Pennsylvania, being H. R. 12164; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President and to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the members of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor and the House Committee on Banking and Currency.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 4448) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the issuance of the charter to the city of Lynchburg, Va., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1918) thereon.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 11581) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1919) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations authorized the offering of six several amendments on the floor of the Senate. Inasmuch as these amendments are legislative, I file at this time notices of motions to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI, so that the several amendments may be considered by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and permission to file the notices is granted.

NOTICES OF MOTIONS TO SUSPEND PARAGRAPH 4 OF RULE XVI

The notices filed by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma are as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 11581) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, the following amendment, viz: At the end of the bill insert the following new section:

"SEC. —. Paragraph (7) of section 1 (b) of the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'(7) Service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.'"

Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 11581) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, the following amendment, viz: Add as a new section the following:

"SEC. 7. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered, in their discretion, to secure and to install, at no expense to the said District, mechanical parking meters or devices on the streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces in the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction and control of said Commissioners; and said Commissioners are authorized and empowered to make and enforce rules and regulations for the control of the parking of vehicles on such streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces, and as an aid to such regulation and control of the parking of vehicles the Commissioners may prescribe fees for the privilege of parking vehicles where said meters or devices are installed.

"The Commissioners are further authorized and empowered to pay the purchase price and cost of installation of the said meters or devices from the fees collected, and thereafter such meters or devices shall become the property of said District and all fees collected shall be paid to the collector of taxes for deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of said District."

Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 11581) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, the following amendment, viz: Add as a new section the following:

"SEC. 8. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to make and enforce regulations to require any person in charge or control of any lot of land, improved or unimproved, within the District of Columbia, fronting or abutting on a paved sidewalk, whether as owner, tenant, occupant, agent, lessee, receiver, trustee, executor, administrator, or otherwise, to remove and clear away or cause to be removed and cleared away any snow, ice, and sleet from any said sidewalk in front of or abutting on said lot of land; and, in case the snow, ice, and sleet on such sidewalk shall be frozen so hard that it cannot be removed without injury to the pavement, to require such person in charge or control of any such lot of land to cause said sidewalk to be made safe by strewing the same with such suitable material as the Commissioners may prescribe and to require such person in charge or control of any such lot of land to thoroughly clean said sidewalks of snow, ice, sleet, and such material as soon thereafter as the weather shall permit, and to provide penalties for the violation of such regulations not to exceed $25 for each such violation.

"The act entitled 'An act providing for the removal of snow and ice from the paved sidewalks of the District of Columbia', approved September 16, 1922, is hereby repealed."

Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 11581) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, the following amendment, viz: On page 65, line 18, after the figures "$85,000", to insert: "Provided, That pay patients may hereafter be admitted to the Children's Tuberculosis Sanatorium for care and treatment at such rates and under such regulations as may be established by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, insofar as such admissions will not interfere with admission of indigent patients."

Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 11581) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, the following amendment, viz: On page 56, in line 2, after the word "justices", insert "marshal, $3,600, whose appointment is hereby authorized"; and in line 6, to strike out "$111,800" and insert in lieu thereof "$115,400."

Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 11581) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, the following amendment, viz: On page 32, line 25, after the sum "$7,113,640", to insert: ", of which not exceeding $5,000 may be expended for compensation to be fixed by the Board of Education and traveling expenses of educational consultants employed on special educational projects."

AMENDMENTS TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted six amendments intended to be proposed by him on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations to House bill 11581, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed. (See amendments printed in full above.)

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 4518) for the relief of the dependents of W. R. Dyess; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 4519) to dispense with unnecessary renewals of oaths of office by civilian employees of the executive departments and independent establishments, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BLACK (for Mr. BANKHEAD):

A bill (S. 4520) to amend the act approved June 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 436–439), entitled "An act to provide for research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of land-grant colleges"; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

ENFORCEMENT OF TWENTY-FIRST AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION—AMENDMENTS

Mr. KING submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8368) to enforce the twenty-first amendment, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

TAXATION OF INTOXICATING LIQUOR—AMENDMENTS

Mr. McNARY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9185) to insure the collection of the revenue on intoxicating liquor, to provide for the more efficient and economical administration and enforcement of the laws relating to the taxation of intoxicating liquor, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

MINNEAPOLIS & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD

Mr. BENSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 287), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Whereas hearings are now being conducted by the Interstate Commerce Commission with a view to approval or disapproval of the dismemberment of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad and its piecemeal sale to seven other railroads now organized, for purposes of this transaction, into the Associated Railways Co.; and

Whereas the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has appeared at said hearings through its representative, John W. Barriger, 3d, and has actively advocated and encouraged the proposed dismemberment; and

Whereas the said John W. Barriger, 3d, as representative of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, has admitted having held conferences with officials of the railroads seeking to participate in the piecemeal purchase of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad, but has declined in his testimony to disclose the origin of the dismemberment proposal; and

Whereas the railroads comprising the Associated Railways Co. are now indebted to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for about $90,000,000 and propose to borrow $7,200,000 more to carry out the purchase of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad; and

Whereas the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad has in the past year shown a decided improvement in its operating finances, is reported to be valued by the Interstate Commerce Commission at more than $35,000,000, and its sale to Associated Railways Co., including its 1,600 miles of track, is proposed at a price of only about $8,300,000; and

Whereas the management of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad expects its operations to gross from $9,000,000 to $10,000,000 this year, with a net profit of $750,000, and such earnings would justify a capitalization of at least $17,000,000, or $10,000,000 more than Associated Railways offers to pay; and

Whereas under the Interstate Commerce Commission's own method of computation supplies and equipment of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad have been found to be worth $5,609,000, and its Minneapolis terminal has been valued by the Interstate Commerce Commission at more than $4,000,000, and these values are in addition to the value of right-of-way, rails, ties, shops, factories, and stations; and

Whereas the sale and dismemberment of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad proposes abandonment of some 550 miles of its trackage; and

Whereas such abandonment would deprive more than 100 communities in Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa, and Illinois of services and facilities and would tend to convert these northwest communities into ghost towns and deserted villages; and

Whereas the effects of such sale and dismemberment are so obviously disastrous to the four-State area affected that the Great Western Railroad through its president, P. H. Joyce, has withdrawn from the application of Associated Railways for dismemberment, and publicly stated, "We do not care to be a party to depriving more than 100 communities of the services and facilities they now enjoy"; and

Whereas more than 3,000 Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad employees would be deprived of employment and their families deprived of their normal means of support, and the city of Minneapolis would be deprived of its second largest pay roll in excess of $1,750,000; and

Whereas the business interests of Minneapolis and the business and agricultural interests of the four States, Minnesota, South Dakota, Iowa, and Illinois, and the vast membership of the entire 21 organizations of railroad labor, have united in unanimous protest against the break up of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad, with its resultant demoralizing effect upon employment, destructive results to Northwest transportation facilities, and vast loss of property values for taxation purposes; and

Whereas the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, despite the attitude of its representative, John W. Barriger, III, is presumably and avowedly an agency of government set up for purposes of economic reconstruction rather than demoralization: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators, with adequate representation from the districts to be affected by the proposed dismemberment, be appointed by the President of the Senate to investigate the social and economic effects, and the financial advisability or inadvisability of the proposed sale of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad to the Associated Railways Co., and further to investigate the origin of the dismemberment proposal, and to determine and pass upon the propriety of the activity of agents of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in appearing as proponents of the dismemberment and sale; and be it further

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and hereby is, requested to withhold approval of such dismemberment and sale until such time as the investigation, herewith authorized, shall have been completed, and the committee shall have reported to the Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress its findings and recommendations.

SMALL MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 288), which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures be, and it is hereby, requested to report to the Senate as to the advisability of requiring the Secretary of Commerce to investigate and determine for the information of individuals or organizations asking such information, as to the smallest capital, labor, and machine units with which, and the smallest distribution and population areas in which articles of common use, to be specified by the parties seeking to be informed, may be profitably manufactured for sale, and to embody the result in replies to said parties and in bulletins for general circulation.

SEC. 2. That the Committee on Manufactures be, and it is hereby, requested to report to the Senate as to the advisability of requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and determine as to the extent to which small factories may be operated in connection with farms of average size on the farm itself, in farm communities, in villages or elsewhere, and to embody the result in bulletins for general circulation.

MR. HEARST AND THE LOBBY COMMITTEE

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, on April 19, 1936, there appeared in the Emporia Daily Gazette, of Emporia, Kans., an editorial entitled "Hearst Loses." I call this editorial to the attention of the Senate, first, because no one is better qualified to speak for the decent press of the country than is the grand old editor of Emporia, Kans., William Allen White; second, because I agree heartily with what he says; and, third, because the last line of this editorial seems to forecast a coming event. It reads:

Whoever ties up with him—

Meaning Mr. Hearst—

begins to smell lilies and attract the undertaker.

I take it from that that it forecasts one of two things, either that Governor Landon is going to give the "hook" to Mr. Hearst, or he will wake up with some political lilies in his hand.

I ask unanimous consent that the editorial may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Emporia (Kans.) Daily Gazette of Apr. 9, 1936]

HEARST LOSES

It was probably Hearst who lost the injunction suit to keep the Senate Lobby Committee and the Federal Trade Commission from examining or using his telegrams. It may not have been the merits of the case, but Hearst who lost. For, after all, the man in a lawsuit has something to do with the way a lawsuit goes.

Hearst came into this lawsuit with dirty hands. No man living is so entirely responsible for journalistic violating of private life, for purloining and printing private correspondence, as Hearst.

It is odd to see Hearst meek and put-upon as he assumes to be in this lawsuit. The Uriah Heep attitude ill befits a man who is the Fagan of the newspaper business.

There was something in the contention of Hearst's lawsuit. It is just as well that it has gone to the Supreme Court. But there was precious little in Hearst to justify a decision in his favor.

Professionally, Hearst is a form of poison. Politically, he has degenerated into a method of suicide. Whoever ties up with him begins to smell lilies and attract the undertaker.

THE LOBBY INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE AND ITS CRITICS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR MINTON

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an interesting address delivered over the radio on the 15th instant by the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] on the subject of the activities of the special lobby investigating committee of the Senate and some of its critics.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

The Liberty League has spoken again through its $54,000-a-year mouthpiece—Mr. Shouse. The Liberty League is as misrepresentative of the masses of the people as its mouthpiece, Mr. Shouse, is of the facts concerning the Lobby Committee.

It is well to bear in mind who it is that rises to defend your sacred liberties. First, it is the Liberty League, whose pockets are lined with the blood money of the munitions manufacturers, the Du Ponts, Raskobs, and their business associates. And, let it never be forgotten that their mouthpiece is the same Jouett Shouse who, with Raskob of the Liberty League, sought to sell the Democratic Party down the river at Chicago in 1932, and, when repudiated by the party at Chicago, organized the Liberty League and have been engaged ever since in trying to discredit, harass, and defeat President Roosevelt and his administration. Nothing constructive has come from the Liberty League—only carping criticism. What have they had to offer that would have helped this administration in the performance of its gigantic task in the most threatening peacetime emergency in the country's history? Nothing, absolutely nothing. They have attempted only to destroy the confidence of the people in their Government.

In every speech Mr. Shouse has made over the radio concerning the Lobby Committee, he has wound up his speech with the usual attack upon the New Deal and an appeal for more joiners for the Liberty League.

Second to rush to the aid of the Liberty League in defense of your liberties was Mr. Hearst and his unspeakable yellow journals. Mr. Hearst filed a lawsuit to enjoin the activities of the Black lobby committee and was rather promptly thrown out of court, with this reminder by the court as to what is meant by the freedom of the press he prates about so much and prostitutes to propaganda and sensationalism in the hope of increasing his revenues. This is what the court said as it denied Mr. Hearst's injunction and dismissed his suit against the lobby committee: "I cannot see how the freedom of the press is involved in any way. You cannot say that the proprietor of a newspaper is not amenable to ordinary judicial process, or that his communications with his subordinates are sacred. Freedom of the press, as the term originated, meant the right to criticize the Government. No such question is involved here at all."

When Mr. Hearst filed his suit against the lobby committee, this fact was heralded to all the newspapers of the country, with Mr. Hearst in the heroic role of defending the constitutional right of freedom of the press, and with the assurance that this powerful publisher would—by means of the courts, represented as the only remaining citadel of those who fight for liberty—place the Senate committee in its proper place. But when that court summarily dismissed Mr. Hearst and refused his injunction against the committee because, as the court said, it couldn't see how the question of the freedom of the press was involved, I venture the assertion that you, who had heard so much about Mr. Hearst's gallant defense of the freedom of the press, never heard about it when he was thrown out of court.

As I said in the beginning, the Liberty League has as its main objective the defeat of the New Deal, because President Roosevelt would not let Mr. Shouse, Raskob, Du Pont, and the other "money bags" run the country. It has been the purpose of the Liberty League to lay down a smoke screen of loose and false charges about the Lobby Committee in order to prevent the Lobby Committee from exposing the activities of the Liberty League, its satellites, and spurious offspring.

Here is one of the things these defenders of the Constitution, the Liberty League, wanted to conceal from you. This is of especial interest to the farmers of the country. Did you know, farmers, that the Liberty League had supported the formation of an alleged farmers' organization for the protection of the farmers? Of course, Mr. Shouse said he knew nothing about it, but here are the facts developed on yesterday by the Lobby Committee: In April 1935 there was formed in Washington, D. C., under the guidance of Stanley F. Morse, who was then on the pay roll of the Liberty League, with the high-sounding title of agricultural engineer for the Liberty League, a spurious farm organization called the Farmers Independence Council. For several months after its formation this organization had no other office in Washington than the office of the Liberty League in the National Press Building. When they branched out in Chicago, the Farmers Independence Council had no other office than the office of the Liberty League in Chicago. In Washington and Chicago this alleged farmers' organization used the office force of the Liberty League and sent and received telegrams paid for by the Liberty League. The chief contributors to its coffers were Mr. Du Pont and several of his business associates, members of the board of directors of the Bankers Trust Co., the National City Bank, the Chase National Bank of New York, the packers, and the Packers Institute of Chicago, all of whom were contributors to the Liberty League.

The Farmers Independence Council had as its objective, as revealed by its correspondence produced before the Lobby Committee, the same objective as the Liberty League, namely, the defeat of the New Deal. As evidence that they had more interest in the defeat of the New Deal than in the welfare of the farmer, in my home State of Indiana they joined hands with the Republican Victory League of Indiana, and after holding one meeting of the so-called Farmers Independence Council in Indianapolis, attended by about 25 people, most of them Republican politicians, the organization got one $500 contribution out of Indiana, and that was from that well-known dirt farmer, George A. Ball, the millionaire manufacturer of Muncie, Ind., and the Republican national committeeman. So this is the spurious offspring of the Liberty League, nurtured by the Liberty League, supported by its supporters, and the only farm organization in the country wrapped in cellophane and using the Liberty League's money to farm the farmers.

The connection of this Farmers' Independence Council with the Liberty League and the Republican Party was carefully concealed from the farmers. Of course, we expect the Republican Party to try and defeat the New Deal. That is perfectly all right. We expect the Liberty League to try and defeat the New Deal. We welcome their opposition. But if the Liberty League and the farmers of Wall Street, Wilmington, Del., and Chicago are going to run a farm organization and play politics with the Republican Party, they ought to tell the real farmers they are doing it.

Now, with reference to the telegrams of Mr. Silas Strawn's law firm, mentioned by Mr. Shouse, Mr. Strawn's suit was not against the lobby committee, but against the Western Union Telegraph Co. The lobby committee wanted to see Mr. Strawn's telegrams because the Liberty League had paid for $117 worth of them that had come in and gone out of Washington. The lobby committee wanted to see Mr. Strawn's telegrams to see what his activities, if any, were with reference to influencing the R. F. C. to loan the Dawes bank in Chicago $90,000,000 before the New Deal came into existence, and what, if anything, Mr. Strawn had to do in attempting to influence the actions of public officials in Washington with reference to this loan. In due time we expect to get around to these telegrams and find out what, if anything, the hand of Silas Strawn was doing in Washington while his law firm battled in Chicago to make the little stockholders of the defunct Dawes bank pay the debt saddled on this bank, while the large stockholders got out from under by the organization of another bank.

Senator SCHWELLENBACH said, in his speech of April 2, over the radio: "Neither the committee nor its agents examined a single, solitary telegram to or by any person, association, or corporation that was not engaged in the business of lobbying."

I reassure you that that is the fact, Mr. Shouse to the contrary notwithstanding. In his speech of March 6, Mr. Shouse said: "I mean that if you, wherever you live, sent any telegram, however private, to anyone in Washington, or if you sent any telegram, however private, out of Washington to anyone in the world upon any subject during the period in question, your telegram has come under the prying eyes of the new inquisition."

I denounce that as a falsehood out of the whole cloth.

Senator BLACK pointed out in his reply to Mr. Shouse that this would have taken the committee about 10 years, since there were about 14,000,000 such telegrams. I assure you the committee wasn't even interested.

Mr. Shouse, in his next speech, as pointed out by Senator SCHWELLENBACH, had revised his figures to 22,000—a mere difference of 13,778,000 telegrams. To show you how Mr. Shouse garbles the record, he reiterates in his last speech the statement made in his first speech: "Your telegram has come under the prying eyes of the new inquisition." And then he proceeds in this same last speech of his to give the lie to that statement by saying: "I repeat that every one of them was made subject to prying eyes through the unlawful maneuvers of the new inquisition." I submit there is a vast difference between saying "your telegrams have come under prying eyes" and saying "they are made subject to prying eyes." It is just the difference between saying "your telegrams have been looked at" and saying "they may be looked at."

Now, with reference to the activities of the Federal Communications Commission, referred to by Mr. Shouse. The Federal Communications Commission has nothing whatever to do with the Lobby Committee in initiating its investigation or determining the policy of its inquiry. The Federal Communications Commission started its own inquiry on its own motion, without any request or suggestion from the Lobby Committee, prompted, however, to do so by revelations made by the Lobby Committee, that names of senders of telegrams had been forged by the thousands and the records of lobbyists and of the telegraph company, in one instance, had been burned, in violation of the law, in order to conceal the forgeries and fraud, and, when the Federal Communications Commission had completed its examination of the telegrams, using one, and sometimes two, of its employees for a few weeks, it copied and took away only 65 copies of typical telegrams. The Lobby Committee did not use the Federal Communications Commission to obtain telegrams, because the Lobby Committee had more power than the Federal Communications Commission. We, therefore, did not need the Commission. Any law student ought to know that.

So much hullabaloo had been raised by the Liberty League and the lobbyists about the Lobby Committee and the Federal Communications Commission that Senator BORAH introduced a resolution in the Senate calling upon the Federal Communications Commission to report the facts. In response to that resolution the Commission promptly made a written report to the Senate on March 16, and on March 17 the report was printed and laid upon the desk of each Senator, where it lay for 9 days, when I called it to the Senate's attention and discussed it on the floor of the Senate. That report has never been questioned by the Senate. Senator BORAH read it, and apparently he was satisfied. If you want a copy of it, write me and I will send it to you, and see for yourself whether I am right or the Liberty League's spokesman.

That the activities and action of the Lobby Committee have met with the approval of the Senate is evidenced by the fact that while all this misrepresentation of the Senate Lobby Committee through the press and over the radio by the Liberty League was going on, the Senate, by unanimous consent, without a voice being raised against it by Democrat or Republican, voted $12,500 more money for the use of the Lobby Committee to pursue its work. As further evidence of the fact that the United States Senate does not share the view of the Liberty League that the Lobby Committee is violating anybody's constitutional right, on March 30, 1936, I made a speech on the floor of the Senate, in which I asked the Senate if we were doing wrong to advise us so, and to this good day no Senator has raised his voice to say the committee was wrong. Why was this? Because the Senate knows the facts to be as I have related them, and not as Mr. Shouse has stated. Furthermore, the Senate knows that the subpenas used by the Lobby Committee and its activities are following precedents of the Senate and House that have been established for over 125 years. We are using the same kind of subpenas and tactics used by Senator Walsh, of Montana, when he unearthed Teapot Dome, while the reactionary press of the country denounced him. We are using the same subpenas and tactics Senator WHEELER used when he drove Harry Daugherty out of public life in the face of court injunctions that stayed his hands urtil Daugherty's friends could burn the records. We are using the same subpenas and tactics employed by Senator FLETCHER and Mr. Pecora when they exposed the tax-dodging skinflints of Wall Street. We are using the same subpenas and tactics that Senator Reed, of Missouri, used when he unearthed the rotten Vare machine in Pennsylvania.

If you want to know what the precedents are, write me, and I will send you an extract of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that contains them. You do not have to take my word, or the word of Mr. Shouse; you can read them yourself.

In conclusion, be not deceived by Mr. Shouse and the Liberty League.

Truly, the voice is the voice of Jacob but the hand is the hand of Esau.

DECISION SUSTAINING NEW YORK STATE JOB INSURANCE LAW

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the decision of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York upholding the job insurance law of that State. The opinion, which was written by Chief Judge Crane, is a very able one, and I think it is of peculiar interest at this time.

There being no objection, the decision was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of Apr. 16, 1936]

COURT OF APPEALS DECISION UPHOLDING THE STATE JOB INSURANCE LAW

W. H. H. Chamberlin, Inc., appellant respondent, v. Elmer F. Andrews, industrial commissioner, defendants, respondents, appellants. E. C. Stearns & Co., plaintiff, appellant, respondent, v. Elmer F. Andrews, industrial commissioner, defendants, respondents, appellants. Associated Industries of New York State, Inc., plaintiff respondent, v. The Department of Labor of the State of New York and Elmer F. Andrews, defendants appellants. Cross appeals in the first two cases from a judgment of the special term, Onondaga County, declaring unconstitutional in part chapter 468 of the Laws of 1935. Appeal in the third case by the State of New York from a judgment of the special term, Albany County, which declared chapter 468 of the Laws of 1935 unconstitutional.

Crane, chief judge:

The complaint in each of the actions herein asks for a declaratory judgment that the New York unemployment insurance law (Laws of 1935, ch. 468, art. 18 of the labor law) is unconstitutional under both the Federal and the State Constitutions.

QUESTION IS HELD ACUTE

The plaintiffs moved for judgment on the pleadings under rule 112 of the Rules of Civil Practice, and the court granted the motions to the extent of holding that subdivision 2 of section 506 of the statute violates section 6 of article I of the New York Constitution, and section 1 of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution. The court upheld the statute otherwise and granted judgment in favor of the defendants to that extent.

In a companion case, Associated Industries of New York State, Inc., the Department of Labor of the State of New York et al., the special term, after issue joined, adjudged the said act to be unconstitutional and void in its entirety as depriving the plaintiff of its property without due process of law, and denying to it the equal protection of the law. Both these cases come directly to this court, pursuant to subdivision 3 of section 588 of the Civil Practice Act, a constitutional question being solely presented for review. We do not share the doubts expressed by these special terms.

The courts can take judicial notice of the fact that unemployment for the last 5 or 6 years has been a very acute problem for State and Federal Government. There have always been from earliest times the poor and the unfortunate whom the State has had to support by means of money raised by taxation. We have had our homes for the poor and the infirm, hospitals, infirmaries, and many and various means for taking care of those who could not take care of themselves. The institutions housing our insane have grown to be an enormous expense, illustrating that the legality of the expenditure of public moneys for vast numbers of those who were without means of support or help has never been questioned.

HOLDS PUBLIC MUST PAY

Another problem has faced society which has been a source of study, discussion, agitation, and planning. Unemployment, from whatever cause, has increased enormously in every part of the country, if not throughout the world. Is there any means possible to provide against unemployment, the loss of work, with its serious consequences to the family, to the children, and to the public at large?

When such a matter becomes general and affects the whole body politic, a situation has arisen which requires the exercise of the reserve power of the State, if there be a practical solution.

Some have suggested that for the periodical recurrence of panics and hard times the actuary might be able to work out a scheme of insurance. We need not pause to determine whether this can be done or not.

The fact is that in the past few years enormous sums of State and Federal moneys have been spent to keep housed and alive the families of those out of work who could not get employment. Such help was absolutely necessary, and it would be a strange sort of government—in fact, no government at all—that could not give help in such trouble.

The legislature of the State, acting after investigation and study upon the report of experts, has proposed what seems to it a better plan. Instead of solely taxing all the people directly, it has passed a law whereby employers are taxed for the help of the unemployed, the sums thus paid being cast upon the public generally through the natural increase in the prices of commodities. Whether relief be under this new law of the legislature or under the dole system the public at large pays the bill.

ACT'S OBJECTIVE IS UPHELD

We may concede that much of unemployment is due to other factors than business depression. Just what does cause slumps in business, panics, and unemployment has never been satisfactorily explained, but a very large percentage of those who are out of work have lost their jobs or positions by reason of poor business conditions and hard times. I can see, therefore, nothing unreasonable or unconstitutional in the legislative act which seeks to meet the evils and dangers of unemployment in the future by raising a fund through taxation of employers generally.

This act in brief taxes a certain class of employers 3 percent on their pay rolls. This class of employer includes those who have employed at least four persons within each of 13 or more calendar weeks in the year 1935 or any subsequent calendar year. The employment of farm labor, of one's spouse or minor child, or employment in certain charities are excluded.

Unequal protection of the laws and unfair classification are charged against this act because employers who have had no unemployment are obliged to contribute to a fund to help those who have lost positions in failing or bankrupt businesses; also because the line is drawn at four employees instead of including all and any employers.

FINDS ALL EMPLOYERS AFFECTED

We do not think that this narrow view is required by any constitutional provision. People have to live and when they cannot support themselves someone has to look after them.

When able-bodied, willing men cannot find work they may be treated as a class, irrespective of their particular calling or trade. The peril to the State arises from unemployment generally, not from any particular class of workers. So, likewise, employers generally are not so unrelated to the unemployment problem as to make a moderate tax upon their pay rolls unreasonable or arbitrary. As stated before, unemployment and business conditions generally are to a large extent linked together.

Reasonable classification has been explained in Truax v. Corrigan (257 U. S. 312, p. 337). Quoting from Southern Ry Co. v. Green (216 U. S. 400–417), the court said: "While reasonable classification is permitted, without doing violence to the equal protection of the laws, such classification must be based upon some real and substantial distinction, bearing a reasonable and just relation to the things in respect to which such classification is imposed; and classification cannot be arbitrarily made without any substantial basis."

That the purpose of this law is to help those who have worked when they could get work—the working class at present out of work—is apparent from the limitation to the benefits.

ACT'S LIMITATIONS ARE CITED

Section 503 of the act reads as follows:

"Liability for payment of benefits.

"1. Benefits shall be paid from the fund to each unemployed employee entitled thereto.

"2. Benefits shall become payable 2 years from the date on which contributions by employers become payable under this article.

"3. No employee shall be entitled to any benefits unless he—

"(A) Is suffering total unemployment as defined in the article.

"(B) Has, as provided in this article, registered as totally unemployed and reported for work or otherwise given notice of the continuance of his unemployment; and

"(C) Has had not less than 90 days of employment as defined in this article within the 12 months preceding the day on which benefits are to commence, or (in the alternative) unless he has had not less than 130 days of employment during the 24 months preceding the day on which benefits are to commence; and

"(D) In no case shall the fund be liable to pay benefits to an employee for any unemployment occurring more than 12 months after the date on which such employee was in employment and in no case in which the claim for benefit has not been filed in the local State employment office as provided in section 510, subdivision 3, within 2 years of the last day of employment preceding the period for which such claim is made.

"(E) The fund shall pay benefits to employees in the ratio of 1 week of benefits for each 15 days of employment within the 52 weeks preceding the beginning of the payment of benefits."

WAITING PERIODS DEFINED

Further limitations are found in the sections following:

"Section 504. Waiting period: 1. An employee shall be entitled to benefits on account of unemployment which continues subsequent to a waiting period of 3 weeks after notification of unemployment; provided that not more than 5 weeks of unemployment for which no benefit is paid shall be required as a waiting period within any calendar year (except as otherwise provided under subdivision 2 of this section). No week of unemployment shall count as a waiting period in any case except weeks of unemployment as to which notification of unemployment has been given.

"2. An employee shall not be entitled to benefits except for unemployment which continues subsequent to a waiting period of 10 weeks:

"(a) If he has lost his employment through misconduct in connection with his employment; or

"(b) If he has lost his employment because of a strike, lock-out, or other industrial controversy in the establishment in which he was employed.

"SEC. 505. Amount of benefits.—1. Benefits shall be payable on account of total unemployment after the specified waiting period at the rate of 50 percent of the employee's full-time weekly wages, but not to exceed a maximum of $15 per week, nor to be less than a minimum of $5 per week.

QUOTES DISQUALIFICATIONS

"SEC. 506. Disqualification for benefits:

"1. No benefits shall be payable to any employee who refuses to accept an offer of employment for which he is reasonably fitted by training and experience, including employments not subject to this article: Provided, however, That no employee otherwise qualified to receive benefits shall lose the right to benefits by reason of a refusal to accept employment if—

"(a) Acceptance of such employment would either require the employee to join a company union or would interfere with his joining or retaining membership in any labor organization; or

"(b) There is a strike, lock-out, or other industrial controversy in the establishment in which the employment is offered; or

"(c) The employment is either not within the State or at an unreasonable distance from his residence, or travel to and from the place of employment at expense substantially greater than that required in his former employment, unless the expenses be provided for; or

"(d) The wages, hours, and conditions offered are substantially less favorable to the employee than those prevailing for similar work in the locality, or are such as tends to depress wages or working conditions.

"SEC. 507. Limitation of amount of benefits: The total amount of benefits to which an employee shall be entitled in any consecutive 52 weeks shall not exceed 16 times his benefit for 1 week of total unemployment, seasonal occupations are to be provided for by rules and regulations after further investigation."

OTHER EMERGENCIES RECALLED

What shall we say about this act? At least it is an attempt to solve a great and pressing problem in government. We have had such problems thrust upon our attention arising out of emergencies, such as the rent laws (People ex rel. Durham Realty Corporation v. La Eftra, 230 N. Y. 429); the housing laws (Adler v.

Deegan, 251 N. Y. 467); and the milk laws (People v. Nebbia, 262 N. Y. 259).

"The legislature seems to meet the future now without waiting for the emergency to arise. Can it do so? Unless there is something radically wrong, striking at the very fundamentals of constitutional government, courts should not interfere with these attempts in the exercise of the reserve power of the State to meet dangers which threaten the entire commonweal and affect every home. No large body of men and women can be without work and the body politic be healthy.

The fund, known as the unemployment insurance fund, created under this law, is to be deposited in or invested in the obligations of the unemployment trust fund of the United States Government. This is merely a form of security, the moneys never leaving the power or control of the State authorities.

Whether we consider such legislation as we have here a tax measure or an exercise of the police power seems to me to be immaterial. Power in the State must exist to meet such situations, and it can only be met by raising funds to tide over the unemployment period. Money must be obtained and it does not seem at all arbitrary to confine the tax to a business and unemployment out of which the difficulty principally arises.

SAYS COURT CANNOT SIFT DATA

It is said that this is taxation for the benefit of a special class, not the public at large, and thus the purpose is essentially private. The legislature, after investigating, has found the facts to be that those who are to receive benefits under the act are the ones most likely to be out of employment in times of depression.

The courts cannot investigate these facts and should not attempt to do so. The briefs submitted show that the classification or selection made by the legislature has followed investigation and has sought to reach the weakest spot.

Experience may show this to be a mistake. No law can act with certainty; it measures reasonable probabilities.

"Judicial inquiry does not concern itself with the accuracy of the legislative finding but only with the question whether it so lacks any reasonable basis as to be arbitrary." (Mr. Justice Roberts in Standard Oil Co. v. Marysville, 279 U. S. 582, 586–587.)

Fault is also found, perhaps with some justification, with the benefit allowed, after a period of 10 weeks' idleness, to those who have been discharged or left because of strikes. Here again the legislature may exercise its judgment, and a full scheme or plan cannot be condemned because the courts may not approve of certain details.

So too, the right to refuse other work of a certain kind when offered has come in for criticism. There may be a diversity of views as to the wisdom of these provisions, but again, these are not matters for the courts to consider unless they become so extreme as to become arbitrary.

Whether or not the legislature should pass such a law or whether it will afford the remedy or the relief predicted for it, is a matter for fair argument, but not for argument in a court of law. Here we are dealing simply with the power of the legislature to meet a growing danger and peril to a large number of our fellow citizens, and we can find nothing in the act itself which is so arbitrary or unreasonable as to show that it deprives any employer of his property without due process of law or denies to him the equal protection of the laws.

I am of the opinion that the decision in Railroad Retirement Board v. Alton R. Co. (295 U. S. 330), is not applicable here. The Railroad Retirement Act of June 27, 1934, held to be unconstitutional, related to the pensioning of a certain class of employees. It could not be sustained as a police regulation or within the police power, as no such power exists in the Federal Government, and the act failed to come within the field of interstate commerce as stated in the opinion. Even the police power of the State might fall far short of enabling the legislatures of the States to provide for pensioning employees in favored industries or employment.

It therefore follows that the judgments below in plaintiff's favor must be reversed and the motions for judgment on the pleadings denied, without costs.

ECONOMIC RECOVERY AND MONETARY STABILIZATION

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an able address delivered by Russell C. Leffingwell, formerly Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, during my term as Secretary of the Treasury, before the Academy of Political Science of New York, April 2, 1936, on Economic Recovery and Monetary Stabilization.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is well to recall that all plans for reconstruction after the war in every nation were based upon monetary stabilization and the return to the gold standard or a gold exchange standard. The first to return to gold after the war was the United States. We lifted the gold embargo in the summer of 1919. The early post-war period of frantic paper money inflation in Germany, Austria, and the succession States was followed in the mid-1920's by plans of reconstruction and monetary stabilization for those countries. England, France, Belgium, Italy, and Japan returned to gold. Even India took steps in that direction. But monetary stabilization proceeded more rapidly than appeasement. While finance ministers and central bankers, aided by other banks and bankers, formulated plans to facilitate trade and recovery through monetary stabilization, politicians and statesmen and soldiers and the people of each country only intensified their nationalism, political and economic.

How we in America came to be forced off gold, how necessary and grimly inevitable that action was, how cruel and devastating had been the consequences of monetary deflation, and how life-giving and revitalizing and essential to recovery the policy of insuring low interest rates, I need not repeat.

Sound and stable money is the handmaid of recovery, not the master. If we are to have sound and stable money we must have peace in the world—between nations and within nations. We must have freer trade in the world—between nations and within nations. And we must have budgetary equilibrium.

BUDGET BALANCE DEFEATED BY DEFLATION

As long as unemployment here at home continues to be great, and Government aid on a vast scale continues to be necessary, and capital issues are largely limited to refunding purposes and Government issues, recovery must be conceded to be incomplete. It cannot be necessary to say to so intelligent and chosen an audience as this that there ought not to be any reversion to deflationary policies while recovery is incomplete. The great paradox of Government finance is that fiscal and monetary policies must be such as to increase and not reduce the income of the people if the Budget is to be balanced. A government cannot balance its budget by increasing the tax rates to be imposed upon declining incomes; no more than can a railroad balance its budget by increasing the rates it charges for transportation against a declining volume of business.

Deflationary fiscal and monetary policies reduce incomes and increase the burdens thrown upon the State for relief and public welfare. Thus the State that seeks to balance its budget by deflationary policies defeats its objects, burns the candle at both ends, increases its expenditures, and reduces its income. If there be any among us inclined to oversimplify the problem, to find a happy solution by simply saying "balance the Budget", let him bear in mind this paradox. A government cannot balance its budget by edict. It cannot extract blood from a stone nor gain revenues by deflating the national economy.

DANGER OF DEAR-MONEY POLICY

Low rates of interest must be maintained by Treasury policy and Federal Reserve policy if there is to be recovery and a balanced Budget. Any premature effort to make money dear, in apprehension and in anticipation of an inflation which does not exist, will defeat its own purpose by retarding recovery, increasing unemployment, reducing income, and increasing the need of Government relief. A private businessman may, if unrestrained by motives of kindliness and good will and social obligation, hire and fire as he pleases, raise prices and reduce expenses, curtail his business, or wind it up if it runs at a loss. Government cannot do that. Government is the residuary legatee of all the successes and all the failures of all of us. Government must keep itself going and keep its people going too. Government can balance its Budget only by enriching its people, not by impoverishing them.

RELIEF NECESSARY

Government must intervene to relieve the sufferings of the people. It is intolerable in the modern world with its elaborate mechanism of trade and finance, its highly industrialized and mechanized economy, that our people should be left to starve or to endure privation almost worse than starvation. It is intolerable that the monetary mechanism evolved for the sole purpose of achieving stability and human welfare should be permitted ever again to run amuck as it did from 1929 to 1933. It is an archaic superstition that money is stable if its value remains fixed in gold only, while prices collapse more or less generally to the point of bankruptcy, as they did in that tragic period. During the last 3 years Government policy put an end to deflation, brought about some measure of recovery, achieved monetary stabilization and provided necessary relief. Let us not be unmindful of the depth of economic despair from which in 3 years we have emerged, nor the vital necessity of Government action along these lines, however critical we may be of the extent and manner in which public expenditures have been made, or of this and that phase of monetary policy.

DANGERS AHEAD

But while we must be grateful for the immense progress achieved and recognize the validity of the emergency which called for the emergency use of Government credit and for emergency monetary policies, we must not close our eyes to the perils ahead.

One reason why America financed her part in the war well was that she had no debt to speak of when the war began, a little more than a billion and a quarter dollars. That debt she increased to nearly $27,000,000,000 in less than 2½ years. Thereafter promptly she began debt reduction and continued it for over a decade. From a peak of nearly $27,000,000,000 in August 1919 the debt was reduced to the post-war low point of $16,000,000,000 at the end of 1930.

It is partly because the United States Government debt had been so greatly reduced in the post-war decade that the Government's credit was readily available to meet the emergency of the great depression. What do we have credit for? To use when the need arises. How do we have credit to use then? By not abusing it ever. The great peril which confronts us today as a people is that we may learn to abuse the Government credit after the emergency need has passed.

MOUNTING PUBLIC DEBT

In a little more than 2 war years the public debt rose $25,000,000,000. In 11 years it was reduced by ten and one-half billion dollars. But now for 5 years and more it has been rising steadily and without intermission, until today it has reached an all-time peak of over $30,000,000,000, having almost doubled itself in the period since the depression began.

These figures do not include four and one-half billion dollars of debt guaranteed by the United States Government incurred since the depression began nor the rapidly mounting debt of the States and municipalities.

I have said that the use of the public credit for relief in the emergency, and going off gold to stop the deflation, were necessary emergency measures. But these were major operations justified and only justified by the magnitude of the calamity that had befallen the American people. We must not drift into the notion that these emergency powers can be availed of as a habit.

EMERGENCY MEASURES NOT FOR EVERY-DAY USE

The credit of the United States and the resources of the American people are so great that the financial risks involved seem even now after 5 years of mounting public debt quite remote. And the easy-money policy, which is still so necessary for economic recovery, gives an artificial facility to public borrowing. But cheap money and a mounting public debt are habit-forming drugs to be used sparingly and in an emergency only. The use of them must be discontinued as promptly as possible or, first, they lose their stimulating effect and then become severely depressant. Emergency use of the public debt in a crisis is to be applauded. Its abuse becomes a menace. Once let the impression arise that a government has become addicted to these drugs and its credit goes, and along with it the value of its money. Then inflation sets in. And there is no deflation so complete and devastating as that which comes when government credit is vanishing, and with it the buying power of money. That is another paradox—that the most deflationary thing that can happen to a people is a paper-money inflation.

MORAL AND POLITICAL RISKS

And what of the moral and political risks? The habit of turning to the Public Treasury for relief and aid and subsidy is deeply ingrained in the American people. This is not a vice of any man or any party or any period. From the foundation of the Republic, Congress has been besieged by appeals for grants in aid and subsidies and doles, for tariffs and pensions, for rivers and harbors, for public buildings and public works, for roads and canals, in aid of this and that organized national or local group of voters. The pork barrel and logrolling are not new or even recent discoveries. The deterioration of our public life I attribute in large measure to the irksomeness to the public man of the pressure for placating his constituents by grants and favors from the public purse, if he is to attain, or to retain, public office.

Some of us are all too prone to concern ourselves with the mote in another's eye and ignore the beam in our own. Some are apt to be self-righteous in criticism of a soldiers' bonus or unemployment relief, though we rightly approve necessary aid to banks and railroads; to complain of paying money to farmers for what they don't grow, and yet be complacent about the infinitely more costly tariff favors habitually showered by Congress upon our manufacturing interests.

EVILS TO BE AVOIDED

Today the problem of monetary stabilization and recovery appears to have progressed in this country as far as it can while recovery is so largely dependent upon emergency aid from the Government, and restricted by the disastrous effect upon our exports and foreign trade of tariffs, embargoes, quotas, disturbed foreign exchanges, wars, and the fear of war. The great peril which confronts the Republic aside from the disturbance of world affairs and the curtailment of world trade, is the threat that the long-established and ever-growing habit of treating Uncle Sam as a "sugar daddy" will undermine the independence and self-respect of the American people and will corrupt the electorate and their chosen representatives.

THE NEED OF A CIVIL SERVICE

The growing importance of government in our affairs, whether we like it or not, gives added importance to the efficiency and incorruptibility of the public servant. Next after corruption of the electorate through grants and favors to special groups and communities, the Government of the Republic is imperiled by the failure to establish a first-rate civil service by offering a permanent career to first-rate men. The American is too often a jack of all trades and master of none. We are too prone to think of the public service as an honor or a reward for the individual, too little as an opportunity to serve the public. The American people are entitled to something better in the field of public service than the spoils system or the laboratory system. Public service ought not any longer to be regarded as a reward for political service, for campaign contributions, as a field to teach ignoramuses the public business, nor for theorists to experiment in. We do not wish to be guinea pigs for laboratory experiments by freshmen students of government and political science.

The increasing power of government and its enlarged functions call out above everything else for the abolition of the spoils system and the laboratory system and the substitution of a trained permanent civil service of men immune from political attack, immune from political removal, devoting their lives to the public welfare. The upper levels of the civil service of the United States should be made to appeal to the very best of the graduates of our colleges and law schools and business schools. Our Government is political, and should be. That is the nature of democratic institutions. The President and his Cabinet and one political undersecretary should rule each department. The remaining officers and employees should be permanent civil servants trained to their tasks from the highest to the lowest and honored in accordance with their competence.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 3258. An act to amend section 304 of the Revised Statutes, as amended;

S. 3395. An act to authorize the acquisition of the railroad tracks, trestle, and right-of-way of the Gulf Power Co. at the Naval Air Station, Pensacola, Fla.;

S. 3413. An act to give effect to the convention between the United States and certain other countries for the regulation of whaling, concluded at Geneva, September 24, 1931, signed on the part of the United States, March 31, 1932, and for other purposes;

S. 3669. An act providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States;

S. 3720. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States the bequest of the late Henry H. Rogers, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 233. Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition to be held in the State of Ohio during the year 1936, and authorizing the President to invite the Dominion of Canada to participate therein, and for other purposes.

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN CRIMINALS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2969) to authorize the deportation of criminals, to guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the noncriminal classes, to provide for legalizing the residence in the United States of certain classes of aliens, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported from the Committee on Immigration. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] had the floor when the Senate recessed yesterday evening and is now recognized.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, it is my understanding from the clerk, in particular reference to my agreement to limit myself to a period and duration of 3 hours in which to discuss the pending question, I now have available 1 hour and 25 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator that, so far as the parliamentary situation is concerned, the Chair knows nothing about any agreement. That is a matter in the keeping of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes, sir. It was a private agreement into which I entered yesterday, but the clerk is keeping the time, and I understand from him this morning that I have remaining an hour and 25 minutes.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I am glad to yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. I inquire of the Senator who were the other parties to the agreement by which the Senator's time was limited in discussing this subject?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Well, a very peculiar situation arose, and under the circumstances I would really prefer not to make any mention of it. I may state that I was exceedingly regretful to be forced to limit my remarks in regard to this all-important question, but I have made a personal compact to that effect, and I am going to keep my word.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I was merely curious to know who was representing the Senate in such negotiations.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The agreement affected only myself and, of course, has no effect whatsoever upon any other Members of the Senate who may be desirous of expressing their opinions on this all-important subject.

Mr. President, I desire this morning to bring to the attention of the Senate, and particularly to the attention of the Senators from the State of Colorado, a dispatch published in a morning newspaper, headlined:

Colorado martial law at border bars aliens; 316-mile stretch patroled against indigents, too.

The dispatch continues:

DENVER, April 18.—Gov. Ed C. Johnson declared martial law today in a strip 316 miles long and a mile wide along the southern border of the State to keep out aliens and indigents.

The Governor said he had learned that railroads were shipping in track laborers and that representatives of sugar-beet companies were importing field workers from New Mexico and Texas. He also asserted that alien sheep herders were being imported.

The Governor ordered Neil W. Kimball, adjutant general of the Colorado National Guard, to mobilize all guardsmen needed to patrol the strip 316 miles along the New Mexico border. Kimball planned to use 50 men. State highway patrolmen, port of entry officers, and local officers will be stationed along other boundaries for the same purpose.

At this time I wish to extend publicly my heartfelt congratulations to the Governor of the State of Colorado. I do not know whether he is a Republican or whether he is a Democrat or whether he is an independent; but, whoever he is, I commend him for his endeavor to protect the workingmen of his State of Colorado against the influx of foreign labor and the resulting complications.

I was not at all surprised to learn of the fact through the columns of the press that the Governor of that great State had taken action to protect the laboring men and the American citizens of his Commonwealth from conditions which are being felt in every State of the Union because of the presence of aliens from shores beyond the seas whom we claim are in this country in numbers anywhere from 1,000,000 to 7,000,000. I am rather inclined to believe, unless we of the National Legislature of this country, take some action to protect the American people, that every State in the Union will be forced to enact drastic legislation for the protection of the people of the respective States. I say in all humility that, in my opinion, it is the duty of the National Congress to protect the American people. If we do not do so, the various States of the Union are themselves going to take action.

Mr. President, I desire to read the headlines from an article which appeared in the Washington Herald of this morning:

W. P. A. payments to "reds" bared by DICKSTEIN. Amendment to relief bill for Government enemies planned as bar to aid.

All of us who have been reading the press, all of us who have been sufficiently interested in this great country to ascertain what is going on, know that the presence of thousands upon thousands of aliens is seriously affecting our labor situation. By "aliens" I mean those who have come into the country both legally and illegally, but who have not attempted to become naturalized citizens, who have not been interested in securing the protection of our flag, who have not been interested in placing themselves in a position to uphold the honor of the flag and the fundamental principles upon which this country is builded. In speaking of aliens, I am referring to people who have entered our borders legally and illegally, but have no interest in the continued progress of our great country, who come here only for the purpose of usurping the jobs which rightly belong to the American workingman. Of all times that we should give attention to the interests of the American workingman, now is the time, because the last report of the American Federation of Labor disclosed, according to their statistical information, that today there are 12,625,000 men out of employment in the United States.

Let me read the headlines of this article again:

W. P. A. payments to "reds", bared by DICKSTEIN; amendment to relief bill for Government enemies planned as bar to aid.

At the present time we have no idea how many aliens there are in this country. It has been estimated that the number is anywhere from 1,000,000 to 7,000,000. We have no registration laws in our land. We have no way of ascertaining those who are here, legally or illegally, who have not taken out citizenship papers. I am glad indeed that Mr. DICKSTEIN, of the Immigration Committee of the House of Representatives, has brought to the attention of the American people the condition that is existing.

We are troubled in this country by advocates of communism, and those who have given the subject some thought consider that the situation is, perhaps, a great deal more serious than is generally realized. The Communists in this country who are stirring up the trouble, thousands upon thousands of them, have jumped ships, have waded across the Rio Grande River on the south, have found their way across the Canadian border to the north of us, and yet we sit here and, from all that I can learn, we have not had disclosed to us that which will follow unless action be taken now to bar undesirables from setting foot upon the shores of our land.

A correspondent by the name of Lydia Mendum sums up the situation in delightful terms for those desirous of protecting America for Americans. In a communication published in the Boston Transcript this writer said:

There are in this country 7,000,000 aliens, of whom 100,000 are undesirables. If these people had stayed in their own country we would have had very little unemployment discontent.

We have given them positions of trust and importance, and our native born have been pushed aside.

Minutemen were needed in '76; they are needed now.

No truer or stronger statement was ever made.

Paul Revere gave the "cry of alarm to every Middlesex village and farm."

The radio, the telephone, and the newspapers do that for us now.

I am told that no country but ours gives full citizenship to aliens. This privilege should be given only to the native born.

You can easily see that the aliens are getting control of our Government. They care nothing for our institutions and our laws. This country is now the happy hunting ground for the rascals and criminals of other countries. Look at the list of wrongdoers. You will see very few English or American names.

That speaks for itself.

Our annual bill for crime is estimated at $140,000,000. In my opinion it would be two-thirds less if the immigration laws were rigidly enforced. One-half of the remainder would be reduced if there were no parole and wrongdoers were punished as the offense deserved.

How long are we going to stand by and let the country be taken from our control?

The united efforts of many organizations would have a great influence.

Let us insist that every candidate for office pledge himself to do his utmost for the strict enforcement of the immigration laws.

And as surely as the sun is to rise tomorrow, unless we take some action, the people in their wrath and in their might will take matters into their own hands initially by demanding that every man in public life shall say where he stands, whether he stands for Americans or whether he stands for criminal aliens.

Do not rest in the feeling that all will come out right. It will be right if we make it right, not otherwise.

As sure as there is a sun above us, the control of the Government will be taken from us if things are not changed.

And mark my words: Unless at this hour we have the courage and the backbone to stand up for the people of America, we shall have a communistic government, not in 25 years but in 10 years. We are now proceeding toward dictatorship, toward communism, toward czarism, and how!

In Russia there is Stalin. In Italy there is Mussolini. In Germany there is the world's greatest dictator. In the face of all that, in the face of all the unemployment, in the face of all that the patriotic men and women of this country through their legislators have done to build a great wall around the United States, to stop the influx and the inflow of millions of aliens, we in this body are asked to open up the floodgates and to break down all the immigration laws we have made. Will we do it? So far as I am concerned, I will not do it. I shall vote against the Kerr-Coolidge bill. Insofar as my colleagues in the Senate are concerned, I know not what their votes will be; but in reference to dictatorship and communism, Stalin, Hitler, and Mussolini, I desire to say that we are asked in this bill to designate a dictator in the form of Colonel MacCormack to pass upon the judgment of the judges who try the cases of aliens who violate our laws and become mandatorily deportable under our laws.

Let us see, Mr. President. The proponents of the Kerr-Coolidge bill ask us by our votes to change the present immigration law of this country. There is today a list of 2,862 aliens, not citizens, persons who have never made application to become citizens, 98 percent of whom slipped into this country, stole into this country, and remain here in violation of our law. The proponents of this bill ask us to do what? To change our immigration law. Why? So that these 2,862 aliens who are now subject to deportation may stay here amongst us; but that is not all. If the Members of the Senate will read the bill carefully, they will find that it is proposed under the bill to create an interdepartmental committee, to be composed of a representative from the Department of Labor, one from the Department of State, and one from the Department of Justice. The advocates of the bill ask us to break down our present laws and give the interdepartmental committee the power of a czar, the power of a reviewing board, the power to say whether or not an alien who has slipped into this country in violation of our laws shall now be deported, as he is now deportable, or whether he shall be allowed to stay here.

Some of the cases in the Department of Labor have been classified into classes 1, 2, 3, and 4. I have read some of them—2,862 of them. I think this body ought to assume, and not hesitate to assume, the responsibility of saying whether or not these persons have violated the law. The Immigration and Naturalization Service admit that these persons have violated the law and that under the present law they are subject to deportation; but Colonel MacCormack wishes to keep them here!

Inquiry has been made of me as to whether I would not be willing to let Colonel MacCormack pass upon these cases. Why, certainly not, because I have brought to the attention of the Senate a number of the cases, and I have a hundred more here to bring to the attention of this body, and gladly would I do it were not my time limited; but today I proclaim to the tobacco farmers of North Carolina, thousands of them, that their bill would not have gotten through the Senate on yesterday if I had not made the supreme sacrifice by agreeing to limit to 3 hours my argument on this un-American bill. I had to stand behind the home folks, however, the growers of that tobacco which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] necessarily admitted, in a colloquy with me yesterday, is the best tobacco on the face of the earth.

I will say to my good friend the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] that I am always delighted to proclaim the wonders and the greatness of my State of North Carolina, and I know he is not at all surprised, because we are bedfellows insofar as States are concerned.

Mr. President, I wish now to read a letter from a true American. I should like to read it all. I have received thousands of letters from persons all over the country, but here is one that I picked out to read. It came just this morning:

PHILLIPSBURG, N. J.

MY DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS—

The first paragraph praises me. I am going to eliminate that paragraph for fear somebody will think I am heaping upon my own shoulders praise which I do not deserve. It is my duty here to protect the interests of American citizens first, after which I shall give my sympathies to the aliens who have slipped into this country, who have violated our laws since they have been here, who have been fed by the taxpayers, and who are usurping the jobs of the American unemployed.

MY DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS—

I hope and pray that no representative of our people would ever vote "yes" to such a bill as the Kerr-Coolidge bill.

I wish to say to the Senators who honor me with their presence at this time that we are expecting to vote upon the bill in a few minutes. I have a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Immigration for further consideration.

This bill is unsuitable to all Americans, both native-born and naturalized. The Kerr-Coolidge bill takes the precious jewel of American citizenship and changes it to the status of a 10-cent-store diamond.

I have talked to many citizens in my town. These people were of all races and religions. They all agree that the Kerr-Coolidge bill would cheapen citizenship by making illegal aliens citizens of our country, and protecting from deportation those who have sneaked into the country.

That is what the honorable foreign-born citizens of this country are protesting against, the persons who have come in here legally, the foreign-born persons who have contributed to the upbuilding of America.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it seems to me the Senator is entitled to have the first paragraph of the letter read. I ask that the Senator read it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I appreciate that suggestion immensely, Mr. President; and I should be glad to read the first paragraph of the letter but for the fact that it would take too much of my time. It is in praise of me, and I should rather take the time in speaking against the passage of the bill. I wish to have the Senator from Colorado know, however, that I appreciate what he has said. I know that he is for me, and I am for him, because just a moment ago I read for his information a dispatch from his great State of Colorado, with its lovely Garden of the Gods, its Pike's Peak, its Rocky Mountain National Park, and its great civic center. I read a dispatch in regard to the Governor of the Senator's great State calling out the militia to patrol the borders of the State, and to keep from the confines of the Senator's Commonwealth aliens who are usurping the jobs to which Americans are entitled.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield only for a brief question.

Mr. DAVIS. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that after the time of the Senator from North Carolina shall have expired, he ask the Senator from North Carolina to read the letter.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I shall be glad to do so; and I also should like to read again, after my time shall have expired, the dispatch to which I have referred.

Mr. President, the writer of this letter is still speaking of the Kerr-Coolidge importation bill:

This bill is unfair to our naturalized citizens who have come by honorable means into our country. These people worked hard for their American citizenship. They do not wish—

To whom does she refer when she says "they"? She is talking about the foreign born who have come into this country legally and obtained citizenship and are contributing to the upbuilding of our country:

They do not wish to see it (the citizenship) cheapened by conferring citizenship upon people who did not earn it—

By entering the country legally.

The Reynolds-Starnes bill will solve the immigration problem.

That is what she says.

Mr. President, I should like to ask the clerk how long I have spoken this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 24 minutes remaining.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I desire to read a letter which I have received only this morning, dated Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D. C., April 17, 1936, addressed to me, and reading:

Enclosed herewith is copy of resolution adopted by the National Society, Daughters of the Founders and Patriots of America, at their thirty-eighth general court held in Washington April 15 and 16.

I hand to the Official Reporter a copy of resolution entitled "Resolution No. 10" and termed "Alien registration", copies of which have been sent to Colonel MacCormack, the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Coolidge, Representative Dickstein, and Representative Starnes, and I ask that the resolution be published in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALIEN REGISTRATION

Whereas it is reliably estimated that there are 7,000,000 aliens in the United States, at least half of them illegally; and

Whereas lack of knowledge of such aliens makes it almost impossible to deport alien criminals; and

Whereas it is in the interest of the foreign-born in this country, as well as the native citizens, to have aliens identified: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Thirty-eighth General Court of the National Society of Daughters of Founders and Patriots of America urges Congress to establish an alien-registration bureau, whose duty it shall be to register and fingerprint all aliens in the United States; be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to Col. Daniel W. MacCormack, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization; Hon. Marcus Coolidge; Hon. Robert R. Reynolds; Hon. Samuel Dickstein; Hon. Joe Starnes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, let me refer at this time, but briefly, to the patriotic organizations which are opposed to the passage of the Kerr-Coolidge bill. I wish now to read a letter from the President of the American Federation of Labor, dated April 21, 1936, signed by William Green, addressed to me. It reads:

The American Federation of Labor is opposed to section 3 of the Kerr-Coolidge bill.

That is the section which creates an interdepartmental committee and gives them the power to make the laws of our country, taking the mandatory power from this body. That is the section around which the whole bill has been builded. The elimination of section 3 would automatically destroy all of the Kerr-Coolidge bill, which consummation is desired by the American Federation of Labor.

The letter continues:

I wish to emphasize very strongly our unyielding opposition to section 3 in its present form. We hope and trust that this section of the Kerr-Coolidge bill will be decisively rejected.

Mr. President, let us see what the American Federation of Labor has to say about its immigration policy. I cite Senators respectfully to page 140 of the report of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor. Upon the folder containing it there are printed the words, "Held at Atlantic City, N. J., October 7 to 19, inclusive, 1935." The title of the paragraph to which I refer is "Immigration", starting on page 140 and running through the second paragraph on page 141. I ask that that be embodied in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Immigration: The policy of the American Federation of Labor regarding immigration legislation has been vigorously upheld. We have jealously guarded the immigration statutes which were passed at previous sessions of Congress. All attempts to weaken or modify these immigration statutes have been opposed and resisted by the officers and representatives of the American Federation of Labor. Measures dealing with immigration and immigration restriction were introduced at the recent session of Congress.

One of these measures of special importance was H. R. 8163, introduced by Congressman KERR, at the request of the Commissioner of Immigration. There were sections and features of this immigration bill which were objectionable to the American Federation of Labor. For this reason, objections to consideration of the bill were interposed by representatives of the American Federation of Labor. Conferences were held between a committee representing the executive council, the Commissioner of Immigration, and his representatives in an endeavor to redraft the objectionable sections of this bill. No agreement was reached; consequently, the American Federation of Labor has remained firm in its opposition to the enactment of this bill.

The Kerr bill has been characterized as a "deportation" bill. It is the opinion of the executive council that it is designed to liberalize the deportation sections of existing immigration statutes. The measure was given support by those we have always known to be opposed to restrictive immigration statutes.

A companion measure to the Kerr bill was introduced in the Senate by Senator COOLIDGE. The measure has simply remained on the Senate calendar without any action whatsoever. Strong opposition to the measure was manifested by a very large number of Members of the United States Senate.

In conformity with the traditional policy of the American Federation of Labor, it is the purpose of the executive council to do all that lies within its power to strengthen and perfect restricted immigration legislation rather than to modify or weaken existing statutes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I take pleasure in calling to the attention of this honorable body page 851 of the same report in reference to the Kerr-Coolidge bill, where it is stated:

Because the Kerr bill contained provisions which, in the opinion of the officers of the American Federation of Labor, weakened the immigration laws already enacted through the efforts of the American Federation of Labor, it was opposed in the form and character in which it was presented. The American Federation of Labor deserves to be commended for preventing the enactment of the Kerr bill, as proposed, into law and for zealously guarding the immigration statutes which this bill sought to modify. A subcommittee of the executive council conferred with the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, who drafted this measure, and proposed amendment which if accepted would serve as a remedy for the features of the act which were highly objectionable. It is the unalterable purpose of the American Federation of Labor to oppose the enactment of this measure until it is amended and made acceptable to the representatives of labor.

Mr. President, I bring to the attention of the Members of this honorable body a letter addressed to me under date of March 31, 1936, by Theodore G. Holcombe, executive secretary of the Immigration Restriction League, of Boston, Mass., together with remarks with regard to the position of his league upon this all-important subject. The letter is as follows:

IMMIGRATION RESTRICTION LEAGUE,
Boston, Mass., March 31, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: We understand the Kerr-Coolidge bill (S. 2969) has been reported with amendments, but from the sketchy reports that have appeared in the press it does not seem that the amendments are satisfactory.

I hope that you will be able to secure substitution of your bill for the Kerr bill when it comes up in the Senate. We need some adequate and comprehensive legislation such as that in the Reynolds-Starnes bill (S. 4011) that will really strengthen our immigration and deportation policies, while at the same time making provision for really legitimate "hardship cases", if they exist, instead of legislation that snipes at the present policies and undermines them by indirection.

The basic objection to the Kerr bill is, of course, the discretionary features. We feel very definitely that if there are any cases in which discretion appears to be justified, that discretion to deport or not to deport should be vested solely in Congress, acting through special remedial legislation. Deportation of criminals should be mandatory, with any possible exceptional cases handled by Congress in the same manner as a hardship case.

Sincerely,

THEODORE G. HOLCOMBE,
Executive Secretary.

I am also glad to bring to the attention of the Members of the Senate a letter directed to me under date of March 31, 1936, by the president of the American Coalition, in which that organization, representative of 110 different patriotic American organizations in this country, has gone on record as being against the passage of the pending bill. In this letter the president of the organization sets forth specifically the opposition of the Coalition to each and every paragraph of the Kerr-Coolidge bill. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN COALITION,
New York City, March 31, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The latest revision of the KERR-Coolidge bill is wholly unsatisfactory to the American Coalition, and I submit for your consideration the following specific comments on its most objectionable features:

Section 1, subsection 2, grants an amnesty to all alien habitual criminals in the United States who have escaped conviction for an offense involving moral turpitude in the last 5 years, although the civic authorities are aware that a multitude of such aliens continue to prey on the communities in which they live. This fact is conclusively proved by the criminal records of 235 alien habitual criminals arrested within a period of 15 days in 2 of our large cities. (See Memorandum of the Commissioner of Immigration, published 1934.) Under the provisions of this subsection of section 1 an alien habitual criminal can escape deportation for an indefinite period by having cases against him nol prossed, pleading guilty to a lesser offense, by pardon, or release on bail which can be jumped. Furthermore, if political influence fails to secure escape from deportation by any one of these methods, a suspended sentence or imposition of a fine will subject the alien to deportation only if the Commissioner of Immigration believes his expulsion to be in the public interest. By the retention of time limitations and the discretionary power to stay deportations where a sentence to imprisonment is not imposed, every possible inducement is offered for the exercise of political influence against the interests of justice by corrupt or supersentimental individuals in or out of public office. In our judgment every alien criminal who is allowed to remain in the United States is not only an ever-present menace to the community in which he lives but he also constitutes a potential contributor of untold generations of social defectives to public institutions supported by the taxpayers. May we conclude comment on this subsection by stating that the Commissioner of Immigration has on many occasions pointed out the vice of time limitations in our existing statutes, but, to our knowledge, he has never mentioned the fact that this pernicious limitation on the power to deport was embodied in the Kerr-Coolidge bill. (See H. Doc. 392, 74th Cong., 2d sess., p. 4.)

Section 1, subsection 3 still requires the Government to prove that the inducement of gain impelled an alien to aid or assist another alien to enter the United States in violation of the immigration laws. An alien habitual smuggler detected for the first time may easily frame a successful defense against deportation under this section. However, in our opinion, the worst feature of this section lies in the fact that it would obviously be impossible to secure a conviction for a conspiracy to commit an offense of this character against the United States, if Congress establishes the principle that an alien smuggler may escape deportation following conviction of the alien charged with illegal entry. The obvious purpose of this subsection is to exempt an alien relative from punishment as an accessory to the crime of illegal entry by a member of his or her family. It has never been established as a principle of law, so far as we are aware, that a citizen accessory before or after the fact may be accorded exemption from the usual penalties imposed for a conspiracy to commit a crime because the Government cannot prove that an offense was committed for gain. We hold that it is against the public interest that aliens should be placed in a favored category in respect to the commission of crime.

Section 1, subsection 4: We object to the 5-year limitation on the grounds set forth under subsection (2) of this section and the accord of complete discretionary power to the Commissioner of Immigration.

Section 2. The amendment to section 2 we do not find acceptable. We do not see any reason why an alien convicted of crime should be accorded 90 days for the mobilization of political influence whereby deportation proceedings may be stayed. It is now 30 days.

Section 3 is the blanket amnesty clause accorded aliens who violate our immigration laws. This section differs from S. 2969 chiefly in the limitation of its effect to 3 years after the date of passage of the bill. It would probably be difficult to find an illegal entrant who might not be brought within the scope of the possible exemption from deportation afforded by the provisions of this section. The adoption of a child would appear to cover any doubtful case which might arise. The American coalition holds that the theory on which this section is based tends to bring all our laws and law-enforcing agencies into contempt, here and abroad. Illegal entry is a crime. Restriction upon immigration into the United States can only be maintained if our laws are enforced with vigor, certainty, and without favor. To condone the offense of illegal entry is not merely to breach the immigration laws; it is to tear them up.

Section 4, subsections (a) and (b), in our opinion, are wholly contrary to the public interest and extremely unjust to aliens who seek to enter the United States for permanent residence, in accordance with the regular procedure set forth in the immigration statutes for the examination of aliens abroad.

Section 5. The American Coalition objects to the provisions of this section not only on the ground that it grants amnesty to an unknown number of aliens who illegally entered the United States, but also because through the legalization of their entry, it will materially expand the migration of relatives who may enter nonquota upon a grant of citizenship to the alien who illegally entered. While it is recognized that the records of entry prior to the passage of the Immigration Act of 1924 are in some cases not complete, there is no justification for a grant of this exemption in the absence of knowledge as to the number of aliens now in the United States. There is, furthermore, the objection to this section that illegal entrants since 1924 may readily, by collusion and perjury, claim admission prior to 1924 and thereby secure legalization of their status, which would otherwise be contrary to the public interest. The provisions of this section unquestionably, if adopted, will increase immigration into the United States, notwithstanding the apparent limitations set forth in section 6. Any estimate of the number of persons who would be charged to the quotas under the provisions of section 6, as a result of the legalization of entries under the provisions of this section, would be a pure guess, and as a logical sequence any estimate of the number of nonquota immigrants who would come into the United States, as a result of the legalization of the entry of illegal entrants under this section, would be wholly imaginative. The only possible justification for the adoption of the principles embodied in this section would be as a result of a comprehensive registration of all the aliens in the United States.

SUMMARY

To sum up, the American Coalition holds that the deportation bill, as reported last Saturday, is wholly in the interest of thousands of alien habitual criminals convicted of crime in the United States and also for the benefit of alien criminals who have violated our immigration laws through the commission of perjury, counterfeiting, impersonation, or who by other illegal means or devices entered the United States.

In conclusion, allow me to express the hope that the Reynolds-Starnes bill, which has been endorsed without qualification or reservation by the American Coalition, may be substituted for the bill reported out by the Immigration Committee of the Senate.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN B. TREVOR.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Now, Mr. President, I desire to call attention to a letter written by Hon. Ray Murphy, national commander of the American Legion. This letter is dated March 30, 1936, and reads:

In re Kerr-Coolidge bill.

MY DEAR SENATOR: On March 16, 1936, I addressed a letter to you setting forth the objections of the American Legion to the Kerr-Coolidge bill. I have had called to my attention S. 2969, which, it is my understanding, will be brought before the Senate for its consideration on Wednesday, April 1.

This proposed substitute is in practically the same language as the original Kerr-Coolidge bill and, in my judgment, does not strengthen it in any particular whatsoever so far as the alien problem is concerned.

Ray Murphy, the national commander of the American Legion, continues:

Section 3—

The one objected to by the American Federation of Labor—is the clause which accords aliens blanket amnesty who violate our immigration laws, and is practically the same as that contained in the original bill except that its effect is limited to 3 years after the date of passage. Such a provision (as set out in section 3) could be easily extended by Congress indefinitely.

Listen to this:

There is, however, before the Senate for its consideration the Reynolds-Starnes bill (S. 4011), which carries out in detail the recommendations of the American Legion upon this very subject. I hope, therefore, Senator, that you will oppose vigorously the proposed amendment in the nature of a substitute; and that the Senate will not pass the Kerr-Coolidge bill or this substitute for it, but that the Senate will take up for consideration and enact into law the Reynolds-Starnes bill.

Mr. President, I have here also an insert which I occasioned to be put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD some days ago, showing that the American Legion in their annual convention went on record as recommending:

1. Halting all immigration for 10 years.

My bill calls for cutting it down from 153,000 annually to 15,000.

2. Immediate deportation of all alien-born persons who are members of any society, group, or organization that proposes to overthrow the Government by force or violence.

3. Immediate deportation of all destitute aliens.

4. Immediate deportation of all aliens who have entered this country illegally.

The American Legion demands that aliens who are in this country illegally, and who are usurping the jobs of poor, unemployed American citizens, be deported. But what do we find? We find Colonel MacCormack, of the Immigration Department of this Government, throwing his fist in the face of the thousands of the sons of America who saved our country for Christianity and democracy, saying, "No; we will not listen to you. What have you done for this country? What have you to do for this country?"

I say it is an insult by Colonel MacCormack to the American Legion, I say it is an insult by Colonel MacCormack to the Veterans of Foreign Wars, to the Disabled Veterans of the World War, an insult to the thousands of mothers constituting the list of delegates to the Daughters of the American Revolution who are assembled in this city today, an insult to American motherhood, an insult to American womanhood, an insult to every soldier who defended his flag, an insult to the 12,625,000 people who are out of employment in this country today.

I proceed with the reading:

5. Compulsory fingerprinting of all persons residing in the United States.

My bill calls for compulsory fingerprinting of all in the United States.

I next bring to the attention of the Senate a letter directed to me by the national secretary of the Sons and Daughters of Liberty, of Philadelphia, Pa., together with a resolution adopted by that order in opposition to the passage of the Kerr-Coolidge bill. I ask that the letter and resolution be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter and resolution are as follows:

NATIONAL COUNCIL, SONS AND DAUGHTERS OF LIBERTY,
Philadelphia, Pa., March 14, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As national secretary of the National Council, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, I desire to say to you that our organization of 85,000 Americans desire to go on record as being opposed to the Kerr-Coolidge bill in every particular.

We as an organization believe that this bill makes it easier for aliens to come into this country and remain. It further exempts deportation of many aliens that should be deported.

At our last national council session, held September 1935, they adopted the enclosed resolution. No doubt you, as one of our United States Senators, received a copy of it before, but we take pleasure in enclosing another copy.

Wishing you success in your fight to keep America a fit place for Americans to live, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

MATTHEW KENNEY,
National Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., January 20, 1936.

Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The National Council, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, in annual session, adopted the following resolution, and instructed the writer, as national secretary, to send copy to you:

Resolution

Whereas the session of Congress which recently closed failed to take any action upon the several important bills presented which had for their object the enactment of laws providing for more stringent enforcement regarding restriction of immigration and the deportation of aliens, many of whom, although they have been living here for years, have never made any effort to become citizens by adoption, are today being supported by our taxpayers, while many native-born American men and women are in want through such a condition; and

Whereas much of this laxity has been caused through the seemingly indifference of Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins and her associates, whose records pertaining to enforcement of the present deportation laws show a decrease of more than 40 percent of these undesirable aliens being deported as compared with the record of her predecessor, and even at this present time she is harboring, in defiance of the laws, several thousand of these deportable aliens: Therefore be it

Resolved, The National Council, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, representing a membership of upward of 100,000, located in 23 States, in annual session at Atlantic City, N. J., this 11th day of September 1935, wish to protest against this persistent violation of the laws now in force for the protection of the land of our birth by Secretary Perkins and assistants, and that steps be taken at the session of next Congress to enact laws which will remedy conditions now existing and protect our country from the many evils now threatening our liberties and our American ideals and institutions; and be it further

Resolved, That the national secretary send to President Roosevelt a certified copy of this resolution and a copy given to the press, and next January 1936 a copy mailed to every Member of the United States Senate and House of Representatives at Washington, D. C.

Yours very truly,

MATTHEW KENNEY,
National Secretary.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I now bring to the attention of the Senate a letter written by the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, the Daughters of the Patriots of 1776, the letter being dated March 16, 1936, and signed by Mrs. Paul Scharf, committee secretary. I ask that the letter, which is in opposition to the Kerr-Coolidge bill, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

NATIONAL SOCIETY, DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION,
March 16, 1936.

Senator REYNOLDS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: The president general has referred to this committee your request for information regarding our objections to the Kerr-Coolidge bill.

The expressed purposes, to deport criminals not now deportable and to provide leniency for certain hardship cases, have a strong appeal. We, however, are convinced that the passage of this bill would put a premium on illegal entry into the United States to the disadvantage of the law-abiding alien awaiting his turn on the quota of his country, that it would substitute rule by political appointees for law and thereby further break down respect for law.

We want a law that persons know is going to be enforced. Hardship cases involving pure technicalities should be brought by the Bureau of Immigration to the Congress of the United States for special legislation.

We object to section 3 in its entirety because of its provision for discretionary power in the hands of three appointees to set aside the law of the land. It is time for persons to know that the law is going to be enforced in whatever field it pertains.

That phase of this bill which is called a strengthening of the law by permitting the deportation of persons not now deportable is also discretionary and so is not a strengthener at all. In its present form this bill's only promise for the future is confusion, wire pulling, and further disrespect for law. Why should public officials be subjected to this performance? Let's have a law that is law.

It would appear that this bill might be amended so as to remove its discretionary phase, make provision for changing the status of certain nonquota aliens while extending the present law to include certain aliens not now deportable.

The National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution has for a period of years endorsed legislation to restrict quotas to 10 percent of those provided by the present law (only temporarily held to this figure by Executive order for the period of the depression), to provide extension of restriction to the countries of the Western Hemisphere and to provide registration of aliens.

We have sent you a copy of our National Defense News for January and expect to have a representative at the hearing of the Starnes bill before the House committee on Wednesday.

Sincerely yours,

MADELEINE SCHARF,
(Mrs. Paul Scharf),
Committee Secretary.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I now bring to the attention of this honorable body a letter, dated March 12, 1936, directed to me by Col. George E. Ijams, commander in chief of Military Order of the World War. That order is in opposition to the Kerr-Coolidge bill, and says it is a vicious bill. In connection with the letter, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point, I also ask that several resolutions be printed, and also a second letter from Colonel Ijams, dated April 1, 1936, and resolutions of the Military Order of the World War dealing with aliens and resident identification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters and resolutions are as follows:

MILITARY ORDER OF THE WORLD WAR,
Washington, D. C., March 12, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: The Military Order of the World War is unalterably opposed to the Kerr-Coolidge bill, as it is in direct conflict with the resolutions adopted on this very specific subject by national conventions of our order over a period of years. Our legislative committee has so expressed these views at a hearing, not only this year but in previous years, before congressional committees. We have urged that our representatives in Congress defeat such measures when they come before them for consideration and vote.

We repeat now what we have previously testified, namely, that we feel that the whole basis of immigration restriction, which we have been so diligently fighting for these many years, either stands or falls upon the action on the Kerr-Coolidge bill. We feel that if the Kerr bill is passed deportation laws are nullified. We feel that we should either have a restrictive law, or, if we do not mean what we say by such laws, then we should relegate them to discretionary powers, which is really nullification, and invites favoritism, political influence, lobbyism, intrigue as a basis of our national immigration policy rather than a law of the land.

We are taking the liberty of enclosing herewith resolutions adopted at our last two annual national conventions on this particular subject. You will note that they specificaly urge the following:

(1) Restrict immigration by 90 percent.

(2) Registration and finger-printing of immigrants and resident aliens.

(3) Immediate deportation of those illegally in this country and those convicted of crime.

(4) Immediate survey of relief rolls to ascertain the above information.

(5) There is no compromise by discretionary powers or otherwise.

Very sincerely yours,

GEORGE E. IJAMS,
Commander in Chief.

1934 CONVENTION

ALIEN ACTIVITIES

Be it resolved, That the Military Order of the World War in fourteenth annual convention assembled in Miami, Fla., October 14–17, 1934, urge the following:

1. Restrictive immigration policy reducing our quota by 90 percent and to include in quotas all countries whose citizens are now permitted to acquire citizenship in the United States.

2. Registration, finger-printing, and other physical identification of all immigrants and resident aliens.

3. Early naturalization of those intending to make the United States their domicile for any appreciable time, but that no one be naturalized who refuses to take the oath of allegiance and service to the United States of America in time of emergency and without reservation.

4. Immediate deportation of all aliens illegally in this country and also any who have been found guilty of seditious or riotous propaganda or who have been convicted of any crime.

5. Exclusion and expulsion from the United States of America of all alien Communists. Be it further

6. Resolved, That Congress be urged to pass an act making the Communist Party or any other party, organization, or association advocating the overthrow of the United States Government by force and violence, or any other unconstitutional means, a criminal organization and provide adequate penalties for those convicted of belonging to any such organization, or who individually advocate such activities; be it further

Resolved, by the Military Order of the World War in fourteenth annual convention assembled at Miami, Fla., October 14–17, 1934, That this organization will lend its active support toward the enactment of legislation which will authorize the Department of Justice to investigate revolutionary propaganda and communistic activity in the United States.

DEPORTATION OF ILLEGALLY ENTERED ALIENS

Whereas the Government of the United States of America is spending large sums of money to provide employment, to care for transients, and for other purposes; and

Whereas the money expended therefor must be made available through taxation; and

Whereas it is reliably reported that there are vast numbers of aliens in our country who have had no legal right of entry into the United States; and

Whereas many of these illegally entered aliens are receiving aid and assistance from the Federal Government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, by the Military Order of the World War in national convention assembled in Miami, Fla., October 14–17, 1934, inclusive, That it urges the Federal Government to immediately cause a survey to be made of all persons receiving aid or assistance through public funds and to ascertain whether all of these persons are citizens of the United States of America; and be it further

Resolved, That we urge all those found to be illegally entered aliens be immediately deprived of aid or assistance from public funds and that they be deported at once, thus relieving the taxpayers of the United States of the necessity for supporting these aliens.

We further urge that a similar survey be made in the cases of all persons charged with crimes and misdemeanors and that any such persons found to be illegally in this country be immediately deported.

1935 CONVENTION

RESIDENT IDENTIFICATION

Whereas all residents of the United States, native born or naturalized, are obliged to register before voting: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it shall be obligatory for all aliens to so record themselves, and such identification to include fingerprinting and other necessary physical identifications; be it

Resolved, by the Military Order of the World War, in national convention assembled at Atlantic City, N. J., September 15 to 18, 1935, That it demands a carrying out of the purport of this resolution.

ALIENS

Be it resolved by the Military Order of the World War in fifteenth annual convention assembled at Atlantic City, N. J., September 15 to 18, 1935, That it stands firmly for the following objectives:

1. Deportation of aliens found guilty of preaching, urging, or otherwise abetting the overthrow of the United States Government by force or otherwise.

2. Early naturalization of those intending to make the United States a domicile for any appreciable time.

3. Immediate deportation of all aliens illegally in this country and any aliens who have been found guilty of seditious or riotous propaganda or who have been convicted of any crime, and the expulsion and exclusion from the United States of all alien Communists or those whose questionable activities or tendencies are not in accord with our constitutional background, and a policy that will include all Americans in employment to the exclusion of others.

MILITARY ORDER OF THE WORLD WAR,
Washington, D. C., April 1, 1936.

Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: I hasten to respond to your letter of March 31 and to say that the King amendment, known as S. 2969, submitted in the nature of a substitute to the Kerr-Coolidge bill, has not changed the attitude of the Military Order of the World War toward the entire proposition. May we take the liberty of referring to you the two resolutions adopted at our last national convention, which calls for the immediate deportation of all aliens from this country.

Very sincerely yours,

GEORGE E. IJAMS,
Commander in Chief.

ALIENS

Be it resolved by the Military Order of the World War in fifteenth annual convention assembled at Atlantic City, N. J., September 15 to 18, 1935, that it stands firmly for the following objectives:

1. Deportation of aliens found guilty of preaching, urging, or otherwise abetting the overthrow of the United States Government by force or otherwise.

2. Early naturalization of those intending to make the United States a domicile for any appreciable time.

3. Immediate deportation of all aliens illegally in this country and any aliens who have been found guilty of seditious or riotous propaganda or who have been convicted of any crime, and the expulsion and exclusion from the United States of all alien Communists or those whose questionable activities or tendencies are not in accord with our constitutional background, and a policy that will include all Americans in employment to the exclusion of others.

RESIDENT IDENTIFICATION

Whereas all residents of the United States, native born or naturalized, are obliged to register before voting: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it shall be obligatory for all aliens to so record themselves; and such identification to include fingerprinting and other necessary physical identifications; be it

Resolved, by the Military Order of the World War in national convention assembled at Atlantic City, N. J., September 15 to 18, 1935, That it demands a carrying out of the purport of this resolution.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I further bring to the attention of the Senate a letter signed by Edwin S. Bettelheim, Jr., legislative chairman, Military Order of Foreign Wars of the United States, in which he states that he is in accord with everything in the Reynolds-Starnes bill and is in opposition to everything in the Kerr-Coolidge bill. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

MILITARY ORDER OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES, NATIONAL COMMANDERY,
March 17, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am pleased to advise you that the national commandery and all local commanderies throughout the United States are heartily in favor of any bill which will include any or all of the following mandates of our order:

1. Registration of all aliens and immigrants, including fingerprinting and photographing and other recording.
2. Deportation of all aliens illegally in this country.
3. Deportation of all aliens convicted of crime or felony.
4. Reduction of immigration quotas.
5. Deportation of indigent aliens until such time as our own citizens are in employment and off relief rolls.
6. Deportation of those aliens who seek or advocate the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence.

EDWIN S. BETTELHEIM, JR.,
Legislative Chairman.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I now ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point a resolution adopted unanimously by the Thirty-sixth Annual State Conference of the Daughters of the American Revolution of the State of Michigan. Between twenty and thirty thousand aliens cross the border annually into the State of Michigan, which is so ably represented by its two distinguished Senators [Mr. COUZENS and Mr. VANDENBERG], for whom I have the greatest affection by reason of their ability and their interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of the country. I ask that this resolution be printed in the RECORD at this point to show where the Daughters of the American Revolution of the State of Michigan stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolution passed unanimously by the Thirty-sixth Annual State Conference of the Daughters of the American Revolution of the State of Michigan

Whereas the Kerr-Coolidge bill now before the United States Congress permits the naturalization after 10 years of aliens who have entered the country illegally and places the power of deportation in the hands of one person or commission instead of in Congress; and

Whereas it is difficult to apprehend and convict alien criminals without knowledge of their movements and proof of their identity; and

Whereas the Starnes-Reynolds bill will protect the rights of citizens of the United States by restricting immigration and for providing penalties for law violations: Therefore

1. Resolved, That the Michigan Daughters of the American Revolution give their support to the Starnes-Reynolds bill and oppose the Kerr-Coolidge bill; and

2. Resolved, That this society favor the registration and fingerprinting of all aliens now in the United States and of any who enter in the future.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from B. Porter, acting secretary of the Maryland State Society, Daughters of Founders and Patriots of America, in which they go on record as supporting the Reynolds-Starnes bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

MARYLAND STATE SOCIETY,
DAUGHTERS OF FOUNDERS AND PATRIOTS OF AMERICA,
March 13, 1936.

Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The Maryland State Society, Daughters of Founders and Patriots of America, wishes to go on record as endorsing in every particular the Reynolds-Starnes immigration restriction, alien deportation, and registration bills, S. 4011 and H. R. 11172.

Sincerely,

B. PORTER,
Acting Secretary, Greenway Apartments, Baltimore, Md.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have here a letter directed to me by the New York chapter of Colonial Order of the Acorn, signed by C. Wickliffe Throckmorton, chancelor, New York City, dated March 16, 1936, in which that order places itself in opposition to the passage of the Kerr-Coolidge bill. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

NEW YORK CHAPTER OF COLONIAL ORDER OF THE ACORN,
New York City, N. Y., March 16, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senate,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: Mr. John B. Trevor, president of the American Coalition, has advised me under date of the 14th instant that you were anxious to hear from this order an expression of its views on the proposed Kerr-Coolidge bill; as chancelor of the New York Chapter of the Colonial Order of the Acorn it gives me pleasure to have the opportunity to express the objections of this order to this most objectionable bill:

1. It grants discretionary power to a proposed interdepartmental committee, to allow convicted alien criminals of the most dangerous classes to remain in the United States for purely sentimental reasons. We have had enough of this under Miss Perkins, who has for 3 years disregarded the mandatory laws directing the deportation of certain aliens. It should be stopped.

2. It grants to this committee power to allow an alien who is in the United States in violation of the law to escape deportation, if he has a relative, even by marriage or adoption, in this country. In fact, the bill aids the importation of aliens rather than the deportation. We have far too many aliens in this country already without aiding them to enter on flimsy excuses.

3. It grants broad discretionary power to the Commissioner of Immigration to permit an alien, admitted for a temporary stay, to remain in the country permanently, thus avoiding the usual strict examination required abroad, by law, for aliens seeking to enter the United States for permanent residence.

4. In my opinion the Kerr-Coolidge bill nullifies the penal provisions of the present law which was drafted to protect our country from an influx of aliens.

5. In general we are opposed to the Kerr-Coolidge bill because it is supported by Secretary Perkins, who by her actions has shown her desire to retain undesirable aliens in this country, and by her admission of Emma Goldman, Henri Barbusse, and other well-known Communists to lecture throughout the United States and to spread the doctrine of communism freely among our citizens, has plainly indicated her radical opinions.

In closing I want to again assure you that the membership of the Colonial Order of the Acorn is unanimously against the Kerr-Coolidge bill.

Yours sincerely,

C. WICKLIFFE THROCKMORTON,
Chancelor.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I ask to have printed in the RECORD two letters from the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, signed by the commander in chief, William Innes Forbes, in which is stated the support of that organization for the Reynolds-Starnes bill and opposition to the Kerr-Coolidge bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

MILITARY ORDER OF THE LOYAL LEGION
OF THE UNITED STATES.
COMMANDERY IN CHIEF,
Philadelphia, March 23, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Consideration has been given by this order to the Reynolds-Starnes deportation bill, S. 4011, which is at this time before the Congress of the United States for its consideration and action.

The provisions of this bill bearing upon the question of emigration and deportation have, in our opinion, long been needed.

The bill fills in many inadequacies of the present law, and in periods such as the world is facing today we believe that it is highly essential that our Government have a complete and comprehensive check-up available concerning citizens of other countries, not only of those within our borders at the present time but also of those who may come in in the future.

We urge that you use your best efforts as our representative to lend your active support in having this proposed bill become a law of the land.

Respectfully submitted.

WM. INNES FORBES,
Commander in Chief.

MILITARY ORDER OF THE LOYAL LEGION
OF THE UNITED STATES,
COMMANDERY OF THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Philadelphia, March 23, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, Commandery of the State of Pennsylvania, has given its careful consideration to the Kerr-Coolidge bill, H. R. 8163 and S. 2969, which interests itself in the subject of immigration and deportation. This bill, we understand, is before the Congress of the United States at the present time.

1. It is the consensus of this organization that this bill, instead of being of ultimate benefit to the welfare of the citizens of the United States, permits many exceptions to the inadequate penal provisions of the present law, which was drafted to protect our country from the influx of aliens.

2. It grants broad discretionary power to an appointive interdepartmental committee, thus this committee may, in its discretion, greatly nullify all laws governing immigration and deportation.

3. It is our opinion that the Kerr-Coolidge bill is inadequate. Strictly speaking, it would not be a law governing immigration and deportation, but a law which would create an appointive committee who would become a law unto themselves insofar as the individual question of immigration and deportation is concerned. It would permit an undesirable increase of aliens.

For the above reasons, we wish to go on record as requesting that you use your good offices to prevent this proposed legislation from becoming a law.

Respectfully submitted.

WM. INNES FORBES, Commander.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have here a letter from the National Association of Letters Carriers, Asheville, N. C., dated March 31, 1936, in which they take their stand in support of the Reynolds-Starnes bill. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS,
BRANCH NO. 248,
Asheville, N. C., March 31, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: We the members of the Asheville Branch, No. 248, National Association of Letter Carriers, having a membership of 46 and 100 percent organized, wish to express to you our sincere appreciation and commend you upon your stand concerning foreign immigration.

We believe this bit of legislation to be a corrective of many evils and of great importance to the American laboring public. It should have the undivided support of every true American citizen.

Please keep up the good work, for we are for you 100 percent.

Very sincerely yours,

COMMITTEE ON LEGISLATION,
CHAS. M. GARDNER, Chairman,
JOHN A. REEVES, Committeeman,
HARLIE FOSTER, Committeeman.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Letter carriers, railway engineers, conductors, firemen, brakemen, the Daughters of Patriots, the soldiers, every branch of the military in America, have gone on record as being opposed to the Kerr-Coolidge bill and in favor of the Reynolds-Starnes bill.

I bring to the attention of the Senate a letter dated April 1, 1936, from W. C. Hushing, national legislative representative, American Federation of Labor, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., April 1, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Through systematic misrepresentation the Coolidge bill, S. 2969, has been placed before the people of the country as a deportation bill. The fact is that the idea behind the measure is to permit immigrants who have or will enter the country illegally to remain here. It puts a premium on illegal entry and will bar immigrants who are willing to observe the laws by securing visas abroad and coming here through legal channels.

While the advocates of the bill contend that its purpose is to permit the remaining in this country of 2,862 immigrants who entered the country illegally, the fact is it will be a permanent law and give to an interdepartmental committee and the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization the power to permit practically every illegal entrant to remain in the country or who enters at any time in the future. It also permits the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization to approve or disapprove recommendations of judges of courts regarding deportations of alien criminals. It is designated a deportation bill in order to hide its real purpose and so secure support it does not deserve.

The American Federation of Labor is very much opposed to section 3, which is the heart of the measure, and many conferences were held without avail with officials of the Labor Department in an endeavor to reach agreement on this and other features of the bill. In fact, to strike out section 3 would destroy the real purpose behind the measure. The discretionary features of the bill are very objectionable.

For complete objections of the American Federation of Labor against this bill and preceding bills of a similar nature in the House and Senate, you are respectfully referred to my testimony on pages 126 and 123 of the hearings on H. R. 9518, 9364, 9365, 9366, and 9367, which were held before the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on May 8, 9, and 10, 1934; also to my testimony on page 114 before the same committee on H. R. 6795 on April 9, 10, and 11, 1934; also to my testimony on page 6 before the Senate Immigration Committee on S. 2969, February 24, 1936, and my testimony on March 3 before the same committee on the same bill on page 149 of the hearings.

The objections mentioned above lie against the substitute measure offered by Senator KING on March 30.

Sincerely yours,

W. C. HUSHING,
National Legislative Representative,
American Federation of Labor.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in connection with the letter from Mr. Hushing, I also ask to have printed another letter dated April 2, 1936, from W. C. Roberts and S. P. Meadows.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 2, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT REYNOLDS,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: The undersigned, with Mr. W. C. Hushing, constitute the legislative committee of the American Federation of Labor.

We wish you to know that we concur fully in the letter he wrote you April 1, 1936, objecting to the Coolidge bill, S. 2969.

W. C. ROBERTS.
S. P. MEADOWS.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I also ask that a letter from the Flushing Women's Republican Club be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

The undersigned hereby certifies that she is chairman of legislation of the Flushing Women's Republican Club and that the following is a true and correct copy of a certain resolution of the Flushing Women's Republican Club duly adopted in accordance with the bylaws and recorded in the minutes of a meeting of said Flushing Women's Republican Club held on the 11th day of March 1936 and not subsequently rescinded or modified: Be it

Resolved, That we unanimously endorse the Reynolds-Starnes immigration restriction and alien deportation regulation bill, S. 4011.

In witness whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name this 11th day of March 1936.

LAVINIA F. GUNDREY,
Chairman of Legislation.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I also ask that a letter from M. A. Harlan, national commander of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, be printed in the RECORD at this point. That organization states its opposition to the Kerr-Coolidge bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR,
Washington, D. C., April 6, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: The Disabled American Veterans is determinedly in favor of the deportation of alien criminals from this country. When these foreigners sought haven on our shores, it was with the distinct understanding that they would strive to become worthy citizens. Failing in this agreement, they forfeit any right to our protection.

At any time the presence of these thousands of undesirables would be serious enough, but to have them in this country either living on crime or on the relief rolls or occupying jobs to which real Americans are entitled presents a situation that Congress should not hesitate to meet in the most aggressive manner possible.

Those really seeking to remedy this situation by affirmative action should have no hesitance in having enacted a law so unequivocal as to meet the crisis.

It is, therefore, for that reason that I am again writing you to put the D. A. V. squarely on record behind your bill for mandatory deportation rather than leaving deportation to the decision of some subordinate committee handling the individual case.

With a sincere hope that you will be successful in your present fight, I have the honor to be,

Most respectfully,

M. A. HARLAN,
National Commander.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I bring to the attention of the Senate a telegram from several organizations in Ohio endorsing the Starnes-Reynolds bill, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point:

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, March 30, 1936.

Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS:

State Council, Ohio, Junior Order United American Mechanics; National Council, Daughters of America; State Council, Ohio, Daughters of America, endorse the Starnes-Reynolds bill and request it be given favorable consideration promptly.

John J. Weitzel, chairman, R. F. Fox, John Rolf, State Legislative Committee of Ohio Junior Order United American Mechanics; Sallie W. Lake, Virginia Stuckey, National Legislative Committee, Daughters of America; Catherine Cypher, Mary Sanson, State Legislative Committee of Ohio Daughters of America.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have here a letter and two telegrams, as well as a memorandum, from the National Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, Philadelphia, Pa., an organization with a membership of 500,000, stating its vigorous opposition to the Kerr-Coolidge bill. That organization is vigorously opposed to every single section in the Kerr-Coolidge bill which would open up the floodgates for immigrants to come into this country or to slip across our borders and be permitted to remain here. I ask that the letter and telegrams be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams and letters are printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., March 31, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senator:

Please vote against the modified Kerr-Coolidge bill. It is still unsatisfactory. The Junior Order is for the Reynolds-Starnes bill.

NATIONAL BOARD OF OFFICERS,
JUNIOR ORDER UNITED AMERICAN MECHANICS,

PHILADELPHIA, PA., April 1, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senate:

Your letter received this morning. Substitute bill, S. 2969, too liberal in conferring power on Commissioner General of Immigration to stay deportation in subsections 2 and 4 of section 1 on grounds of public interest. Section 3 entirely too liberal in treatment of illegally entered aliens. We oppose section 4, and especially subsection 3 thereof. Section 5 does not go far enough. Compulsory registration of all aliens in the United States should be made as provided in Starnes-Reynolds bill. We oppose creation of interdepartmental committee and the delegation of so much power to the same. Please use your best efforts to defeat the original or the amended substitute, S. 2969.

JUNIOR ORDER UNITED AMERICAN MECHANICS,

NATIONAL COUNCIL,
JUNIOR ORDER UNITED AMERICAN MECHANICS,
Philadelphia, April 2, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: The Junior Order United American Mechanics, a patriotic, fraternal, beneficial society, with headquarters in the city of Philadelphia, and organized councils or lodges in 42 States of the Union, with a combined and affiliated membership of approximately a half million native-born citizens, respectfully submits the following views on S. 2969, as amended and substituted, and submitted to the Senate by Senator KING, on behalf of the Senate Committee on Immigration:

SECTION 1

Section 1, subsection 2 should be amended by striking out all of the paragraph following the word "turpitude" in line 3 of said subsection. The amended subsection 2 will then read as follows:

(2) "has been convicted in the United States within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings against him of a crime involving moral turpitude."

We submit that this change should be made for two reasons:

1. The remainder of this subsection 2 places a premium to an alien convicted of crime involving moral turpitude, whose sentence of imprisonment was arrested.

2. It leaves the deportation of such a convicted alien subject to the findings of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization and then such deportation must, in the judgment of the Commissioner General, be in the public interest.

We do not believe it to be sound administrative law to permit an executive officer, such as the Commissioner General of Immigration and Naturalization to stay deportation of an alien convicted of crime involving moral turpitude, regardless of whether the sentence was imposed or not. It is his duty to enforce the law, and it seems to us that the authority to be conferred by this section should be eliminated.

Aliens convicted of such crimes should be deported without authority reposing in any executive officer to set the conviction aside, on the grounds of public interest.

We submit that subsection 3 of section 1 of the substituted bill is faulty in its provisions and should be amended as follows:

(3) "knowingly and for gain, at any time, either before or after the passage of this act, encouraged, induced, assisted, or aided anyone to enter the United States in violation of law."

We do not understand why an alien who is encouraging another alien to violate the law should be allowed or permitted to commit more than one deportable offense before being deported. The second part of this subsection 3 certainly extends to an alien, aiding or abetting another person to enter the United States, in violation of law, opportunity to commit more than one offense after the date of the passage of the act. In our judgment an alien who assists another to come into this country and to break the laws should be immediately deported, and there should be no clemency whatever extended after the passage of the act. We submit that the above amendment will make subsection 3 really worth while.

We object to subsection 4 of section 1, and especially the latter part thereof, in which the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization is given discretion, so far as public interest is concerned. The natural inference is that if the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization should find that the deportation is not in the public interest, he could then stay or stop the same. This particular part of section 4 is vague and it certainly vests in the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization an implied authority which could easily be abused. We suggest that all after the word "imprisonment" in the fifth line of subsection 4 be eliminated.

We do not like that part of section 2 which immunizes pardoned aliens who have been convicted of crime. We think this is too broad. If it should be found that an alien was pardoned because of false imprisonment or for other good causes we should not object, but as it now stands all pardoned aliens who were convicted of crime would be permitted to remain in this country. We think this is entirely too broad.

We submit that section 2 is faulty, wherein it requires the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization to approve the recommendation of a judge of a court who has recommended clemency for a convicted alien. It seems a strange procedure that the head of a bureau, such as that of the Immigration and Naturalization, should be permitted to pass judgment on the recommendations of courts of justice for leniency. The very least authority that should be authorized to pass upon such recommendation of the courts should be the head of the department, but certainly not a bureau officer.

We do not particularly like that part of section 2 which requires that an alien sentenced to imprisonment shall not be deported until he has served out his term. We suggest a change in this particular feature of the bill on the ground of relief to our American taxpayers. The taxpayers of the Nation are already burdened with many aliens who are in confinement in our prisons and penitentiaries for violation of the laws of this Nation.

The President made the right kind of gesture not long ago when he called out from the prisons of the Nations something like 156 convicted aliens and ordered their speedy deportation. We submit that the quicker an alien who has violated the laws of this country can be sent out the better, and if he has to forego serving term in jail or in penitentiary it will be in the interest of the taxpayers to deport him rather than to keep him here and feed him through his term of penal servitude.

Power is conferred in section 3 upon the interdepartmental committee to permit any alien to remain in the United States who entered the United States prior to the date of the enactment of this act, and is found subject to deportation, with certain deportable exceptions, under acts of Congress cited, if the alien is of good, moral character and has not been convicted of crime involving moral turpitude. Among the specific requirements enumerated in this section are:

1. That the alien must have lived in the United States for at least 10 years.

2. Must have lived in the United States 1 year, and has living in the United States, parent, spouse, legally recognized child, or, if minor, a brother or sister who has been lawfully admitted for permanent residence or is a citizen of United States.

We are opposed to the conferring of any such power in the interdepartmental committee, because we believe it will be largely administered by the Department of Labor, and we are fearful of its abuse. Then, again, we are opposed to any alien being permitted to remain in the United States indefinitely, and especially if he has lived here 10 years and has not sought American citizenship. It is high time for such one to be deported on the ground of lack of interest or laches in taking out his papers and becoming an American citizen.

We submit that it is people like this who are taking jobs of our own Americans that belong to our own unemployed citizens. We know of no other nation on the face of the earth which would permit or allow an alien to remain unmolested for a period of 10 years without giving some account of themselves or making some show or taking some steps toward citizenship. We insist that a law should be drafted which will hereafter require permanent aliens who are here to apply for citizenship within the first 3 or 5 years of their residence in the United States.

We are opposed to this relative section, as written, because we believe it is being made an excuse for many unauthorized people to come into the United States and to remain here, thus to avoid being deported. We like the relative provision of the Reynolds-Starnes bill, but we insist that it would be conferring too much power upon the interdepartmental committee, and that this relative proposition would continue to fill our country with people who are seeking lucrative jobs rather than citizenship.

Section 3 limits the authority of the interdepartmental committee to 3 years from the passage of this substituted act. We would hail this provision with pleasure if we thought it advisable to create an interdepartmental committee. As it is, we are opposed to the interdepartmental committee because we feel it would be unwise to confer discretionary power upon such a committee to set aside sentences of courts and to pass upon cases which would practically involve the abrogation or setting aside of acts of Congress. We believe that such an executive administration would not be conducive to the public interest or the public welfare.

Section 3 (b) provides for permanent residence of any alien who is eligible to citizenship, and for whom there is no record of admission, and who has been allowed to remain in the United States by the interdepartmental committee, that he shall be recorded as admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the order permitting him to remain. Our views on this particular section are set forth hereinbefore. Instead of devising ways and means, which this act manifestly does, by which aliens may escape the plain provision of the immigration laws as to citizenship, we insist that it would be much better if the provisions of the Reynolds-Starnes bill could be enacted into law and applied in such cases as this. Let such an alien comply with the law as to citizenship and not to delegate the authority to an interdepartmental committee.

We are opposed to the provisions of section 4, because it is not in keeping with the present immigration-quota laws. There is no good reason why a person admitted in a nonquota status should be given the preference. We contend that the present immigration laws are ample in their provision to take care of such cases, and there is no need for modification of the law by which immigration will be increased. We consider that section 4 is not necessary, and it is designed in its provisions and implications to benefit certain classes who may or may not otherwise ever be admitted to the United States.

We object to the provisions of subsections 1 and 3 of section 4, and we are certainly opposed to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization changing the status of applicants without requiring the alien to obtain an immigration visa. We make these observations as to this particular subsection 3, for the reason that it is plainly evident that this section will be made an excuse for the admission of many people, under the discretion of the Commissioner, who could not otherwise enter the United States under the present laws. No good reason or excuse has been given as to why these certain classes should be allowed or permitted easy access into the United States, unless it be that the immigration authorities are interested in seeing how many aliens they can bring into the United States with just as little trouble to the alien as possible. It seems to us there should be some premium on citizenship to aliens, but, unfortunately, such is not the case, otherwise we would not have so many unnaturalized aliens in America today.

With reference to section 5, dealing with the registry of aliens at ports of entry, as required by existing statutes, we are opposed to the provisions in which it is proposed to extend registry to any eligible alien to citizenship where there is no record of admission for permanent residence, provided he entered the United States before July 1, 1924, and has resided here continuously since such entry, is a person of good moral character, and is not subject to deportation.

We submit that this is another attempt to railroad aliens into citizenship, and to give them privileges and immunities to which they are not entitled. The whole tenor of this section is to make it easy for an alien to cover up the defects of his admission. In our observations on this, we go back to the fundamental thought of the conflict of aliens of this class with our own American workingmen. It is obvious that aliens of this class are either working or else they are on relief. If they have been in this country for a period of 12 years, and have not attempted to become citizens, it is high time for a limit to be placed upon them and for them to leave the country. The passage of this act legalizes their entry, no matter how they came.

We do not oppose the administrative provisions carried in section 6, if this substituted act is to become a law. We do, however, object to the wholesale allowance of aliens remaining in the United States under section 3, or for aliens to be given the status of permanent residence, under section 4, or those who are registered, under section 5; we are also fearful of subsection 2 of section 6, where the Secretary of Labor is called upon to report at the end of the fiscal year, aliens who entered the United States on or after June 1, 1921, who were not charged to any quota at the time of their last entry. As we understand it, there were quota regulations in effect in June 1921, as the Burnett immigration law was passed in 1917. If these aliens were not put to any quota and came from quota countries, then there is some violation of the law. Of course, this would not apply to nonquota resident aliens of the Western Hemisphere.

SECTIONS 7, 8, AND 9

As to payments under section 7 and the authority contained in section 8 for supervisory officers and employees of the Immigration and Naturalization Service issuing warrants for the arrest of aliens believed to be subject to deportation, and section 9, power of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization to detain for investigation an alien whom he thinks to be subject to deportation, we have no objections. It occurs to us, however, that these provisions have been taken almost bodily from the Reynolds-Starnes bill. We would much prefer these particular sections of the law to have their original setting, where they belong, in the Reynold-Starnes bill, and not in a cooked-up deportation bill, such as we consider this substitute.

This brief has been dictated hurriedly and without the analytical thought that we would like to give to this substitute. We do not believe that the substitute submitted by Senator KING fills the bill. What is needed is a constructive immigration and deportation bill, with claws and teeth—a bill that will cut down existing quotas or eliminate immigration entirely for a period of years—a bill that will quota immigrants from the Western Hemisphere or to put them on a reciprocal or exchange basis with our own citizens, limiting the number that may come in to the number of our own citizens who go out to the various neighboring countries.

We hope that you will be able to defeat this amendment and that the Reynolds-Starnes bill may become a surging issue and that the patriotic people, as well as the working people of America, may arouse to the terrible situation confronting them, through the million and a half alien people on relief and the more than 6,000,000 people enjoying jobs at the expense of our taxpayers and working people. It is high time that something be done, and in my judgment unless something is done to remedy this situation the people of America are going to rouse themselves and demand action.

Wishing you the best of luck, and hoping for some real, good American patriotic legislation, giving jobs to our own people and ridding our taxpayers of the terrific load under which they are struggling, I am

Respectfully yours,

JUNIOR ORDER OF UNITED AMERICAN MECHANICS,

NATIONAL COUNCIL,
JUNIOR ORDER UNITED AMERICAN MECHANICS,
Philadelphia, February 29, 1936.

Hon. Marcus A. Coolidge and Members of the Senate Committee on Immigration.

GENTLEMEN: The Junior Order United American Mechanics, a patriotic, fraternal, beneficial society, organized 83 years ago, in the city of Philadelphia, respectfully begs leave to submit some of the views of its membership, on Senate bill 2969 and H. R. 8163, as follows:

It is the understanding of our membership that these two bills are identical. We submit that there are certain good features to the bills in question, but there are others which are very objectionable. We are bitterly opposed to the features of the bill which confer discretionary power upon the Secretary of Labor and the interdepartmental committee to pass upon, review, and decide upon the cases of aliens who have violated the immigration laws of this country. As we understand it, not only sentences of judges of courts, but other cases of sentenced, deportable aliens would be left to the discretion of the Secretary of Labor and this interdepartmental committee, based upon what is termed "the public interest."

We submit that Congress would not be justified in conferring such power upon the Secretary of Labor as was contemplated in the original Kerr bill, and that the interdepartmental committee was substituted in the H. R. 8163. It would be a strange, anomalous situation, if acts of Congress, governing the deportation of illegally entered and criminal aliens and the sentences of courts of justice could be reviewed and set aside in what might be termed "the public interest" by such a committee. It is contrary to every good principle of administrative government, to confer upon the executive power to set aside and to review and determine cases, as proposed in this bill.

Again, we feel constrained to enter objection on the ground that the administration of the Department of Labor, in deportation matters, has been entirely too lax and loose under the administration of the present Secretary and Commissioner General of Immigration. The records of deportations for the past 2 or 3 years will amply attest the truth and verity of this statement. Deportations have decreased; in 1 year there was a falling off of something like 50 percent. We are fearful, if the power contemplated in this bill to be conferred upon the Secretary of Labor and the interdepartmental committee is granted, that the number of deportations will be still further materially reduced. As a matter of fact it would be within the power of this committee to set aside practically all sentences of deportation, except in cases involving moral turpitude and certain other exceptions.

The proposed bill requires that recommendations of judges to stay the deportation of criminals should be reviewed and approved before becoming effective. This means that a judge who has heard a case and who is entirely familiar with all the details and who submits a recommendation for leniency, shall have his recommendation reviewed by the Secretary of Labor and the interdepartmental committee. We are opposed to this, and we are also further opposed to the review of sentences of judges by the same token, where the judges do not recommend leniency. We have no authoritative statement as to the number of illegally entered or criminal aliens, where judges have recommended clemency to the Secretary of Labor, but we apprehend that there are comparatively few.

The provision of this proposed statute which permits registry of all aliens who entered before July 1, 1924, and are not subject to deportation, to be placed in the same category as aliens who entered prior to June 3, 1921, and who, under the present immigration laws, may be registered, does not go far enough. Every unnaturalized alien in the United States and everyone who comes to these shores hereafter should be registered, the same as is required of our nationals in other countries. We go further and say they should be fingerprinted as a ready means of identification and detection.

That provision of the law which permits visitors or students entitled to nonquota or preference admission to change status without leaving the country is too liberal and is therefore objectionable. There is no good reason why a student or visitor to this country should be given special advantages in order to evade and get around the requirements of the immigration laws.

We are unalterably opposed to that provision which, as stated by the Commissioner of Immigration, "provides for limited discretion to stay deportation of aliens of good character who have not been convicted of crime and who have been in this country for 10 years or have members of their family (immediate) here." Such questions as this ought to be determined in regular constituted tribunals for hearing of such cases, and the determining of the same, and not left to the discretion of a departmental committee.

It has been stated that under the provisions of this bill the number of illegally entered and dangerous alien criminals rendered deportable thereunder would be six times the number of aliens of good character whose deportation would be stayed. In the absence of specific data and statistics to support this statement, there is reasonable doubt in our minds as to the correctness of the same. We contend that not only the illegally entered and criminal aliens be sent out, but we also desire to deport unnaturalized aliens and aliens on relief. The act itself is silent as to the deportation of those who do not choose to take citizenship or those who are now a burden on relief.

It has been stated in a report of the Commissioner General that during the past 28 months deportation has been stayed in the cases of 2,862 aliens of good character, but unless some remedial legislation is passed it will be necessary to proceed with their deportation. Why not proceed with it and comply with the laws? What is the reason or excuse for staying the sentence of deportation on this number of aliens, except, as has been stated, there are more than 6,000 near relatives, and that if these 2,862 are deported 3,994 dependents will, for the most part, become public charges? The same reason could be applied to our own American citizens who have received sentences for the violation of laws of this country. It is not the practice or custom of the American people or the Congress of the United States to extend immunity, through legislative enactment, to stay the sentences of our own citizens. Why should we be so anxious to do the same thing for illegally entered or convicted aliens?

By reference to the Senate committee print of letter from the Commissioner General of Immigration we note where numerous exceptional cases are cited. There are some 14 or 15 cases cited therein. It is a well-established rule of procedure that the exception is never taken as the rule. There are innumerable cases in the conviction of our own American citizens in this country where it works a hardship on his family. We recall a case which came under our own observation, of a reputable American citizen who committed a crime and fled to a distant city, remaining in his new domicile for 26 years, married, raised an honorable family, and lived an exemplary life. He was detected, arrested, and returned to the city where the crime was committed, and underwent trial. Shall we argue that because of this hardship of one of our own citizens he should not have been made to pay the penalty of his crime? We think not. The same reason applies to these few individual, exceptional cases which the Commissioner General uses to bolster his argument in favor of S. 2969 and H. R. 8163.

There have been many conflicting statements appearing in governmental statements and the public press as to the number of unnaturalized aliens in America, the number on relief, and the number of illegally entered, criminal aliens here at this time. Regardless of these conflicting statements, we submit that in such times of unemployment and relief as we are now undergoing, and have been experiencing for the past few years, that the alien people resident here should be gradually eliminated and sent back to the countries whence they came. It is our understanding that in the main this is the policy pursued by other nations so far as American nationals are concerned. There appears to be no good reason why, in times of stress, the American taxpayer should shoulder the burden of providing for an alien who is here in distress, and there certainly is no good reason why any unnaturalized alien should be given the privilege and benefits of employment while our own American citizens are walking the streets, seeking work, to feed their hungry families.

A great deal has been said and written, and particularly by the Commissioner General of Immigration, about averting some of the cruel and unnecessary hardships incident to the administration of present deportation acts, and especially those resulting in the separation of families. We submit, gentleman of the committee, that the relative, nor any other sentimental reason, should not be the influencing factor to secure this legislation. As a matter of fact, many aliens, illegally entered, have married as a means of covering up their violation of the law. If the relative proposition is to be the deciding factor, now and hereafter, then the question will never be settled in the interest and to the satisfaction of the American workingman.

We submit further that an alien on relief is a public charge, and under the present immigration laws is subject to deportation. We also submit, in all fairness, and as a means of comparison, that when our own citizens violate a law of the State or Nation they are tried in our courts of justice, regardless of any relatives or family connection. It is not clear, then, why immunity should be granted to an alien who has violated our immigration laws simply on the grounds that he may have come here and married, or that he may have come here to join other members of his family or relatives. In the administration of justice and the enforcement of law the question of human relationships cannot be made the determining factor, and we submit that it should not be given undue prominence, which some of the officials charged with the enforcement of the immigration laws are seeking to give it in settling this question. What is needed is a strict enforcement of our immigration laws. There should be no letting down of the bars, but a rigid enforcement, with the patriotic view in mind that we owe our first allegiance to our own American citizens. They are entitled to the jobs and employment which our factories and industries have to offer. Furthermore, the burden of providing relief should be lightened upon the American taxpayer by sending all aliens on relief back to their own countries.

It has been stated that during the depression 1,500,000 aliens have been, at one time or other, on relief. We submit that this is unfair to the taxpayers of America to support such a burden. We cite a case of nine American citizens in France, a year ago last January, who applied for relief and employment. Some temporary relief was afforded, but these nine American nationals were informed that, so long as there was an unemployed Frenchman—and there were many thousands of them—there would be no job for these American citizens. These nine Americans were sent back here, where they belonged, without even going through the formality of deportation proceedings. We would like to see the same rule applied here as to those aliens who are on relief.

Regardless of the number of unnaturalized aliens in this country, and the number has been variously estimated from four to seven million, we submit that it is evident that these people care but little for citizenship, and most of them did not come to this country with any idea of contributing to its citizenry or to its upbuilding. They came principally for the wages, and many of them are sending back millions of dollars of American-earned wages yearly. This, gentlemen, is being done at the expense of American workingmen. We submit that a strong bill should be drawn, giving every unnaturalized alien a certain definite time in which to make arrangements to become an American citizen or to go back to his own country. It was stated on the floor of the Senate a few days ago that preference was being given to Americans for jobs. This is only partly true. In some instances we have found where it is true, but in many others we have found where aliens are employed and American citizens walking the streets looking for jobs. We submit that it is unfair and un-American to permit such a condition to continue.

SUMMARY

The Junior Order United American Mechanics, with its national council and its affiliations, numbering practically 500,000 American-born workingmen, are opposed to this legislation which will make mandatory deportable cases discretionary with the interdepartmental committee, with no appeal nor remedy from the use or abuse of such discretionary power.

We are opposed to conferring citizenship upon alien lawbreakers who are at present ineligible for citizenship but who will be eligible if this bill becomes a law.

We are in favor and would support a stricter deportation measure which would—

(a) Rid, as quickly as possible, our country of all aliens on relief.

(b) Provide a period of 1 year after the passage of this act for unnaturalized aliens to take out citizenship or be deported.

We are anxious to have a stricter enforcement of immigration and deportation laws by that great department of the Government which is charged with this responsibility under the statutes, and we would be especially pleased if some of the high officials of that Department could spend more of their time in seeing that the laws on the statute books are enforced than they are now spending in spreading propaganda through the press and by speeches and word of mouth throughout the country, traveling presumably at Government expense, trying to influence legislation, and to stir up a sentiment which is detrimental to the best interest of our taxpayers and our American workingmen.

We are in favor of the Reynolds bill, which, we understand, would cut existing quotas 90 percent. As a matter of fact, we would be delighted and pleased beyond measure if all immigration could be cut off or suspended for a period of 10 years.

Respectfully submitted.

UNITED AMERICAN MECHANICS,
By JAMES L. WILMETH, National Secretary.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I also ask that a telegram from H. L. Mennerick, State secretary, Order United American Mechanics, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BALTIMORE, MD., March 30, 1936.

Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS:

State Council of Maryland, Junior Order United American Mechanics, heartily endorses the Starnes-Reynolds bill and sincerely urges its prompt and favorable consideration.

H. L. MENNERICK, State Secretary.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, my motion to recommit the Kerr-Coolidge bill is now before the Senate. I ask the Presiding Officer how much time I have remaining.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 24 minutes remaining.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall reserve that 24 minutes to answer any arguments which may be made in support of the Kerr-Coolidge bill.

Mr. HOLT obtained the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. At the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia I shall ask several questions of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], provided the Senate shall not proceed to consider the appropriation bill, which I understand it is desired shall be considered and which is perfectly agreeable to me. However, I shall, as soon as conveniently possible, direct a few questions to the Senator from North Carolina on the subject matter he has been discussing this morning.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad to answer them, if I am sufficiently informed to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield at this time for the purpose of permitting the Senator from Pennsylvania to propound questions to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I requested that I be permitted to ask those questions at the close of the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well.

THE WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, on the 9th day of March the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] introduced a resolution to investigate the Works Progress Administration. That was nearly 7 weeks ago, and the resolution has not been passed upon by the Senate of the United States. I have been reading in the newspapers quite a little bit about the G-men, and how they have tracked down lost property and how they find things which are gone. I feel that the United States should employ some of those G-men to find out what became of the resolution to investigate the Works Progress Administration. There is little need to investigate the W. P. A. after the appropriation has been made and after the money has been spent. There is no need to lock the stable after the horse is stolen. There is no need for us to look at something that has gone by unless we can use it. We all realize what will be the outcome of this move. The session is coming somewhat toward its close, whether that be 2 months or 3 months from now, and we will not get the benefit of an investigation which will tell us how the Works Progress funds have been spent, or misspent, and, therefore, we will have to look only at the charges and countercharges.

Mr. Hopkins has stated that these charges are untrue. If I were in the place of Mr. Hopkins, I would want an investigation made to prove that they are untrue. I have seen replies saying that these charges cannot be based on fact. The best way to prove that statement is to ask some of us who have charged that the W. P. A. is full of politics, is full of waste and extravagance, to present our evidence. But in some way or other the resolution has gone; it has gone to the land of no return; it has become shelf worn after 7 weeks, and the Senate has not been given an opportunity to determine what we should do about investigating the Works Progress Administration.

Let me say right here that I again bring up this subject because I believe, as Representative FULMER, of South Carolina, is reported to have said in his home State, that Harry Hopkins is doing more to destroy President Roosevelt than is any other man in this country, Republican or Democrat. He is doing more because he is shaking the confidence of the American people. Therefore it is our duty as Democrats to see that the Works Progress Administration be exonerated if these charges are not true; and, if they are true, it is our duty as Democrats to see that the house is cleaned and that we can go into the fall campaign without any charge that cannot be disproven by actual facts.

When I previously spoke I directed most of my attack against conditions in the State of West Virginia, showing the huge expenditure of money, showing the politics, showing the waste, showing the extravagance. Since that time I have received letters from 46 of the 48 States. I am going to read excerpts from just one or two that I have selected from the different States of the Union. Let me quote the exact language of a letter from one of the States:

I find that when we apply for a position we are asked our party affiliations.

Here is a letter from another State saying:

Direct relief funds of our State are being used to build up a State and National political machine, while Harry Hopkins is spending a million dollars to contribute to it.

Here is another from a W. P. A. timekeeper in another State, in which he says that he has direct evidence that there is waste and politics. I think we need to have an investigation in order to disprove these charges if untrue.

Here is another letter from a State down South, in which it is stated:

The administration here stands charged with theft, forgery, misapplication of funds, nepotism, favoritism, and padding pay rolls.

These are pretty serious charges, and yet there is no investigation.

Here is a letter from another State, from which I will quote. The writer of the letter specifically tells where he had to go to get a job in that State and that he has to be O. K.'d by certain politicians.

Here is another letter from a State in the West, enclosing a newspaper clipping showing that applicants have to refer to a certain man before they can get a job.

Here is another letter about Richland County, S. C., in which the writer says:

An investigation of Richland County will prove that conditions in South Carolina are much worse than they are in the State of West Virginia.

And he enumerates the conditions.

Here is another letter from a New England State, in which the writer says that he can prove that there has been definite waste and graft, and so forth.

When we come to the State of Pennsylvania, if I should start reading the charges in the State of Pennsylvania, my good friend from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] would not get a vote on his motion to recommit the deportation bill, because I have so many communications showing the situation in Pennsylvania. I intend to come back again to that.

Here is a letter from another State on the far western coast, in which the writer says that political favoritism is shown.

Here is a letter from the Midwest, showing the definite persons that an applicant has to go to in order to get a job.

Here is another one from the East, in which the writer says that political debts are being paid, and he states to whom one should apply for a job.

Here is another letter from the Midwest, and another one from down South, and here is one from a great State in the East, in which the writer says that he has called irregularities to the attention of Mr. Hopkins, time after time, without a single, solitary investigation being made, and that the charges are referred back to the local officials.

Here is another letter written by a man in a Western State, who says:

It takes the endorsement of the political powers to get in and an agreement to vote right.

If these things are not true, an investigation will disprove them.

Here is another letter from an Eastern State, written by a veteran, in which he says one has to change his politics before he is put on the roll.

Here is another letter stating that local politicians are controlling the situation.

Here is another letter from the Rocky Mountain section showing a number of irregularities.

I could go down the list, Mr. President, and show hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of such charges all over the United States. It is our duty as Democrats to face the charges and prove them true or prove them untrue.

I said in a speech in West Virginia last week, and I repeat the statement here, that we in the Senate have appropriated millions of dollars to eliminate bugs, insects, and termites from plant life. Can we not spend a few thousand dollars to eliminate the same elements from the Works Progress Administration, to eliminate the bloodsuckers and leeches who are destroying President Roosevelt's relief program, and who are doing much to destroy his chance for reelection? Can we not put them out and show what is going on?

However, let me go back to Harry Hopkins' famous report, because it has been used quite frequently, and let me read from it. I quote from page 11 of the report:

It discloses that administrative cost of the entire period of operation of the Works Progress Administration in West Virginia is approximately 4 percent.

Mr. Hopkins says 4 percent.

Mr. Puckett, who has charge of the financial division of the W. P. A., says the approximate cost of the entire operation of the W. P. A. will average 6.3 percent.

Mr. E. C. Smith, W. P. A. State engineer, in an article that has been circulated all over the State of West Virginia, says:

Nonrelief workers, including foremen, timekeepers, professional and skilled workers not available from relief rolls, but paid from the operation of the project, received 9.3 percent.

Hopkins says 4 percent The head of the financial division says 6.3 percent; the head of the engineering staff says 9.3 percent. If they themselves, the heads of the organization, do not know how much is being expended for administration, how do they expect the Members of the United States Senate to know how much is being used for that purpose? Why should we not have a committee appointed to find out where the money is going? But it may be said, "You can write down there and find where it is going." The Works Progress Administration, however, will not and do not give heed to the charges and do not state where the money is going.

Let me show the Senate where some of it is going in West Virginia. I wrote the procurement director for West Virginia, which is a small State, and this is what he says:

In reply to your favor of the 21st instant we have to report the following:

(1) Rental paid on office furniture, including typewriters, labor-saving devices, etc., $36,483.64.

(2) Cost of furniture purchased, $47,552.49.

(3) Rental on property, $25,458.30.

And that with people begging for help! And besides the amount of money the W. P. A. has spent let me give a statement from the Relief Administration—the F. E. R. A.

The Relief Administration has transferred to the W. P. A. equipment acquired through rental-purchase contracts, having a depreciated value at time of transfer of $45,350 and representing an orginial rental-purchase cost of approximately $68,000. * * *

The Relief Administration turned over to the W. P. A. $71,-241.33 in equities on equipment being rented on rental-purchase contracts.

They turned over all that amount, and yet we find that the W. P. A. has spent in rentals alone over $36,000 for furniture and office supplies up to the 1st of March and bought $47,000 more of furniture in the State of West Virginia when people are just begging for an opportunity to get enough money with which to buy bread and milk. I need not go further into that, but I want to put in the RECORD—I will not read it—another thing to prove another charge that the statement of Harry Hopkins is untrue, in which he said that the W. P. A. was set up in West Virginia after my colleague went to the Philippines. I ask that the statement which I send to the desk be incorporated in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HOPKINS EXONERATES SENATOR NEELY, DUE TO ABSENCE IN ORIENT

CHRONOLOGY OF THE WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION, 1935

June 8. "F. W. McCullough appointed State W. P. A. Director for West Virginia."

Alexander, W. P. A. procurement office; and Miss Teressa White, head of the F. E. R. A. social-service training department, are to leave today for Columbus. There all W. P. A. administrators and high officials and officials of the dying F. E. R. A. will confer for detailed instructions on how to cooperate on transferring the work from the F. E. R. A. to the W. P. A. Melton M. Maloney, assistant State W. P. A. director of personnel, who is to be inaugurated mayor of Dunbar, Monday, will leave for the conference after the inauguration."

July 7. "E. C. Smith, Jr., appointed as State engineer."

July 7. "Appointment of Everett C. Smith, Jr., Ravenswood acting chief engineer and acting assistant to State Works Progress Administrator F. W. McCullough was announced yesterday. * * *

"Administrative personnel offices will be open Monday. * * * The administrator's temporary offices have been crowded with job seekers for several days."

July 8. "Project sent from West Virginia to Washington."

July 8. "State Administrator McCullough is organizing State and district machinery to operate the relief program."

July 9. "West Virginia's projects filed with Harry Hopkins."

July 10. "Rosier named to W. P. A. office. * * * Appointment of Dr. Joseph Rosier, president of Fairmont State College, and past president of the National Education Association, as State consultant on educational work for the W. P. A., was announced last night by State Administrator F. Witcher McCullough. Rosier is to serve without pay.

"Meanwhile organization of district W. P. A. offices at Charleston, Huntington, and Fairmont was well under way, with the State W. P. A. personnel, procurement and other administrative branches working overtime to have the program machine ready for work as soon as possible after West Virginia's original batch of project applications are acted upon in Washington * * *.

"Acting officials for the Huntington and Fairmont districts were named yesterday. John J. West was appointed acting district director; Grover C. Christian, acting assistant director and chief engineer and Cabell County Relief Administrator; D. W. Harris, acting supervisor of the division of projects and planning, for the Huntington district.

"Fairmont district officials appointed were Robert Roth, acting district director and Marion County Relief Administrator, George Gow, acting supervisor of the division of projects and planning.

"Officials for the Charleston district had not been announced although the work of placing the Kleeman building, Summers Street, in readiness for opening was being pushed at top speed last night.

"The district appointments are continued upon performance and accomplishments and are subject to such changes and adjustments as may seem expedient and for the best public interest, Mr. McCullough said. Full responsibility for the progress of the Works Administration in the district will be placed upon the district personnel, he added."

July 11. "State Administrator McCullough continues organization of district offices."

July 12. "Mr. McCullough states, 'The organization was strong enough to go about transferring relief clients from relief rolls to W. P. A. rolls.' "

July 13. "Two more W. P. A. officials named. * * * Appointment of Joseph N. Alderson, former postmaster of Alderson, as acting director and Frank A. Wyant of Union as acting assistant director and chief engineer of the third West Virginia W. P. A. district with headquarters at Lewisburg, was announced yesterday by State Administrator F. Witcher McCullough * * *.

"Organization of two more W. P. A. districts, one at Parkersburg and the other at Elkins, was practically completed yesterday, but the personnel was not announced. The Parkersburg office will have jurisdiction over Braxton, Calhoun, Doddridge, Gilmer, Lewis, Pleasants, Ritchie, Tyler, Wirt, and Wood Counties. The Elkins office will serve the counties of Berkeley, Grant, Hardy, Hampshire, Jefferson, Mineral, Morgan, Pendleton, Randolph, and Tucker.

"An acting district director and an acting assistant director and chief engineer will be named for each district within a few days. Their appointments will be contingent upon performance and accomplishments, and will be subject to such changes as may seem expedient and for the best interest. Administrator McCullough said. In each district the full responsibility for the program will be placed upon the district personnel.

"District officials have been instructed to set up temporary offices at once and be prepared to begin work on W. P. A. projects immediately upon their approval at Washington."

July 17. "McCullough announced that he had recommended to Washington officials the appointment of Harry Blaine Colbank, of Elkridge, as State director of the division of labor management."

July 18. "With organization of the district W. P. A. offices practically completed, State Works Progress Administrator F. W. McCullough yesterday called a meeting of the new acting district key officials for Charleston tomorrow.

"Officials for three districts have already been announced. Administrator McCullough began the work of completing the remaining three yesterday immediately upon his return from Washington."

July 19. "McCullough announces projects ready to start."

July 20. "At the preliminary conference State Works Progress Administration officials spoke, and then the conference was broken into group meetings, in which the district officials moved like college students from class to class on half-hour schedule."

July 21. "High W. P. A. position goes to S. G. Smith, relief administrator.

"The appointment of S. Grover Smith, Kanawha County relief administrator, as acting district director of the W. P. A. for Charleston district was announced yesterday by F. Witcher McCullough, State Works Progress administrator."

"Joseph Blackburn, of Morgantown, was appointed acting assistant director of the Charleston district.

"Mr. McCullough also announced appointment of Mason Bell as office manager for the Lewisburg district."

July 22. "Smith will open W. P. A. office today. * * * S. Grover Smith, newly appointed director of the Charleston Works Progress Administration district, will establish offices this morning in the Kleeman Building, Summers Street. Director Smith for the present will maintain his previous status as Kanawha County F. E. R. A. administrator in conjunction with his new post.

"W. P. Wilson will be asked by F. W. McCullough to serve as deputy administrator."

July 24. "Three more road employees resign. * * * Weston, July 23. * * * Three more employees of the State road commission in the Weston district resigned tonight, making a total of four who have quit to take jobs with the Works Progress Administration.

"M. C. Pugh, chief clerk for the highway body, said he resigned, effective August 1, to take a job as office manager for the W. P. A. in Elkins.

"Draco Dodrill, of Clarksburg, assistant maintenance engineer, quit to join the Parkersburg W. P. A. office.

"R. R. Watts, of Buckhannon, quit as construction engineer, effective July 31.

"E. C. Bennett, district engineer for Weston, previously had resigned to become W. P. A. engineer in this area."

July 25. "Robert F. Roth, director of the district Works Progress Administration office in Fairmont, covering 11 counties, was tonight appointed administrative assistant to the State Works Progress administrator.

"In Roth's absence from his post as district director, George Gow will have charge of the district office."

July 25. "Projects approved in Washington."

July 28. "Robert M. Lambie, former chief of the State department of mines, has been offered the position of consultant on labor management, workmen's compensation, and safety matters in the State W. P. A. organization, it was stated yesterday. Mr. Lambie could not be reached last night for a statement relative to acceptance."

July 31. "District W. P. A. officials returned to their homes last night with instructions to encourage cities, counties, and school boards to initiate new work projects, following a 2-day conference at the State offices here.

"Yesterday morning they heard discussions by Wayne Coy, field representative for W. P. A., and his assistant, Vernon D. Northrop. Mrs. Dora Garlitz, West Virginia director of the W. P. A. women's division, outlined women's problems."

August 1. "S. Grover Smith, Sr., announced yesterday his resignation as county relief administrator to become district director of the Works Progress Administration under F. Witcher McCullough beginning today."

August 6. "Notice that no more State or district administrative personnel will be appointed for the present and that the responsibility of employing persons had been shifted to the district offices was given out at the State W. P. A. headquarters here yesterday.

"Emphasis was placed on the importance of all persons who want W. P. A. jobs, including foremen, draftsmen, and other technical men, registering with the National Reemployment Service, which maintains district offices throughout West Virginia.

"Ninety percent of the persons to be employed by the Works Progress Administration must come from the relief rolls and must be registered with the Reemployment Service. The other 10 percent may be hired through the Reemployment Service or from other sources. This is to give elasticity to labor regulations, in order that technical and expert craftsmen who may not be obtainable from relief rolls and who might be vital to the completion of a Works Progress project might be employed.

"The National Reemployment Service is to keep the Works Progress Administration fully advised as to the availability of the various types of labor, so that these conditions can be taken into consideration in choosing projects to be built.

"The notice to cease hiring administrative personnel was sent out by the State office because the administrator has a certain amount apportioned to administrative expenses, which is not to be exceeded in order that the greatest amount possible can be spent directly on labor.

"Many times more applications have been received for jobs than there are jobs to be filled, it was said. The State personnel office has been closed indefinitely and personnel records have been sent to the various district directors in whose districts applicants for jobs live."

August 7. "C. L. Heaberlin, former State compensation commissioner, is slated for State compensation officer under the W. P. A.; and Ralph Ostrander, acting Kanawha County F. E. R. A. administrator, is being considered for the post of acting State W. P. A. safety director, it was stated here yesterday.

"F. Witcher McCullough, State W. P. A. administrator, yesterday announced the appointment of E. C. St. George, mayor of Danville, Boone County, as acting administrative assistant and State director of personnel, but did not confirm the Ostrander and Heaberlin reports."

August 8. "Dewey Phares appointed assistant director of labor relations."

August 9. "Harry B. Colebank appointed director of labor relations."

August 10. "A 2-day State and district Works Progress Administration conference will open at noon today in the city council chamber, during which regional and State W. P. A. officials will address more than 100 officials and employees of the Administration in West Virginia."

August 13. "Colonel C. P. Fortney, West Virginia's first chairman of the State road commission, yesterday was offered the post of engineering consultant to the Works Progress Administration for the W. P. A. road-building program. It is thought he will accept."

August 16. "Word was received that steps were immediately taken to acquire equipment. Engineers began working out county allotments."

August 28. "First projects started in McMechen and Parkersburg."

September 7. "Six hundred and eighty-four men to work."

September 14. "State meeting for W. P. A. officials called. Colonel Babcock present.

September 21. "Two thousand one hundred and seventy-three men to work."

October 1. "Seven thousand people employed."

From the Wheeling News Register, Sunday, October 13, 1935, part 4, page 6, the following is found:

"Senator and Mrs. M. M. Neely, Fairmont, left last week for Chicago to join a congressional party headed by Vice President and Mrs. John Nance Garner for a 3-month tour of the Orient and the American insular possession in the Pacific."

Mr. HOLT. Yet Mr. Hopkins says:

The report of the investigators exonerates Senator NEELY, Mr. HOLT's colleague, of the charge that these appointments were used by him to build up a political machine, the investigation having developed that Mr. NEELY was in the Orient on official business during the formative period of the West Virginia organization.

Another charge. Mr. Hopkins says in his report that Mr. E. C. Smith, engineer, had no special endorsements. I exhibit here an original letter showing that he not only had the endorsement of Senator NEELY, but that he had the endorsement of Senator GUFFEY, for W. P. A. engineer in the State of West Virginia.

Mr. Hopkins says that there is not a case where a man had to change his political affiliation in order to get a job. Let me quote from a letter I have received:

I have been approached by one connected with the W. P. A. saying that if I registered a certain way that I would get some work. Will you please advise me what to do, as my family is in need of not only food but of medical attention?

If these things are not true, if Harry Hopkins says that there is no politics in relief, the best thing to do is to have an investigation and prove that this man is not telling the truth. Oh, no; no politics at all!

Here is a letter from a girl who was fired from the Parkersburg office. She never was connected with the Fairmont office. Our State office is in Charleston, but when she lost her job where did the letter come from. Did it come from the State office at Charleston? Did it come from the district office where she was working, Parkersburg? No. The postmark on this letter shows that she was fired from Fairmont, W. Va., the home of my colleague, where the headquarters of the W. P. A. ought to be and where its control is and where it is run.

Let me quote from the superintendents of schools. Seventy percent of those I shall quote from are Democrats, and I want to read what they think of the W. P. A. and what they say. One superintendent goes ahead and says:

The repair work on the various buildings was badly needed and we worked almost day and night to get them ready, and at various times were called on for additional information so it could be ready to start at any time.

He asks what happened. The projects were not approved. The money went for projects which had no value.

Here is a letter from another superintendent of schools in which he says that:

The W. P. A. paid no attention to the school projects in West Virginia, and it has cost our board of education alone over $2,000 just for plans that the W. P. A. requested them to give out.

Here is a letter from another county superintendent of schools in which he says:

For some reason unbeknown to us this application was finally rejected and as a result not a single solitary improvement has been made in the school system of our county through the expenditure of W. P. A. funds.

Yet in our county we find expenditures for everything except something of permanent value in the W. P. A.

Here is another letter from another county superintendent of schools in which he says:

We have spent on engineering $3,000 to prepare a project and brought the project to the attention of the W. P. A., but there was not a single, solitary thing done for it.

Here is another letter from another county superintendent of schools:

The projects that have been approved in this county are those that will accomplish very little of permanent value. On every hand there is evidence of waste and political manipulation. Projects are started without any regard to value or without any regard to the finding of jobs for those who need work.

Here is another one:

We have not been able to get any action through the Lewisburg office. It is filled with red tape, and no schools are being built or repaired in our State.

I quote from another one to show what is going on:

You understand what is happening in the West Virginia W. P. A. The political parasites are sucking the lifeblood of our public institutions.

Another county superintendent of schools said:

We daresay there is no worse situation in West Virginia than we have in Lincoln County. Just think of 117 one-room school buildings, many of them standing without underpinning but ready to fall down, and not a single project which we submit to improve them has been approved.

He said further that the schools of that county have seen waste upon waste; that they can get all the money they want to decorate the school buildings, can get all the shrubbery they need, but not one penny to help the schools that are weather beaten, need painting, need underpinning to keep the buildings from falling down.

Here is another letter from a superintendent of schools, who says:

At one particular school two cooks are employed at $70 per month cooking for 30 pupils and being allowed $4.50 worth of food per month, which gives the staggering allowance of 3 cents per day for each pupil, and they call it a program for undernourished school children.

Think of it—$140 for cooks and only $4.50 for food. That is Hopkinism. That is what is going on in West Virginia. Children need milk, but he is giving the money to the cooks. Up in the northern panhandle it is charged there were four cooks employed for 6 weeks at one particular place who did not cook one bite of food except the food they themselves ate. Then it is said we need more of that!

Here is a letter from another superintendent of schools:

It is my opinion that projects of less importance than the ones which we have submitted are now in operation. We need to repair our school buildings and can get no money for their repair.

Here is another one saying that although they did set up a project to feed the children, the farmers were not even paid for milk because of some red tape. He continued:

I would not be so bold as to say that someone at Parkersburg or Charleston is beating the poor farmers out of a just and fair milk bill.

Now let us jump from superintendents of schools to mayors of cities. I shall not read all of these letters, but I have more than 60 letters from mayors. Seventy-five percent of those from whom I shall quote are Democrats, so it will be seen that these complaints do not come from the Republican side of the situation. These come from honest Democrats who do not want to see our party destroyed by Hopkinsism and boondoggling. The W. P. A. seems to have plenty of money to build all kinds of nonsensical things but no money for our schools. They have all kinds of money to teach children tap dancing, but no money to give them milk so their legs will be strong enough to enable them to run and play.

Here is a letter from a Democratic mayor who says:

The dissatisfaction in our city, and I speak as a Democrat, is that there is too much supervision expense, there is too much discrimination, and there are too many supervisors in the way to allow the men to work.

Here is a letter from another Democratic mayor:

I find that the W. P. A. has little stability, and although they have no funds we find them juggling them back and forth in order that the right people be put on the pay roll.

Here is a letter from another mayor in which he says that his little town had spent a good many hundred dollars for an engineering survey on some project but could not get one single, solitary penny for carrying on the work.

Here is the mayor of another city who says:

We feel very much disappointed that the projects have been allocated in an unfair manner and under political influence.

Let me tell you about that town. It will be remembered that my colleague submitted telegrams saying inferentially that they were having to do with my attempt for political preference and that I wanted certain people to be put on the pay roll. That is untrue. I say that only to show that the question of these telegrams related to discrimination being shown in this little town, and the letter from the mayor will show that my interest had nothing to do with patronage, but to get the projects that would benefit the most.

Here is a letter from the mayor of one of the larger cities in West Virginia:

Out of our total program only 24 percent of the main projects have been started. The city has no control or supervision over the projects now operating, which means that we are wasting it clear through.

Here is another thing said by another mayor of a large city:

As I see it just now we have several of our streets torn up and nothing completed.

They are tearing up the streets, and no one knows when the work will be completed.

Here is a letter from another mayor in which he said they tried to build sidewalks and submitted a project, but were told they had no money for it, and yet in that county alone the supervising cost was as much as it would have cost to build the whole project.

Here is a letter from the mayor of another large city:

It is a disgrace the way they are doing things, in my opinion, down in southern West Virginia. I can prove that certain Democratic gentlemen O. K. every man for jobs with the W. P. A.

If these things are not correct, the best way to do is to destroy them by an investigation.

Here is another letter in which the mayor says they are definitely questioning the affiliation of people who are put on projects.

I put these letters in the RECORD because I want Senators to know that whenever they are told West Virginia is not disgusted with the conduct of the W. P. A. officials, it will be proved and shown by these letters, from officials elected by the people of West Virginia, that they are tired of it.

Here is a letter from another mayor who said:

The W. P. A. as administered here, as in other places, is a great deal worse than a waste of money, because they take those that are not needing work and deprive those who are in need of work.

The foremen and timekeepers have to be true and tried political supporters. Here is a letter from a prominent Democrat, the mayor of his city, who says:

It is my opinion that there is not a man or woman in this county, regardless of party affiliation, who is of ordinary common sense and who has made any observation whatever, that does not realize fully that this relief measure as being administered is deeply steeped in politics and almost void of results actually intended. Of course, there are many who will not openly express themselves because they are fearful of such an expression.

Here is a letter from another mayor:

Set-up in this county is purely political. To get any kind of a job here you have to vote the Democratic ticket.

All right. Now let me go to another mayor, and we shall see what he says. He says:

We have put in projects for permanent things and unpermanent ones, and those that are not permanent get the first right-of-way.

He says another thing:

The town here has seen the effect of nothing but waste and extravagance.

Here is another letter from another mayor:

The general feeling is that there is too much red tape for a man needing a job to get a permit to go to work. If this could be left to some official of the town it would save the man from hitch-hiking all over the county—

To see if they could get any food for their children.

Here is a letter from another mayor, who says that when the W. P. A. officials want to put people on the pay roll they question their political affiliations.

These letters are from city officials who have been elected from within their own State.

Here is another letter, saying:

We have tried to get a bridge constructed. It was very needful, but nothing could be done.

Here is a mayor who says that he felt like resigning because of the noncooperation of W. P. A. officials; and another man says that in his town worth-while projects were thrown aside, and political consideration was given to the O. K. of those projects.

Here is the mayor of another town saying—and this man is a Democrat:

The citizens in our town are not satisfied, because they see imported people brought in at huge salaries and see their own citizens without work.

The mayor of another town says that the selection of projects and the placement of workers are beneficial only on political matters.

But what is the use of going ahead? I tell the Senate that 64 percent, by actual count, of the officials of the State of West Virginia who wrote me, criticizing the W. P. A.—64 percent of them—and of that number, 70 percent were Democrats.

Now, let me go a little bit further into that subject.

Harry Hopkins says there is no politics in relief—none at all! Let me read you a sworn affidavit to see if there is any politics in relief, and see if Harry Hopkins will get around this. Here is what the affiant says in part:

I myself was compelled to deliver a certificate of the registration books, certifying that I was registered as a Democrat, and was required to state under oath that I would vote and work for the election of Senator NEELY in the 1936 campaign.

This is a sworn affidavit, with the notary's seal right there. Oh, no; there is no politics at all, in W. P. A. work, according to Harry Hopkins.

Here is a letter written by a man to a woman who wanted to go on a sewing project; and here is what he said:

Now, don't you say I should do all I can to get you on relief, if I am to get as much out of it as I did on the boy's case.

Here is another thing I want to show the Senate about the question of need, and the question of relief. Here is the actual letter:

I am in dire need. All day during April 14, 1936, we had one 11-cent loaf of bread to eat, and that was everything. We have four children, my wife and myself. We have no credit and no money. I am a disabled veteran. I was on relief, direct, for over 1 year.

But he said he could not get a job under the Works Progress Administration.

Here is a person who is in need, with a family, begging and supplicating and asking for something to eat.

Let me put in the RECORD actual evidence of how that investigation was conducted. Here is the exact letter from one of the department heads of W. P. A. Now, listen to this:

We further believe that it will not be necessary to alter or destroy any official records, as has been suggested in round-table discussion of the matter.

"It will not be necessary to alter or destroy any official records." If it takes as long for us to get an investigation by the W. P. A. authorities as it takes to get an investigation by the Senate, I imagine all the records may be altered or destroyed.

Hopkins, according to a newspaper article I have here, admits fraud in Maine. He said there was something wrong in Washington. He says the charges in Maine are true, and they are true in Washington. I know they are true in West Virginia; so why not have an investigation and prove these charges true or untrue, and fix the various responsibilities?

Here are some newspaper clippings that I wish to put in the RECORD to show what is going on. Here is one from the Baltimore Sun:

Three accuse Jones in loss of W. P. A. jobs.

The article tells about the situation in Pennsylvania. Mr. Raushenbush brought out some other questions about Pennsylvania, and yet nothing is done. Harry Hopkins is given a clean bill of health, and the resolution is becoming shelf-worn up there. It is going to be worn out on the shelf from waiting.

Here is what Mr. Robert L. Johnson says about relief in Pennsylvania; and he was in charge of it. Here is what he says in the Saturday Evening Post of March 21, 1936:

I can't speak for the Nation, but I do know that one unwise move in Pennsylvania, against which I fought, resulted in $7,000,000 being wasted—wasted just as truly as if someone had taken seven million-dollar bills and used them to light cigars.

They say that is not true. The best way to prove the Johnson statement untrue is to have Governor Earle or the W. P. A. group in Pennsylvania put Mr. Johnson on the stand, and let him tell where that $7,000,000 was wasted, if these things are not true.

Here is an editorial from a Democratic paper in South Carolina:

Those responsible for the W. P. A. disgrace in South Carolina should get out.

And the editorial goes ahead, showing that the cost is similar to the cost in West Virginia, and that people cannot get employment.

W. P. A. LABOR 70 PERCENT EFFICIENT AT MOST HERE

In other words, we have a 30-percent loss on W. P. A. efficiency. If we have a 30-percent loss on a four-billion-dollar appropriation, how much has been wasted, and how much has been lost? Is it not time that those who are trying to look after appropriations should be clamping down, so that we shall not have such loss in the future?

Here is another thing that I quoted, about a minute ago, from another South Carolina paper:

"Harry Hopkins has done more to destroy the President than any other man in the United States," declared Congressman H. P. FULMER in a speech in the House of Representatives here Wednesday afternoon.

Here is what a Democratic Representative from Michigan says:

Funds have been misused in Michigan, discrimination has been practiced, and I lay the responsibility directly to Dr. William Haber, F. E. R. A. administrator, deputy administrator of the P. W. A.

And he goes ahead and says the rolls are padded, and tells about finding the names of Mark Antony and Julius Caesar on the pay roll in Michigan.

If these charges are not true, they should be disputed and proved to be untrue.

Here is one from out West, in the State of Kansas. It says:

Welfare department costs reach much higher figure.

Here is a letter which says:

I have sent your name through for State highway work. If you are not a registered Democrat, kindly visit the town clerk before 5 p. m., March 28, 1936, and have your party designation changed to Democratic.

Oh, there is no politics at all—none at all—in the relief situation!

Here is one from the State of Texas:

Police today were holding a 23-year-old Works Progress Administration worker who, although he admitted coming here from Georgia last July, had in his possession a poll-tax receipt made out to him showing that he had resided in this city, county, and State for 23 years.

Why did they give him a poll-tax receipt?

Here is one from the State of Illinois:

Democrats exact W. P. A. votes by threats, charge.

While I am talking about Illinois, it might be well to refer to a letter from the State of Illinois, which is very interesting. Here is a letter I should like to read about a place where there is "no politics", where Harry Hopkins says everything is well. Here is what the writer says:

As an obscure and impoverished W. P. A. worker on project no. 2210, gang no 2834, in Chicago, I am taking the liberty of writing you the following:

On April 4 I was approached by a W. P. A. official. He said to me: "Shorty, be sure and vote for Dr. Bundesen on the primary election day."

The writer of the letter replied:

"You have no right to dictate to me such a thing as voting for your choice."

"Well," he said, "it may cost you something after your pay day."

He was right. On April 10 it was our pay day. The whole gang got their pay checks (half of the men being docked, of course) except two of us. "Your name is not on the paying list. We have no pay check for you," the paymaster told me. I protested, and demanded my 2 weeks' full pay, which is $27.50.

And then the paymaster again brought up the question of Dr. Bundesen in Illinois. Oh, no; do not mistake it. There is no politics in the W. P. A. at all—none at all.

Here is one from Alabama, which says:

The W. P. A. pay roll tells a sad and sordid tale of what is going on in Alabama.

I know specifically, and I can prove, that the W. P. A. officials in the State of West Virginia are using Government time in trying to set up a W. P. A. slate in the Democratic primary in our State. That is a serious charge. These men who are drawing your money and my money, the money which should go for feeding children and taking care of the hungry and those who need clothes, are going around saying, "We want you to vote for this man for the United States Senate. We want you to vote for this man for Governor; we want you to vote for this man for sheriff", all the way down the line—no politics at all about it.

If there is no politics in relief, the best way to destroy my attack upon the political situation is to have an investigation before a committee of the United States Senate. Why the fear of it? If we are not guilty of indulging in politics, let us prove that we are not guilty of it; and if we are guilty, let us admit our mistake and clean our own house.

Thousands of letters on this subject have been pouring in to me from all over the United States; and I intend to put in the RECORD editorials from 221 leading newspapers of the United States asking why the Senate of the United States does not investigate the relief situation. We are told, "Oh, what is the use of investigating it? We are going to have the Campaign Committee investigate it." Yes; have the Campaign Committee investigate it after the appropriation has been made, after the men have been elected, after everything has been done—again a nice example of locking the stable door after the horse is stolen! Let us see today where the money is going. Let us see if there is any politics in it. Let us see if there is any waste. Let us look at the extravagance, and then see where we are going.

Another thing: We are told, "Oh, there is no need of doing this. We will call Mr. Hopkins before the Appropriations Committee."

The Appropriations Committee is interested in the amount of money spent, not in political discrimination; and I speak in the highest terms of those on the Appropriations Committee. Why not have this matter investigated by a select committee? We investigate everything from Indian ranches in the West to chasing the corn borers and termites all over the country, but we cannot find out whether or not there is a termite in the W. P. A. Oh, there is no money for that—no money at all for expenditure on W. P. A. projects. There is no money to investigate them. To think that we do not have money to investigate the expenditure of nearly $5,000,000,000, and then to say, "Oh, the reason we want to do that is that it is dangerous."

You know, some Democrats have come to me and said, "HOLT, you know this is no time to bring that up. This is election year." I say it is my duty to bring it up any time I find rottenness; and I say that the W. P. A. is guilty of the most rotten waste and extravagance in the expenditure of public money that this country has ever known, and it certainly is our duty to investigate and see what is going on.

Oh, yes; let us cover it up; let us close our eyes to it. We may think we are closing our eyes to it; but the people of the whole United States are not closing their eyes, and we shall have to take the consequences when the time comes. We shall have to see it. I say that I am truly representing my party when I am trying to drive from my party these political bloodsuckers and these political leeches who have been put on the public pay roll for no other reason than the political power they may have.

Senators will remember what I showed about the expenditure of money; they will remember what I showed in reference to the increases in salaries. They will remember that I showed $800 worth of engineering force per month put to work on a $20,000 project.

Oh, no; no waste of money. The best investment the Senate could make would be to appropriate money to find out how much waste and extravagance and how much politics is in the W. P. A., and we should not allow Harry Hopkins and his group of nincompoops in the Works Progress Administration to tell us what they are spending.

Harry Hopkins has a press or information staff, according to the New York Times, of between 250 and 300 people to tell all of us how much he is spending. But he cannot tell us how much is being spent on any project.

Let us look into the record. If it is true that he has been such a wonderful man, if there have been no mistakes made, then the best way to prove it would be to have a thorough, searching investigation, and go into the matter and show up those who have made these various charges.

The people back home know what is going on. We may think the people back home do not know about it, but they know the ward heelers on the pay roll and the political bosses on the pay roll. We can shut our eyes to it, but 120,000,000 Americans are not shutting their eyes to this waste, extravagance, and political set-up.

It is high time that we investigated the W. P. A. They will say that I have not been here very long. But mark my words, within the next 2 or 3 weeks they will be saying, "Let us hurry up with this relief appropriation bill, because the relief funds are running low, and we have to feed these people. Let us get this through. Let us give them another blank check. Let us push the thing through."

Then they will have you swamped with letters, a hundred for this project, 200 for another, 500 for another, and so on. They will say, "The reason we have to cut down is that Congress did not appropriate enough money. Write your Congressman to appropriate more money for the W. P. A." Then the letters will start coming in, and we will get scared, and think we must provide the money immediately, without knowing where the money is going.

Mr. President, would any business house spend $4,000,000, let alone $4,000,000,000, without having a report from the board of directors as to where the money was going? No business house would do that. It is certainly high time we were trying to look for the people in the expenditure of billions, which have gone for huge political machines in my State and other States. It is our duty as Democrats to clean our own house before the opposite party cleans it for us.

Let us look into the matter, and let us pass this resolution to investigate the W. P. A. People are hungry, are begging for food and clothing, yet there are many on the pay rolls with huge salaries. And here we sit and say, "Let us listen to what Harry Hopkins says." I say, let us listen to him, but put him under oath and make him say those things. If Harry Hopkins had been under oath, and had reported on conditions in West Virginia as he did in the report to which I have referred, he could be brought up for perjury at any time, because he knows that report was not true, and he knows these reports by which he has been trying to cover up in West Virginia have been nothing but sham and whitewash.

STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	Johnson	Overton
Ashurst	Connally	Keyes	Pittman
Austin	Coolidge	King	Radcliffe
Bachman	Copeland	La Follette	Reynolds
Bailey	Couzens	Logan	Robinson
Barbour	Davis	Lonergan	Russell
Barkley	Dickinson	Long	Schwellenbach
Benson	Dieterich	McAdoo	Sheppard
Bilbo	Donahey	McGill	Shipstead
Black	Duffy	McKellar	Steiwer
Borah	Fletcher	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Frazier	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	George	Metcalf	Townsend
Bulow	Gibson	Minton	Truman
Burke	Glass	Moore	Tydings
Byrd	Guffey	Murphy	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hale	Murray	Van Nuys
Capper	Harrison	Neely	Wagner
Caraway	Hatch	Norris	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	Nye	White
Chavez	Holt	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12098, making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to make an inquiry. The pending question is the amendment which I offered to the immigration bill. It is necessary for me to be absent from the Senate after 1 o'clock on Friday, and I cannot return until the following Monday. All I desire to be sure of is that the change made in the order of business will not affect my amendment during my absence.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in reply to the statement made by the Senator from Vermont, I will say that when the general appropriation bill which I asked to have taken up shall have been disposed of, the unfinished business automatically will again come before the Senate. It is my hope that some disposition of that bill may be made today; and if that is done, it is my intention to move an adjournment until next Friday, day after tomorrow. If the bill shall not be disposed of today it may be necessary to proceed tomorrow with the consideration of the unfinished business. It is not contemplated that the general appropriation bill will require a long time for final disposition. I shall be glad to contribute in any way I can to serve the convenience of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand the fairness of the leader of the majority, and I am sure that if we encounter difficulty Friday I may expect accommodation at that time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly. I hope the Senate may find itself in a position on Friday to adjourn or recess until Monday; but unless we make progress and have some disposition of the pending bill in the meantime, that may prove impracticable.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, does the Senator say that he expects to dispose only of the appropriation bill today and then take a recess until Friday?

Mr. ROBINSON. No, Mr. President; what I said was that if the appropriation bill shall be taken up in compliance with my request just submitted, it is not expected that a very long time will be required for its final disposition, and that when the appropriation bill shall have been disposed of the Senate automatically will resume consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas that House bill 12098 be considered by the Senate at this time?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12098) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—Department of State—Collection and editing official papers of Territories of the United States", on page 5, line 19, after "section 168–169)" and the comma, to strike out "$23,000" and insert "$29,000", so as to read:

For the expenses of collecting, editing, copying, and arranging for publication the official papers of the Territories of the United States, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing and binding, and contingent and traveling expenses, as provided by the act approved February 28, 1929 (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 168–169), $29,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contributions, quotas, etc", on page 16, line 14, before the word "including", to strike out "$17,000" and insert "$20,000"; in line 15, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$7,500" and insert "$10,000"; and on page 20, line 3, before the word "together", to strike out "$878,120" and insert "$880,620", so as to read:

For payment of the annual contributions, quotas, and expenses, including loss by exchange in discharge of the obligations of the United States in connection with international commissions, congresses, bureaus, and other objects, in not to exceed the respective amounts, as follows: Cape Spartel and Tangier Light, Coast of Morocco, $588; International Bureau of Weights and Measures, $4,342.50; International Bureau for Publication of Customs Tariffs, $1,318.77; Pan American Union, $191,032.37, including not to exceed $20,000 for printing and binding; International Bureau of Permanent Court of Arbitration, $1,722.57; Bureau of Interparliamentary Union for Promotion of International Arbitration, $20,000, including not to exceed $10,000 for the expenses of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, stenographic reporting services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), traveling expenses, purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, maps, stationery, official cards, printing and binding, entertainment, and other necessary expenses, to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the President and executive secretary of the American group; International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy, $49,911, including not to exceed $12,855 for the salary of the American member of the permanent committee (at not more than $7,500 per annum), compensation of subordinate employees without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, expenses for the maintenance of the office at Rome, including purchase of necessary books, maps, documents, and newspapers and periodicals (foreign and domestic), printing and binding, allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 118a), for the use of the American member of the permanent committee, and traveling and other necessary expenses to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State; Pan American Sanitary Bureau, $30,643.30; International Office of Public Health, $3,015.62; Bureau of International Telecommunication Union, Radio Section, $5,790; Government of Panama, $250,000; International Hydrographic Bureau, $4,632; Inter-American Trade-Mark Bureau, $14,330.20; International Bureau for Protection of Industrial Property, $1,472; Gorgas Memorial Laboratory, $50,000; American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood, $2,000; International Statistical Bureau at The Hague, $2,000; International Map of the World on the Millionth Scale, $50; International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts, $6,696, including not to exceed $6,500 for the expenses of participation by the Government of the United States in the meetings of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and of the commissions established by that committee, including traveling expenses, personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, stenographic and other services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), rent, purchase of necessary books and documents, printing and binding, official cards, entertainment, and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State; Convention Relating to Liquor Traffic in Africa, $55; International Penal and Penitentiary Commission, $4,282, including not to exceed $750 for the necessary expenses of the commissioner to represent the United States on the commission at its annual meetings, personal services without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, traveling expenses, and such other expenses as the Secretary of State may deem necessary; Permanent Association of International Road Congresses, $588; International Labor Organization, $212,951.59, including not to exceed $27,300 for the expenses of participation by the United States in the meetings of the general conference and of the governing body of the International Labor Office and in such regional, industrial, or other special meetings as may be duly called by such governing body, including personal services without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, stenographic reporting and translating services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), rent, traveling expenses, purchase of books, documents, newspapers, periodicals and charts, stationery, official cards, printing and binding, entertainment, hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State; Implementing the Narcotics Convention of 1931, $9,005; International Council of Scientific Unions and Associated Unions, as follows: International Council of Scientific Unions, $19.30; International Astronomical Union, $617.60; International Union of Chemistry, $675; International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics, $2,316; International Scientific Radio Union, $154.40; International Union of Physics, $62.72; International Geographical Union, $194.66; and International Union of Biological Sciences, $154.40; in all, $4,194.08; and Pan American Institute of Geography and History, $10,000; in all, $880,620, together with such additional sums due to increase in rates of exchange as the Secretary of State may determine and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury to be necessary to pay in foreign currencies the quotas and contributions required by the several treaties, conventions, or laws establishing the amount of the obligation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico", on page 23, after line 17, to insert:

For investigations relating to the establishment of a Federal zone along the international boundary, United States and Mexico, and for the construction of fences as authorized by Public Law No. 286, approved August 19, 1935 (49 Stat. 660), including salaries and wages; fees for professional services; supplies and materials; communication service; travel expenses; transportation of things; hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger- and freight-carrying vehicles; hire with or without personal services of work animals and animal-drawn and motor-propelled vehicles and equipment; acquisition by donation, purchase or condemnation of real and personal property, including expenses of abstracts and certificates of title; repairs; and such other expenses as the Secretary of State may deem necessary, $25,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum with regard to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memorandum is as follows:

The Immigration and Naturalization Service maintains a force of less than 200 patrolmen between El Paso and the Pacific coast, and is, therefore, experiencing great difficulty in the matter of alien smuggling prevention at all points. The Customs Service also maintains a limited border patrol for the prevention of illegal entry of contraband and merchandise.

The erection of fences along the most active smuggling sections of the Mexican border would be of invaluable assistance to the Government agencies concerned in preventing the illegal entry of persons, dutiable merchandise, narcotics, and other contraband, and it is believed that within the life of the fence the advantages to the Federal and State Governments would cost more than offset the expense, since it would reduce the cost of investigating, detaining, and deporting from the United States aliens who have entered illegally from Mexico.

The several States, cities, towns, and counties along the international boundary would also be relieved of considerable expense for care and maintenance of aliens in penal, eleemosynary, and other institutions. To illustrate, for the past 7 years an average of 6,462 aliens of Mexican nationality have been deported each year, and a considerable number of orientals and aliens of other nationalities who gained surreptitious entry into the United States. In the fiscal year 1933 over 2,000 aliens of the Chinese race, who entered illegally in the sectors it is proposed to fence, were apprehended and deported to China at an expense to the Government of over $500,000.

Moreover, hundreds of aliens of the criminal class congregate in various Mexican border towns and with others who are residents there cross surreptitiously to cities and towns on the American side of the line to smuggle, rob, murder, and what not, due to the facility with which they can enter the country, since it requires but approximately 1 minute for these undesirable aliens to dash across the international line and lose themselves among confederates or sympathizers on the American side at points where it is proposed to erect fences. The Government's efforts to prevent illegal crossings have been far from successful, and gun fights frequently result in attempts to prevent illegal entries, with serious loss of life to officers of the Federal Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 23, line 17.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Arbitration of smelter-fumes controversy", on page 28, line 7, after the words "excess of", to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,500: Provided, That the ultimate decisions under this arbitration shall be consummated within 2 years from the date of the passage of this act", so as to read:

Arbitration of smelter-fumes controversy: For the expense of the arbitration under the convention between the United States and Canada, signed April 15, 1935, of the questions set forth in article III of that convention for determining damages caused in the State of Washington from fumes discharged from the smelter of the Canadian Mining & Smelting Co. at Trail, British Columbia, including the share of the United States of the honorarium of the neutral arbitrator and of other joint expenses of the two Governments; honorarium of the United States arbitrator; compensation of an agent; compensation of employees in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations or to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting and translating services, by contract if deemed necessary without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses and per diem (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act); cost of necessary books and documents; stationery; official cards; printing and binding; and such other expenditures as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of State is authorized to transfer to any department or independent establishment of the Government, with the consent of the head thereof, any part of this amount for direct expenditure by such department or establishment for the purposes of this appropriation, $50,000, to be available immediately: Provided, That no salary shall be paid from this appropriation at an annual rate in excess of $7,500: Provided, That the ultimate decisions under this arbitration shall be consummated within 2 years from the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 10, to insert:

INTER-AMERICAN CONFERENCE

For the expenses of participation by the United States in an Inter-American Conference to be held at Buenos Aires, Argentina, or at the capital of another American republic, in 1936, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; stenographic reporting and other services by contract if deemed necessay without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); rent; traveling expenses (and by indirect routes and by airplane if specifically authorized by the Secretary of State); hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; equipment, purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, and maps; stationery; official cards; entertainment; printing and binding; and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes herein specified, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $75,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Special Mexican Claims Commission", on page 31, line 15, after the name "Secretary of State", to insert "$90,000, together with", and in line 18, before the word "is", to insert "which unexpended balance", so as to read:

Special Mexican Claims Commission: For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934", approved April 10, 1935, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, without regard to the provisions of any statute relating to employment; rent in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; furniture; office supplies, and equipment, including law books and books of reference; stenographic reporting and translating services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); traveling expenses; transportation of things; printing and binding; and such other necessary expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, $90,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation made available for this purpose in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936, which unexpended balance is continued available until August 31, 1937.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—Department of Justice—Federal Bureau of Investigation—Salaries and expenses", on page 36, line 13, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$1,181,500" and insert "$1,165,000", and in line 14, before the words "of which", to strike out "$6,025,000" and insert "$5,800,000", so as to read:

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; the acquisition, collection, classification, and preservation of identification and other records and their exchange with the duly authorized officials of the Federal Government, of States, cities, and other institutions; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice and the Department of State as may be directed by the Attorney General, purchase and exchange not to exceed $50,000, and hire, maintenance, upkeep, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only on official business; purchase and exchange at not to exceed $7,000 each, and maintenance, upkeep, and operation, of not more than four armored automobiles; firearms and ammunition; such stationery, supplies, and equipment for use at the seat of government or elsewhere as the Attorney General may direct; not to exceed $10,000 for taxicab hire to be used exclusively for the purposes set forth in this paragraph and to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General; traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of such Bureau when authorized by the Attorney General; payment of rewards when specifically authorized by the Attorney General for information leading to the apprehension of fugitives from justice, including not to exceed $30,000 to meet unforeseen emergencies of a confidential character, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, who shall make a certificate of the amount of such expenditure as he may think it advisable not to specify, and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the sum therein expressed to have been expended; and including not to exceed $1,165,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia; $5,800,000, of which amount $100,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to inquire why this appropriation and the one immediately succeeding have been reduced.

Mr. McKELLAR. The explanation is that last year the Bureau of Investigation was allowed $5,000,000. The Budget Bureau estimate increased that appropriation to $5,800,000 for the year beginning July 1 next. The House of Representatives disregarded the Budget Bureau estimate and added $225,000 more. The Senate committee, after consideration, concluded that the Budget estimate ought to be maintained.

I may say to the Senator that last year, when a $5,000,000 appropriated was provided, only $4,626,000 was spent, according to the Budget Bureau's report on page 417. That was for 1935. The appropriation in the pending bill of $5,800,000 is, on its face, $800,000 more than the Bureau had last year; and the committee was of the opinion that that was ample and sufficient for the work to be done. It is a tremendous increase as it is—to $5,800,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am sorry to have to disagree with my able friend from Tennessee regarding this particular item. This happens to be the item which involves the adequate equipment of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the Department of Justice; in other words, this raises the question as to whether the so-called G-men of the Government shall have the facilities which they require in their battle upon major crime in the United States. I think an invincible case can be made for the appropriation as passed by the House and as requested by the Department and as denied by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

I think I would go as far as the Senator from Tennessee in all rational economy drives. Indeed, I would go much further in many contemporary directions. But it seems to me this is a peculiar and a queer place to start the economy. It strikes me as a violation of perspective and common sense.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Surely the Senator does not mean to say that an increase such as the Bureau of the Budget has recommended on an item of this sort is not an enormous increase.

This item was increased very largely last year. Year before last, as I recall, the appropriation for this bureau was $2,800,000 plus. That was almost doubled last year; and for the ensuing year the actual money added to the appropriation is $1,173,482. That is an enormous increase. That increase will result in providing for the next fiscal year one-half as much money for the Bureau of Investigation as the whole judicial system of the United States is receiving.

I think the Budget Bureau has been exceedingly liberal in recommending this remarkable increase, which on its face is $800,000, but in reality is something like $1,173,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, let us see why the appropriation had to be increased last year. It was not through any voluntary action on the part of the Bureau of Investigation that it had to be increased. It was due primarily to the action of Congress in putting new and burdensome responsibilities upon these overworked G-men.

The fact of the matter is that in the crime situation of today in the United States people generally have come to possess such a surpassing confidence in the so-called G-men branch of the Federal service that more and more requirement is being heard for the expansion and extension of their invincible influence in crime prevention and crime detection in the United States. Our people want to sleep nights, and the G-men are their justified reliance.

I served as a member of the small crime committee of the Senate under the able leadership of the distinguished senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. The one thing above everything else, I think he will agree with me, which impressed us was the progressive necessity for the increasing equipment of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the increasing responsibility which it necessarily must assume in view of the interstate character of crime in these modern days. Crime has ceased to be local. In its major jeopardy it defies State lines. Our social defense must keep pace. It can do so only through this amazingly efficient agency in the Department of Justice.

Mr. McKELLAR rose.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In just a moment I shall be glad to yield to the Senator. I was about to say to the Senator that the increased responsibilities coming out of new statutes passed by Congress are largely responsible for the previous increased personnel to which the Senator refers.

Now I wish to read from Mr. J. Edgar Hoover's annual report bearing upon this point:

During the fiscal year 1935, the investigative field of the Federal Bureau of Investigation was greatly enlarged—

That is the point to which the Senator from Tennessee referred.

It "was greatly enlarged." Why?

because of the approval by the President during May and June 1934 of a series of Federal statutes, creating jurisdiction for the Bureau in various types of cases which had not theretofore been covered by Federal legislation. The more prominent of these new Federal laws include those relating to the interstate transportation of stolen property, the robbery of banks organized or operating under laws of the United States or holding membership in the Federal Reserve System, interstate flight to avoid prosecution or giving testimony in certain cases, the extension of the Federal kidnaping and extortion statutes to include a greater variety of specific offenses, and the killing or assaulting of Federal officers.

This entire catalog of responsibilities is a new inventory since May and June 1934, as a result of new Federal laws. That is the reason for the previous increase in the appropriation to which the able Senator from Tennessee has referred.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is true that those laws were added to the statute book last year. I do not believe any laws of that character have been enacted this year. And the Department had $4,673,000 which it used for the purpose of enforcing those laws as well as other laws that came within its jurisdiction.

Now there has been added $1,173,000 to that sum for the coming year, and surely, without any increase in the number of laws which have to be enforced, and, in view of the fact that they have spent only $4,600,000, there is no necessity of our violating the Budget recommendation of $5,800,000. That represents an enormous increase. It is an increase of something like 25 percent, stating it offhand, for I have not the exact percentage. But $4,673,000 was available during the present fiscal year, and next year there will be available $5,800,000, which is the Budget estimate. We have a Budget law, and I think we ought to stand by the Budget law.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it does not make the slightest difference what the Senator from Tennessee has to say about relative arithmetic. This happens to be a problem in the realm of grim reality. It is a problem which involves the basic protection of life and property in the United States against major crime; and upon that subject the most expert witness in America is J. Edgar Hoover, head of the Bureau of Investigation. I stand with him to the last necessity which he may require. So do the American people. The record which that Bureau has made in the last few years is a brilliant record of a sort that challenges the complete and absolute confidence of practically every Member of the American Congress; and when on a question of crime prevention, when on a question of the protection of human society the Federal Bureau of Investigation says it needs 175 more men, I for one am unable to yield my judgment to the mathematics of the Senator from Tennessee. We are asked not to make the necessary appropriations to maintain 175 men. If the Senator from Tennessee——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will yield in just a moment. If the Senator from Tennessee wants to save the cost of 175 or many, many more men I will join him in taking 175 men, or any other number, off the roll of 18,255 that are working—if that is the word—for Dr. Tugwell; I will join him in taking 175 off the roll of 43,641 men on the administrative staff who are working for Mr. Hopkins and his W. P. A.; I will join him in taking the 175 off the roll of the 19,548 that are still employed by the H. O. L. C.; I will join him in taking the 175 off the roll of the 2,422 who are still working for N. R. A., although it has been interred these 3 years past. If it is necessary to save the cost of 175 men, I respectfully submit that there are many, many places in this expanded, gargantuan personnel of the vast governmental structure now erected in Washington where it can be saved infinitely better—and with no loss to anybody but the job holders themselves—than to charge the economy to the G-men of the Department of Justice, I need but state these comparisons to vindicate my point. Countless other comparisons are similarly available.

Now let us see why the G-men of the Department of Justice need this additional force. It happens that at this moment there are 13,755 Federal cases pending for investigation in this Bureau. We all agree whenever a crime problem is discussed that delay is the curse of American justice. Yet when the chief investigatory arm of the Federal Government modestly asks for 175 more men to facilitate the process of investigation, the process of the pursuit and the prosecution of crime, it is suggested that, for some mathematical reason or other, the increase ought to be denied, although we confront the physical fact that there are 13,755 Federal cases now pending for investigation, and that 7,000 of them are unassigned. How do you expect, Mr. President, to reduce crime in America if we have 7,000 unassigned cases in this chief and highest crime-prevention branch of the American Government, and how are we ever going to face the American people in respect to this challenge if we deny a little increase of 175 men to that group upon which 120,000,000 people are today dependent to a greater degree than upon any other law-enforcement agency on earth for the protection and sanctity of life and property under the flag. The criminal world would rejoice to see the G-men curbed. Most other citizens would condemn the act as insufferable.

Is there any doubt on earth about the effective record that the G-men have made? Let us inspect one exhibit out of countless others. Since the Federal kidnaping statute was enacted on June 22, 1932, there have been 52 major kidnaping cases in the United States. The G-men have ascertained the identity of the kidnapers in all these cases, resulting in 136 convictions, with penalties of 1,853 years and 28 life sentences. Is that or is it not the type of crime prevention and law enforcement in which the American people believe? It passes my comprehension how there can be any argument over the question of giving the G-men 175 more employees upon the urgent request of those who are held responsible for the administration of the Bureau of Investigation and in face of the willingness to make enormous appropriations in every other direction—for instance, $200,000,000 or $300,000,000, I repeat, to the Resettlement Administration under Dr. Tugwell. I do not know what they do with the money. I know one thing they do not do with the money; they certainly do not use it to answer their mail, because I have not been able to get an answer—or even an acknowledgment—to a question I submitted to Dr. Tugwell 2 weeks ago. Indeed, I seem to be having considerable trouble with my mail lately in several different directions.

There are plenty of places where we can pare, and where we ought to pare; but I respectfully submit that this is not the place to start. Let us start upon the hundreds of millions being wasted in other directions; not upon the relatively petty pennies which we spend upon the most effective single agency in the Government.

I think the American people want the G-men to have every equipment and facility which they believe they need in their war upon major crime. They do not want our first line of defense weakened. This is one place where, in my humble judgment, economy is false economy and where we are invited into penny-wisdom and pound-foolishness. Crime is the great American disgrace. To haggle over an item of only $225,000 for fighting crime would be an even greater disgrace.

I think the committee amendment should be rejected, and I am going to ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am not a member of the Appropriations Committee and I know very little about the Budget and very little about the men who compose the Bureau of the Budget; but when I scrutinize, even casually, this bill, which provides a net increase of $705,615 above the House bill and shows a total decrease of $225,000 taken away from the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, I have no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the action taken by the Senate committee in reducing the appropriation of the Bureau of Investigation should be disagreed to.

I am quite satisfied that at this time the courts of this country would be powerless to administer the law in the face of the opposition of organized crime unless the courts were sustained and assisted by competent, well-manned, fully equipped Federal agencies.

I am not concerned, Mr. President, about the politics of the head of the Bureau of Investigation. I have had occasion to observe the activities of this Bureau, and if there is any bureau in the Government, in my opinion, that is justified this Bureau has justified itself. I think the suggestion to reduce the appropriation here, largely for the simple reason that the Budget Bureau has recommended it, has little to commend itself.

Mr. Edgar Hoover, the head of this Bureau, has said that the work demanded of the Bureau required an increase in the personnel of his force. That appeal was made to the House of Representatives. The House committee and the House itself recognized the justice and the necessity for this comparatively slight increase in this appropriation.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. What is the difference in the amount that has been suggested and the amount the committee recommended?

Mr. GEORGE. The total decrease is $225,000.

Mr. DUFFY. I am one of those who heartily approve of the statements made by the Senator from Georgia. If there is any one department or bureau that should not be curtailed, it is the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Request was made for 143 employees. It would require $450,000 to pay those employees. That would leave only $350,000 of the increase made this year. In other words, they are asking for 143 employees who would cost, at the highest rate of salary paid, to wit, $3,200 each, $450,000 in round numbers, and $350,000 more has been added by the Budget and by the Senate committee.

Mr. GEORGE. What the Senator from Tennessee says may be true. I am not taking issue with him. What I am saying is simply that the head of this Bureau has asked for some increase in his appropriation. The House Appropriations committee recognized the necessity and justice for that increase. The House of Representatives itself has recognized the necessity for that increase. I want to say to my colleagues that the American people do not want this item in this appropriation bill decreased. I want to say further that there is not a single group of organized criminals in America who will not breathe easier if they find a disposition in the Congress to whittle down the appropriation for this Bureau.

Mr. President, one would think of $225,000 as such a trifling sum as not to be worthy of mention. Certainly this $225,000 ought to be given to the Bureau under all the circumstances. Have we not extended Federal jurisdiction, constantly expanded it, constantly called for additional forces to insure respectable administration of the Federal laws?

In view of organized crime in America, the power of the court to enforce the law in its jurisdiction in the old way has passed. This Bureau, or one like it, and even stronger than it is at the present day, is a necessity, an absolute necessity, if Federal law is to be enforced. If Federal law breaks down, under the constant disposition and necessity to increase and to expand Federal jurisdiction, we shall have permitted the break-down of respect for law and order in our country.

For a long number of years the anchor to which the American citizen tied himself was his confidence in the administration of the law in the Federal courts. The time has passed when the courts, unaided and unassisted, can effectively administer the laws. Crime is interstate, is international, and the law-enforcement agencies of no single State can reach the organized crime of the present hour. Congress itself has recognized it. As against the judgment of our industrious and able committee in this vital matter I am willing to put the judgment of Mr. Hoover and the judgment of the House committee and the judgment of the House of Representatives. I say again that the American people do not want this kind of economy, nor will they approve it.

Mr. President, I shall vote against the amendments reported by the committee reducing the appropriation for this Bureau.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to apologize to the Senator in charge of the bill because as a member of the Appropriations Committee I have to take a stand against the proposal. I was not present when the amendments were written, but had I been I should have said a few of the things I want now to say.

In preparation for the publication of the report of the Committee on Crime referred to by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] I have reviewed the measures which we have brought here in one way and another and have had enacted into law. It is perfectly amazing to contemplate how many laws have been enacted to increase the power of the Federal Government in the apprehension of criminals. A statement was made here about a month ago that law and order had broken down in certain sections of the country. Law and order never break down when it comes to the application of the Department of Justice through the Bureau of Investigation.

We have imposed upon that bureau new functions. For instance, one of the bills which the crime committee, so called, fathered, and perhaps mothered, provided that when a citizen is absent for 6 days from his home there is a presumption that a kidnaping has taken place and that State lines had been crossed. By reason of that one law, not to mention the others which have been referred to here, there has been given to the Department of Justice a degree of responsibility such as it never before had. How well has it measured up to that responsibility? We have but to read the reports to find that practically every major kidnaping crime perpetrated in the last 5 years has been solved by the investigators of the Department of Justice.

Mr. President, let me remind the Senate that last year, upon my insistence and the plea made by me that an objection be withheld, the Senate passed a bill—it was not enacted into law because the House has never dealt with it—but the Senate voted that there should be two additional inspectors from the Department of Justice assigned to each State in the Union, that 96 additional positions for new investigators should be created in order that through the various States there might be contacts with the Department of Justice, and in that way the effort to prevent crime promoted.

Mr. President, I agree with the appeal which has been made first by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], a..d secondly by my able friend from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to give the Senator one further exhibit to indicate the pressing character of the need for this additional relief in the Department of Justice. During the month of January the G-men were called upon to perform 4,592 hours of overtime work. Who is to say that that situation shall not be corrected in our governmental system?

Mr. COPELAND. I agree with the Senator in that particular matter. Let me invite the attention of the Senate to the printed hearings of the committee as found on pages 158–159. It will be found there that the Department has broken down the total sum of money to show how it would be spent. I am struck by the fact that there are a senior photographer, an assistant photographer, a chief fingerprint classifier, another fingerprint classifier, an assistant fingerprint classifier, and a student fingerprint classifier. What does that mean? I find on page 160 of the hearings that today 3,700 fingerprints are being received every day in the Department of Justice. There is in the Bureau a great collection of fingerprints, numbering, as I recall, about 5,000,000. On telegraphic request, in 24 hours practically any peace officer in the United States may have a verification of a suspicion that a given set of fingerprints are the fingerprints of a known criminal. That in itself is of tremendous value in the apprehension of criminals.

So I wish to join with other Senators in urging the rejection of the amendment. I am sure the chairman of the subcommittee is only representing the composite belief of the committee and not any personal view of his own; but I do urge that the Senate reject the amendment and leave the sum as originally fixed by the House.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I also am opposed to this amendment.

I wish to call attention to a different reason why the employment of skilled investigators is of public service of sufficient interest to engage the support of Congress. The point I make is that innocent men are protected from unjust prosecution where a thorough and skillful and intelligent examination of the cases is made before prosecutions are started.

About a month ago—I think on March 2—I inserted in the RECORD of the Senate a press item which represented many similar items, indicating that the work of one of the special counsel of the Department of Justice, Colonel Ristine, who had been considering for some time the charge of conspiracy—which, of course, is a crime—and the charge of fraud made in the Senate with respect to cancelation of air-mail contracts, had resulted in some document being filed or some statement made in the Department of Justice tending to disprove all those accusations, and to show that there existed no cause for a criminal prosecution, and in fact there existed not even evidence that would support a civil suit.

That was on March 2. On April 6, 1936, I wrote to Hon. Homer S. Cummings, the Attorney General, as follows:

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: On February 29, 1936, the press published the information that a formal report would shortly be submitted to the President and to the Attorney General by Col. Carl L. Ristine, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, concerning an impartial legal study of the air-mail contracts and the cancelation of them.

It was expected that this report would be made public. If this report has been made, will you kindly furnish me a copy of it?

Sincerely yours.

I signed that letter and mailed it.

On April 8, 1936, I received from the Attorney General this reply:

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your note of April 6.

The proposed report to which you allude has not been prepared. As a matter of fact, I saw the press statement which you mention. It was not based on any information furnished by the Department, and was probably only the prophecy of the journalist who wrote it.

With kind regards, sincerely yours,

HOMER S. CUMMINGS,
Attorney General.

That was on April 8.

On April 16, 1936, there appeared in the Christian Science Monitor an article entitled:

REPORT ON CANCELED AIR MAIL LANGUISHES

(By a staff correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor)

WASHINGTON, April 16.—The famous "unfinished" Ristine report, which is understood to conclude that the grounds on which the Roosevelt administration canceled the air-mail contracts contain nothing which would justify either civil or criminal prosecution of the air lines, is likely to remain forever unfinished so far as the public is concerned.

And more, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be incorporated in the RECORD.

The entire article is as follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor of Apr. 16, 1936]

REPORT ON CANCELED AIR MAIL LANGUISHES

WASHINGTON, April 16.—The famous "unfinished" Ristine report, which is understood to conclude that the grounds on which the Roosevelt administration canceled the air-mail contracts contain nothing which would justify either civil or criminal prosecution of the air lines, is likely to remain forever unfinished, so far as the public is concerned.

Over a month ago it was reliably indicated that the report, based on a careful legalistic study of the alleged misbehaviors of the air lines under the Hoover administration, was nearing completion. It was indicated then that it would shortly be submitted to the Attorney General and then to the President, and it was alleged that the White House had given orders "to let it come on" and be made public, no matter how damaging it might prove to the administration. It was said the administration publicity chiefs had decided it better to risk the report than face the charge of another attempt at suppression.

It was learned authoritatively today, however, that, so far as the Department of Justice is concerned, the report is still "unfinished" after over 2 years of study. It was further suggested that "it may never be finished." Certainly no progress toward its completion has been made during the past month.

The political opposition was prompt to assume that this indicated the administration had thought better of the question of making the document public, particularly with elections impending, and had decided that it should never see the light of day. It was further assumed to confirm intimations of the damaging character of the evidence contained in the report.

SOUGHT LEGAL STATUS

However, it was pointed out at the Department of Justice that the study of the Hoover mail contracts was initiated as a matter of course following the sensational charges growing out of the Black committee's investigation.

It was not intended to justify the Post Office Department's action in canceling the contracts, but merely to determine whether there was any ground for legal proceedings against the air lines.

Further, it is claimed, there was never any intention of making the report public. Its purpose was legalistic. This being the case, there would have been prosecutions if the findings warranted—other things being equal. But there would not necessarily have been a public report.

It is also pointed out that 12 of the air lines are now seeking redress in the Court of Claims for the cancelations of the contracts. The Department of Justice is, of course, defending the Government against the claims.

A POSSIBLE ASSUMPTION

A possible assumption is that it was decided to postpone any decision on prosecution until the result of the claims cases is known.

On the other hand, there is no disposition to deny the alleged unfavorable findings of Col. Carl L. Ristine, who conducted the special investigation for the Department. The understanding is that he found certain "irregularities" in the drafting of the contracts, but that in his opinion there was no evidence admissible in court which would justify either civil or criminal prosecution.

Whether the Department of Justice can properly be charged with deliberately suppressing information which properly belongs to the public is questionable.

The Department is constantly making studies looking to possible prosecution. When they reveal insufficient evidence for action, the matter ends there. Under normal circumstances there is no occasion for making public the findings.

There is a difference in this case, however, in that one branch of the Government has already penalized an industry for alleged illegalities. If the Post Office Department's action is not followed up by the Department of Justice it is prima facie indication that Mr. Farley's justification is not valid in court. But it is not the first time that Homer S. Cummings, Attorney General, has been forced to disagree with other branches of the administration and has refused to carry their cases into court.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, my interest in the matter, as I stated on March 2, is the state of legislation on this subject. If it be true that this careful and thorough investigation, running over a period of 2 years, has developed the facts the press have made public, it is for the benefit of the Senate of the United States and of all the people of the country that the Senate should step right out in front and repeal the vindictive features of the present air-mail law that are founded, if they are founded upon anything, upon the assumption that there was crime or fraud that justified the cancelation of the air-mail contracts.

At this point I should like to save the Senate the trouble of listening to section 9, subsection (d) of section 7 of the Air Mail Act by having it inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the section was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 9. Subsection (d) of section 7 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(d) No person shall be qualified to enter upon the performance of, or thereafter to hold an air-mail contract (1) if, at or after the time specified for the commencement of mail transportation under such contract, such person is (or, if a partnership, association, or corporation, has a member, officer, or director, or an employee performing general managerial duties, that is) an individual who has theretofore entered into any unlawful combination to prevent the making of any bids for carrying the mails: Provided, That whenever required by the Postmaster General or Interstate Commerce Commission the bidder shall submit an affidavit executed by the bidder, or by such of its officers, directors, or general managerial employees as the Postmaster General or Interstate Commerce Commission may designate, sworn to before an officer authorized and empowered to administer oaths, stating in such affidavit that the affiant has not entered nor proposed to enter into any combination to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mails, nor made any agreement, or given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person to bid or not to bid for any mail contract, or (2) if it pays any officer, director, or regular employee compensation in any form, whether as salary, bonus, commission, or otherwise, at a rate exceeding $17,500 per year for full time: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any officer or regular employee to draw a salary of more than $17,500 per year from any air-mail contractor, or a salary from any other company if such salary from any company makes his total compensation more than $17,500 per year."

Mr. AUSTIN. This is a long section which carries out the prohibition against the officers and members of these companies whose contracts were canceled. That section of the law was the result of many statements made and considered by the Senate, among which I read only two or three. One of them, inserted in the RECORD by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] as being a part of the opinion of the Solicitor for the Post Office Department, Mr. Karl A. Crowley, as of date February 6, 1934, contained this accusation:

Positive and direct evidence establishes a conspiracy between air-mail contractors and post-office officials to defraud the Government of the United States. Even if actual bribery is not proven, the beneficiaries of the conspiracy have admitted using personal and political influence to secure these contracts, extensions, consolidations, and route certificates in a manner that is vicious and fraudulent.

I need not read from the RECORD to have the Senate reminded of the fact that we had the air rended with such words as "fraud", "collusion", "spoils", and all the opprobrious epithets that could be uttered against the air-mail contractors during the consideration of that bill, which resulted in that vindictive provision, subsection (d) of section 7; and the background of it is important to remember.

On March 8, 1934, the President sent a letter to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads recommending the enactment of a law which would reverse every feature of the McNary-Watres Act and make permanent not only the cancelation of contracts but the disqualification of the contractors, in which there appeared this phrase:

Obviously, also, no contract should be made with any companies, old or new, any of whose officers were party to the obtaining of former contracts under circumstances which were clearly contrary to good faith and public policy.

Later—just 24 hours later, March 9, 1934—the McKellar-Black bill to revise the air-mail laws, which carried out every feature of the recommendation, included this language:

And no person shall be eligible to bid for or hold an air-mail contract if it or its predecessor is asserting or has any claim against the United States because of a prior annulment of any contract by the Postmaster General.

That provision created such an uproar all over the United States that it was modified; and as it is now found in the law, the limitation placed upon it is for 1 year. If these good men could get into court within 1 year, then they might have a status that would raise the question of the honesty of the cancelation of those contracts. Otherwise, after 12 months they would be out.

This legislation stands as a punishment, a penalty, inflicted on citizens of the United States without trial, without any act of a court of justice. It is the type of punishment condemned in our own Constitution, which forbids bills of attainder—that is, acts of legislation which punish men without trial.

I am in favor of appropriating funds to the Department of Justice for the employment of skilled, honorable, expert investigators for the purpose, among others, of preventing unjust, unlawful prosecutions of innocent men.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to read from the House hearings, first from page 60. Mr. McMILLAN, the chairman of the subcommittee, was questioning Mr. Hoover about this item, and Mr. Hoover said:

I think it would be best, Mr. Chairman, to first refer to the amount which was expended by the Bureau for the fiscal year 1935. This amount was $4,626,508. For the present fiscal year we were granted $5,000,000, and for the next fiscal year we have requested through the Bureau of the Budget—

This is the head of the Bureau of Investigation testifying—

We have requested, through the Bureau of the Budget, $5,800,000, or an increase of $800,000 over the present appropriation.

That is the testimony of Mr. Hoover about this very item. He had requested of the Bureau of the Budget for the coming year $800,000 more.

Turning to page 62 we find how he spent that money:

Dealing now with the matter of personnel, I would like to ask for an increase in personnel at the seat of government. The appropriation for personnel at the seat of government for 1936 provides the sum of $988,000 for 611 employees. For 1937 we ask in the estimate for personnel the sum of $1,165,000, with a total personnel at Washington of 754 employees. This is an increase of $177,000 over the previous appropriation and an increase of 143 employees.

Mr. President, it is perfectly clear from the testimony that the men he will employ will enter the service at a minimum salary of $3,200, and this is what he said about them. I read from page 167 of the Senate committee hearings:

Those 143 employees, Senator, will be largely assigned to the identification division and to the crime laboratory. I think about 20—between 20 and 30—will be assigned to the file room or as stenographers in the Bureau; but the large balance of that number will be in the identification division, where the work has increased considerably. They will be fingerprint experts taken from the civil-service register, together with typists and index clerks.

Mr. President, when the estimates were made up, an increase of $800,000 was deemed all that was necessary. The Budget estimate allowed for that $800,000 increase. The House added $225,000, and the Senate committee restored the appropriation to the figure of the Budget estimate, $5,800,000.

Let us see what the additional men, those for whom Mr. Hoover requests an appropriation, will cost. One hundred and seventy-three, assuming that he pays every one of them $3,200 a year, will cost only $553,600, and there will be left nearly $350,000 after that shall have been done. The appropriation is ample.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to what has been done. In 1928 the appropriation for this Bureau was $2,250,000. In 1929, $2,250,000 was appropriated, with a deficiency appropriation of $95,000. In 1930, $2,307,000 was appropriated with a deficiency appropriation of $350,000. In 1931 the appropriation was $2,781,000. In 1932 the appropriation was $2,978,000. In 1933 the appropriation was $2,775,000, and in 1934 the appropriation was $2,589,000. In 1935, just 1 year ago, the appropriation was $2,880,000.

On account of the laws which have been mentioned so frequently here, the laws which were passed last year, there was added to the regular appropriation for the Bureau a deficiency appropriation of a million and a half dollars. That made $4,600,000 plus, and Congress for the fiscal year 1935–36 provided for an appropriation of $5,000,000.

Virtually everything that was asked has been given. Everything Mr. Hoover and Budget Bureau recommended has been given, $5,800,000. But for some reason the House added $225,000 to the Budget estimate, and to the amount Mr. Hoover first asked, explaining how it was to be spent, including the amounts for these very employees. The $5,800,000 more than pays for the employees, $350,000 more, and it seems to me there is no use in appropriating a larger sum at this time.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does the $225,000 reduction of the committee reduce the estimate of Mr. Hoover?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not a particle. It is exactly the estimate which went to the Budget Bureau and which the Budget Bureau allowed.

We all know what the Budget law provides. The Budget law requires that estimates be furnished to the Bureau of the Budget, the Budget Bureau passes on them, and the law provides that the departments shall not ask for an increase over the Budget estimate. But the House provided $225,000 additional.

Mr. President, that $225,000 has not been estimated for, the Budget Bureau did not allow it, Mr. Hoover did not ask for it in the beginning, and the idea that we are going to hurt the service by not appropriating the additional $225,000 is, to my mind, preposterous.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, can the Senator identify the $225,000 added by the House somewhere in the appropriation bill and tell what it is for?

Mr. McKELLAR. It was just added by the House, and I do not believe there was any discussion about it. In the report there was a statement about it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will look at pages 158 and 159 of the hearings he will find the break-down of the expenditure of the $6,025,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it is found on pages 158 and 159 of the hearings.

Mr. COPELAND. I call attention particularly to the request which had to do with fingerprint classifiers, and so forth. It was brought out that there are received by the Bureau of Investigation about 3,700 prints a day, and, as I see the matter, the fact that we have a central place where fingerprints are collected and classified gives to every peace officer in the United States a new arm against the criminal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senate committee has allowed the full amount of the Budget estimate, as much as was asked for in the beginning, and it seems to me there is no reason in the world for adding $225,000. One hundred and seventy-three additional employees would not cost any such sum as that, and no such sum is asked for. So, Mr. President, I submit the matter to the Senate to do whatever it wishes.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, when this matter came before the Committee on Appropriations, after listening to the testimony I concluded that the House had done about right in increasing the appropriation, and I made what fight I could to have the House appropriation adopted, but I was not successful.

Mr. Hoover came before the committee, and he made an excellent impression on me. I believe he was discussing matters with which he is thoroughly familiar, and I think he showed that he needs the additional amount provided by the House over and above the Budget figures, if he is to carry on his Bureau as it should be carried on.

In the House hearings Mr. Hoover made the following statement:

> The actual personnel at the seat of Government, working in the main Bureau, on the investigational side, is 300; in the identification division, the number of personnel actually working now is 473, and in the statistical division the number is 13. Under the set-up in the requested appropriation—

That is, the set-up under the Budget figures which have been adopted by the Committee on Appropriations—

> there will be 275 in the main Bureau, or 25 less than we have today; 468 in the identification division, or 5 less than we have today, and 11 in the statistical division, 2 less than we have today.

Senators who have spoken against the committee's action have shown, and shown clearly, that the work of the Bureau of Investigation is increasing all the time, due in large part to the new legislation which has been enacted during the past few years. That more people are now at work in the home office of the Bureau than would be allowed under the Budget set-up is accounted for by the fact that it has been necessary to cut down on the field work and bring field workers to Washington to do the work here, and, of course, the field work is of the greatest importance if the Bureau is to function successfully.

Another matter which has been spoken of is that the Bureau of Investigation brings back money to the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was testified that the Bureau brought back to the Government $38,000,000 in fines. As a matter of fact, when the report of the Attorney General was examined, it was found that about two and a half million dollars was actually brought in to the Government.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, I will explain that. I think they report in fines and recoveries a sum in the neighborhood of $38,000,000. In that $38,000,000 a certain amount, probably between two and three million dollars, comes in as fines which are actually paid to the Government. The other sums that are recovered in the different cases do not go to the Government, but go to private individuals.

Mr. McKELLAR. No, Mr. President, I think the Senator is mistaken about that. The way it was accounted for was that $38,000,000 were counted as being saved to the Government.

Mr. HALE. In the form of fines and recoveries.

Mr. McKELLAR. As being saved to the Government on war-risk insurance cases, which included every war-risk insurance case that was tried in all the courts of the United States.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken. The war-risk insurance savings to the Government are $70,000,000, as the House report, I think, shows. The money returned to the Government and to private individuals in the form of fines and recoveries is $38,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will look on page 174 of Mr. Hoover's testimony, he will find this statement:

> Fines (all cases)—
> He claims credit for all cases of fines—
> $333,974.68.
> Recoveries (automobiles, etc.), $2,209,278.55.
> Court of Claims savings, $400,270.85.
> I'm Alone case, $336,136.68.
> War-risk litigation, savings—
> Savings to the Government of every war-risk case—
> $35,202,025.41.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I will read from the report of the Committee of the House of Representatives:

> Investigation of war-risk insurance cases, a somewhat prosaic task in comparison with other duties, but of extreme importance in stamping out fraud and conserving Government moneys, has resulted in investigations of 6,352 cases by the agents of the Bureau. Since the work was taken over from the Veterans' Administration in September of 1933 awards to plaintiffs in these cases have amounted to about $9,000,000, while savings to the Government in amounts claimed but not allowed aggregate nearly $72,000,000.

The discrepancy between what the Senator from Tennessee said and what I said is probably accounted for by the fact that the figures I gave covered a period of 2 years. The figures show the financial value of the work the Bureau has done.

I desire to call attention to one other matter. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] referred to the cases that the Department had not been able to handle on account of not having sufficient funds with which to operate. I have here, on page 95 of the House hearings, a list of the unassigned cases as of February 1, 1936. In the list of unassigned cases which the Bureau has not been able to take up because it did not have money enough to take them up, I find 33 kidnaping cases; extortion cases, 53; narcotics, 1; Veterans' Administration matters, 28; cases arising under National Motor Vehicle Theft Act, 609; and so forth and so on. This list indicates the great need for additional funds on the part of the Bureau if it is to handle successfully the matters that are put before it.

I very much hope the committee amendment will be rejected.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, for the moment I withdraw my request for the yeas and nays and suggest that a viva-voce vote be taken. It is my understanding that the question arises on the committee amendment, and that those who are in favor of reducing the appropriation will vote "yea" and those who are opposed to reducing it will vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has correctly stated the parliamentary situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, so that there may not be any question about the kidnaping cases, I read from Mr. Hoover's testimony as follows:

> How many kidnaping cases have you in your Department at the present time?
> Mr. HOOVER. Do you mean active?
> Yes.
> Mr. HOOVER. We have three active that we are working on at the present time.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that exactly confirms what I said: 3 active and 33 inactive cases which for one reason or another they were unable to handle.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether it is conceded that these cases are inactive because the funds available are insufficient to enable the Investigation Bureau to proceed. Is there any dispute about that?

Mr. HALE. I cannot give the Senator any information as to that. I simply have the list of cases that are on the inactive list, and we were assured by Mr. Hoover that he could not take up many of the cases that were on the inactive list because of lack of funds.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if I may, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that the Budget estimate and the Senate committee have increased the appropriation this year over last year by the enormous sum of $800,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand that; but the Congress, by measures we have passed here, has enormously increased the work of the Bureau, and the thought in my mind is one that has been suggested by publications I have read—that it is not good economy to deny this agency the amount that is alleged to be necessary to enable it to perform its functions with the high degree of efficiency that has marked its service during recent months.

It has not been many months since the country was terrified by kidnaping cases occurring in many localities; and it was the promptness, the diligence, the irresistible drive that was made by this Bureau that struck terror to the hearts of the gangsters who at that time were threatening to overrun the country.

I doubt if anything has even been done more splendidly, more irresistibly, than the drive that has been made against these criminal gangsters. I would not revive, by any act or vote of mine, one hope in the bosom of a gangster by withholding the means that are necessary to pursue him around this earth, to the very gates of hell, if possible, and to wrestle with him for his liberty or his blood.

I have not had the opportunity of studying the case thoroughly. For my part, I should be very reluctant to cast a vote that would indicate an unwillingness to supply any reasonable funds that may be used in stopping and preventing the reign of terror which has existed through this country in recent years because of the power of the gangsters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, all the laws which the Senator from Arkansas has just mentioned, because of the enactment of which additional work was put upon the Bureau of Investigation, were passed last year, and the Congress then allowed the Bureau $5,000,000. The Senator says the work has been well done. Let us assume that to be so.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like information on the subject. Is it not true that it has been well done and fearlessly done?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know; I cannot say; I am not thoroughly informed about the matter. If I expressed a view upon it, I might make a mistake, and I do not want to make a mistake. I am just as much opposed, however, to crime of any kind as is any other Member of this body; but the laws to which reference has been made were passed last year; $5,000,000 was put in the hands of the Bureau to enforce those laws, and Senators say that they have been well enforced. Let us assume that to be so. We have added to the appropriation by this bill $800,000 for additional help in enforcing these laws. So, under all the circumstances, since the Budget Bureau, which heard all the facts, allowed $800,000 additional to what was allowed last year, and we have a Budget law which we all propose to observe, it seems to me that that addition is sufficient.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee on page 36, lines 13 and 14.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 36, at the end of line 20, to strike out "$100" and insert "$50", so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) shall not be construed to apply to any purchase or service rendered for the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the field when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed the sum of $50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Department of Justice", on page 38, line 16, to strike out "$420,000" and insert "$435,000", so as to read:

Enforcement of antitrust and kindred laws: For the enforcement of antitrust and kindred laws, including experts at such rates of compensation as may be authorized or approved by the Attorney General, including not to exceed $100,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia, $435,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Judicial—United States Court for China", on page 43, line 25, after the name "China", to insert "allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 118a), not to exceed $1,700 for any one person", and in line 19, after the word "court", to strike out "$41,610" and insert "$49,375", so as to read:

United States Court for China: For salaries of the judge, district attorney, and other officers and employees of the United States Court for China; allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 118a), not to exceed $1,700 for any one person; court expenses, including reference and law books, printing and binding, ice and drinking water for office purposes, traveling expenses of officers and employees of the court, and under such regulations as the Attorney General may prescribe of their families and effects, in going to and returning from their posts; preparation and transportation of remains of officers and employees who may die abroad or in transit while in the discharge of their official duties, to their former homes in the United States, or to a place not more distant for interment and for the ordinary expenses of such interment; the expense of maintaining in China American convicts and persons declared insane by the court, rent of quarters for prisoners, ice and drinking water for prison purposes, including wages of prison keepers, and the expense of keeping, feeding, and transporting prisoners and persons declared insane by the court, $49,375.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the bill, was any effort made by the Department of Justice to increase the allowance for subsistence of district judges who are called to serve in jurisdictions other than those to which they are regularly assigned?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; there was not. No estimate was made for it, and no complaint was made in reference to the Budget estimate that was presented.

Mr. COPELAND. I am sorry, particularly because of conditions in the southern district of New York. If the subsistence allowance were $10 a day, as it used to be, instead of $5 a day, as it is now, there would be no difficulty in having judges assigned to take care of the cases; but, as it is, judges assigned to that district cannot live on the subsistence allowed. They cannot hire a room in New York for $5 a day.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield, I should like to say to him that I am going to introduce a bill tomorrow for the purpose of authorizing an increase in the allowance from $5 to $10 a day, and I am very hopeful that the bill may be enacted, for I agree with what my colleague has said.

Mr. COPELAND. I am very glad to learn of the bill that my colleague is going to introduce; I should say that there are a thousand reasons why it ought to be enacted, and I hope it will be speedily enacted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the present law authorizes the charges and fees and allowances, and, of course, the Appropriations Committee cannot go beyond them. The Senator from New York is doing exactly the right thing if he wants to change the law to introduce a bill to that effect.

Mr. WAGNER. That is what I propose to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on page 43, line 25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Marshals, and other expenses of United States courts", on page 45, line 8, after the word "marshals", to strike out "$3,285,000" and insert "$3,300,000", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses of marshals, etc.: For salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies, including services rendered in behalf of the United States or otherwise, services in Alaska in collecting evidence for the United States when so specifically directed by the Attorney General, traveling expenses, purchase, when authorized by the Attorney General, of 10 motor-propelled passenger-carrying vans at not to exceed $2,000 each, and maintenance, alteration, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles used in connection with the transaction of the official business of the United States marshals, $3,300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 16, after the word "attorney", to strike out "$3,063,000" and insert "$3,083,510", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses of district attorneys, etc.: For salaries, traveling, and other expenses of United States district attorneys and their regular assistants, clerks, and other employees, including the office expenses of United States district attorneys in Alaska, and for salaries of regularly appointed clerks to United States district attorneys for services rendered during vacancy in the office of the United States district attorney, $3,083,510.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 21, after the words "special cases" and the comma, to strike out "and for payment of foreign counsel employed by the Attorney General in special cases, $500,000" and insert "$700,000"; and in line 25, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$10,000" and insert "the rate of $10,000 per annum", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses of special attorneys, etc.: For compensation and traveling expenses of special attorneys and assistants to the Attorney General and to United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases, $700,000: Provided, That the amount paid as compensation out of the funds herein appropriated to any person employed hereunder shall not exceed the rate of $10,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 12, after the word "offices", to strike out "$2,095,650" and insert "$2,125,000", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses, clerks of courts: For salaries of clerks of United States circuit courts of appeals and United States district courts, their deputies, and other assistants, traveling expenses pursuant to the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 821–833), and other expenses of conducting their respective offices, $2,125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 22, to insert:

The salaries of all judges, the Attorney General, Assistant Attorneys General, the Solicitor, district attorneys, marshals, and clerks of court shall be allotted out of the appropriations made herein and retained by the Department and paid to such officials severally, as and when such salaries fall due and without delay; and no transfer of such allotments to any other use or any other bureau or division shall be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Penal and correctional institutions", on page 56, line 24, before the word "for", to strike out "$111,000" an insert "$113,625"; and in line 25, after the word "employees", to strike out "$215,000" and insert "$236,470", so as to read:

National Training School for Boys, Washington, D. C.: For the National Training School for Boys, Washington, D. C., including not to exceed $750 for the purchase of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and expenses of a suitable attendant to accompany the remains of deceased inmates to their homes for burial; and including not to exceed $113,625 for salaries and wages of all officers and employees, $236,470.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title III—Department of Commerce—Office of the Secretary", on page 60, after line 23, to insert:

Not to exceed $10,000 of the appropriations for the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, for the purchase of equipment or supplies shall be available for the purchase of letters patent, applications for letters patent, and licenses under letters patent that pertain to equipment, supplies, or business which the said Department of Commerce is authorized to purchase, use, or transact when the Secretary of Commerce shall personally certify that such purchase is necessary in the public interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Air Commerce", on page 61, line 25, after the word "grant", to strike out "$942,920" and insert "$832,920"; so as to read:

Establishment of air-navigation facilities: For the establishment of aids to air navigation, including the equipment of additional air-mail routes for day and night flying; the construction of necessary lighting, radio, and other signaling and communicating structures and apparatus; investigation, research, and experimentation to develop and improve aids to air navigation; aircraft, aircraft power plants, and accessories; for personal services in the field; purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use in field work, including their exchange; replacement, including exchange, of not to exceed two airplanes for service use and two for experimental purposes; special clothing, wearing apparel, and suitable equipment for aviation purposes; and for the acquisition of the necessary sites by lease or grant, $832,920, of which not to exceed $150,000 shall be available immediately:

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish I might have the attention of the Senate, and particularly of the Senator in charge of the bill, to this item. It has to do with safety in the air.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Senator from New York to the item in line 10, page 62, immediately following the page on which the pending amendment appears? The amount has been restored at that point and even more granted. So the committee has done just what the Senator has in mind ought to have been done.

Mr. COPELAND. I appreciate that greatly. But I intend, when I have the right to offer an amendment, to suggest a change in the language in the paragraph we are now discussing. I observe, however, that the committee has included the additional amount.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has been taken out of one item and more than made up in the next, in accordance with what the Senator has suggested.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. My only regret is that the amount allowed was not larger, but at least the committee has done what it could.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on page 61, line 25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 10, after the word "field", to strike out "$4,523,080" and insert "$4,764,080", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Labor Statistics", on page 103, line 1, after the word "Bureau", to strike out "$748,000" and insert "$884,600"; and in line 2, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$600,000" and insert "$640,000", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: For personal services, including temporary statistical clerks, stenographers, and typewriters in the District of Columbia, and including also experts and temporary assistants for field service outside of the District of Columbia; traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Bureau of Labor Statistics when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Labor; purchase of periodicals, documents, envelopes, price quotations, and reports and materials for reports and bulletins of said Bureau, $884,600, of which amount not to exceed $640,000 may be expended for the salary of the Commissioner and other personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "United States Employment Service", on page 110, line 1, after the word "and" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "miscellaneous expenses, $2,785,000, of which amount not to exceed $885,000 shall be available for the Veterans' Placement Service, the Farm Placement Service, District of Columbia Public Employment Center, and all other purposes, including not to exceed $197,500 for personal services in the Department in the District of Columbia, and not more than $1,900,000 shall be available for apportionment among the several States: Provided, That the conditional indefinite appropriation to supply the Government's apportionments to States qualifying under said act for the first time provided for in appropriation act of March 22, 1935 (49 Stat. 104), shall continue available for the fiscal year 1937", and in lieu thereof to insert "miscellaneous expenses, $2,807,500, of which amount not to exceed $907,500 shall be available for the Veterans' Placement Service, the Farm Placement Service, District of Columbia Public Employment Center, and all other purposes, including not to exceed $220,000 for personal services in the Department in the District of Columbia, and the remainder shall be available for payment to the several States in accordance with the provisions of the said act of June 6, 1933, as amended: Provided, That apportionments for the fiscal year 1937 shall be on the basis of a total apportionment to all States of $3,000,000, and in order to supply the Government's apportionments to States under such act during the fiscal years 1936 and 1937, which are not capable of being supplied under the foregoing appropriation, there is hereby appropriated so much as may be necessary to supply such apportionments, but not more than $1,675,000", so as to read:

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a national employment system and for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such system, and for other purposes", approved June 6, 1933; personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the United States Employment Service when specifically authorized by the Secretary of Labor; law books, books of reference, newspapers and periodicals, printing and binding, supplies and equipment, telegraph and telephone service, and miscellaneous expenses, $2,807,500, of which amount not to exceed $907,500 shall be available for the Veterans' Placement Service, the Farm Placement Service, District of Columbia Public Employment Center, and all other purposes, including not to exceed $220,000 for personal services in the Department in the District of Columbia, and the remainder shall be available for payment to the several States in accordance with the provisions of the said act of June 6, 1933, as amended: Provided, That apportionments for the fiscal year 1937 shall be on the basis of a total apportionment to all States of $3,000,000, and in order to supply the Government's apportionments to States under such act during the fiscal years 1936 and 1937, which are not capable of being supplied under the foregoing appropriation, there is hereby appropriated so much as may be necessary to supply such apportionments, but not more than $1,675,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments appearing in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. On behalf of the committee, I offer an amendment, to come in on page 28, and ask the clerk to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 28, in line 6, after the word "salary", it is proposed to insert the words "or honorarium."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer two other amendments on behalf of the committee, and ask that the first one be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 80, line 21, it is proposed to strike out "$4,034,000", and in lieu thereof to insert "$4,424,000, of which $390,000 shall be immediately available for repairs, etc., due to storm and ice damage."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 113, after line 5, after the amendment heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 4. Great Lakes Exposition: For the expenses of the participation of the Government of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition as provided for by Senate Joint Resolution 233, including the reimbursement of other appropriations from which payments may have been made for any of the purposes therein specified, to be immediately available, $275,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Ohio if the amount proposed by the amendment has been authorized or has the amendment otherwise been brought within the rule?

Mr. BULKLEY. The joint resolution authorizing the appropriation has passed both Houses of Congress, but has not as yet been signed by the President. It is in order under the rule.

Mr. McKELLAR. It would be in order under our rules, as I understand, and I have no objection to the amendment going to conference, at any rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated:

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

That in passing upon applications made for compensation under the provisions of the item for "Payment to cotton ginners" contained in title I of the Supplemental Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936 (Public Law No. 440, 74th Cong.), and in making payments pursuant to such applications, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed, in the interest of saving as much administrative expense as possible and in order to avoid delay in passing upon such applications, to accept as sufficient proof in connection with any such application, proof of the number of bales ginned by the applicant during the period June 1, 1935, to February 10, 1936, inclusive: Provided, That no payment shall be made on any application for such compensation unless the application is filed prior to September 1, 1936.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, let me explain the purpose of the amendment. The supplemental appropriation bill authorized the payment to cotton ginners of an amount to compensate them for work done in the administration of the Bankhead Act. In order to make such payments the Agricultural Department prepared forms for the ginners to file showing the number of bales ginned. These applications they proposed to check. The Comptroller General, however, took the position that under the language of the act he would have to require an investigation in each case in order to determine the actual expense incurred by the applicant and whether or not it had been passed on to any other person. The language of the original act may justify the interpretation of the Comptroller.

The estimate of the Department of Agriculture is that to administer the law in accordance with the requirement of the Comptroller General would cost $684,400. The forms that were prepared by the Department of Agriculture and the investigations they intend to make would involve an administrative cost of not exceeding $38,000. It certainly is the desire of Congress to have the Department administer the fund in the most inexpensive manner possible. It can be done by the adoption of this amendment fixing the proof to be required by the Comptroller General.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Carolina if this is not what we thought we had done in the previous appropriation bill?

Mr. BYRNES. It is. It is what Congress intended to do and what we thought would be done, and that the payments would have been made long ago. They have not been made because of the difference in views of the Department of Agriculture and the General Accounting Office as to the law.

Mr. GEORGE. The compensation to the ginners has been regarded as just by all those who appreciate the work put upon them.

Mr. BYRNES. It has been; but if this amendment be not adopted a large percentage of the money will have to be paid for costs of administration.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I understand the Sentor's amendment simply provides that 25 cents per bale shall be paid and do away with all the red tape of investigation?

Mr. BYRNES. That is the effect, that upon satisfactory proof of the number of bales ginned it shall be accepted as sufficient proof of the expense incurred, and then payment can be made without sending an investigator to each county to examine the books of the cotton ginners.

Mr. CONNALLY. It would really result in economy?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, the Senator from South Carolina had already given the necessary notice to make the amendment in order at this time on the bill?

Mr. BYRNES. I did give such notice.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the amendment should be adopted by all means. I am very heartily in favor of it, and hope the Senate will adopt it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 30, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "each", in line 16, down to and including line 22, as follows:

Provided further, That from any sums received from the Mexican Government in settlement of a general claim of an American citizen against it, there shall be deducted and deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, 5 percent thereof in reimbursement of the Government of the United States of expenses incurred by it in respect of such claim.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, the Senator desires to strike out the proviso?

Mr. DIETERICH. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator explain his purpose?

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, this proviso is in connection with the appropriation for the settlement and adjustment of claims between nationals of the United States and the Government of Mexico and the nationals of Mexico with the Government of the United States. Two conventions were held, one on September 8, 1923, and one on September 10, 1923. These conventions entered into protocols whereby it was agreed that the agency set up to adjust these claims would adjust them for the two Governments and that the respective Governments would pay to their own nationals the amounts of the claims, and the Governments would make settlement as between the nations when the claims were finally paid.

The proviso in question seeks arbitrarily to assess as costs 5 percent of the amount of the claim regardless of what the actual expense was in adjudicating the claim and regardless of the amount of the claim.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIETERICH. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. We had no hearings on this matter. It was not in controversy at all and was not mentioned in the committee, so far as I now recall. If the Senator desires, I am willing to accept the amendment and take it to conference, but I cannot say what might happen to it there.

Mr. DIETERICH. I can assure the Senator I do not want the amendment to be accepted without explanation, because it happens that among the nationals who presented claims before the General Claims Commission was the Illinois Central Railroad, a corporation chartered by the State of Illinois, a corporation which pays into the State treasury of Illinois a certain percentage of its earnings. This railroad company had sold to the Mexican Government some 74 locomotives for a consideration of something like $1,400,000. They had been sold some years prior to the time the conventions met, and the interest which had accrued amounted approximately to $400,000.

There was no controversy about the claim. It took no time to adjust the claim. One of the defenses made when the claim was presented to the Commission was that there was no controversy. The fact is that the agents of the Illinois Central Railroad Co. had negotiated a settlement with the Government of Mexico whereby they were to receive some $1,400,000.

When the Claims Commission was created the company was informed that if it proceeded with that settlement, which contemplated payment of the claim at the rate of $100,000 per month and under which settlement it would have been long since paid, the matter would be taken out of the hands of the Claims Commission and the railroad company would be jeopardizing its rights. There was no controversy about the claim. No one denied the liability. It was not like some other claims where considerable time and considerable expense were involved in the adjudication.

Now, arbitrarily to say that there should be assessed 5 percent, or over $100,000 for the adjustment of a claim that was admitted is manifestly unjust. No such sum should be assessed as part of the costs of adjudicating a claim where, as a matter of fact, no costs whatsoever were incurred. If the costs should be assessed against the claimants at all, they should be assessed in accordance with the rule under which all other costs are assessed—on the basis of the actual expense of litigating the claim.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIETERICH. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the Senator aware that even in the settlement of claims before a special claims commission the expenses of the whole organization are deducted from the amount going to the claimants, because the whole proceeding is for the benefit of the claimants and it is for them that the Government incurs the expenditures? It would be difficult to take each claim and figure out its proportionate cost.

Mr. DIETERICH. I understand that, and I understand that in Texas there were some very small claims presented. In fact, the entire work of the commission and the expense of the commission has been in the adjudication of land claims and various other small claims, but here is a claim as to which there was no controversy at all, a claim that was allowed by this commission in 1926, some 10 years ago, and never has a payment been made—a claim that was taken out of the hands of the negotiators.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I am not trying to contest his claim. I have no objection to it. I am somewhat familiar with the practice of the Government as to all such claims, however, and I merely wished to make to the Senator the suggestion I have made.

Mr. DIETERICH. I desire to say to the Senator from Texas that I am interesting myself in the matter of the Mexican Claims Commission. I have had great difficulty in finding out just exactly what it has done, what it has accomplished, and what it expects to do. It has changed the entire intent of the statute authorizing its creation. At a later time during the present session I expect to ask the attention of the Senate while I discuss the question of the Mexican Claims Commission; but I say to the Senator who has charge of the bill that certainly it would be unjust to penalize this claimant, who has so long been held out of his money, by an arbitrary assessment to defray the expenses of the Commission in adjusting other claims.

With that explanation I will accept the Senator's proposal.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question about the matter? If the Senator's amendment is agreed to by the Senate, and the conferees agree to it, of course the United States will not be reimbursed at all by any of the claimants.

Mr. DIETERICH. This is the first time a provision of this kind has been placed in one of the appropriation bills.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the Senator can easily understand that if the Government goes to great expense in recovering the amounts of these claims, it ought to be reimbursed for that expense.

Mr. DIETERICH. Let me advise the Senator that each claim is separate. The Senator says that if the Government goes to great expense, it should be reimbursed. If the Government goes to great expense on a particular claim, that claimant should stand part of the expense, whatever a reasonable part would be; but another claimant should not be forced to contribute to such expense. That would be unjust.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think I understand the Senator's position in the matter; and I have no objection to the amendment being adopted and letting it go to conference, without prejudice to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert, at the proper place in the bill, the following:

BUREAU OF FISHERIES

For the acquisition by the Bureau of Fisheries of a site for a fish hatchery at Jessups Mill, near Glacier National Park in the State of Montana, $10,000; which shall be immediately available.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, this amendment is for the purpose of providing a site for a fish hatchery near Glacier National Park, in Montana. A project for the construction of such a hatchery has been provided for, and $65,000 was allocated by the W. P. A. for that purpose. This appropriation is essential to provide the site which is described in the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether this item has been estimated for?

Mr. MURRAY. I am not sure whether or not it has been estimated for. The amendment was intended to be proposed by my colleague the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], but he is unavoidably detained. I understand it has the approval of the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator know whether or not any law has been passed authorizing the establishment of the hatchery, or whether any bill has been introduced for the purpose?

Mr. MURRAY. I know that the Commissioner of Fisheries has written a letter in which he approves this site.

Mr. McKELLAR. Suppose the Senator puts the letter in the RECORD. Then I shall have no objection to taking the amendment to conference.

Mr. MURRAY. I ask that the letter be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, April 16, 1936.

Subject: Inspection fish-hatchery sites, Glacier National Park.
Memorandum for Senator BURTON K. WHEELER.

The Bureau of Fisheries made several inspections of various sites in Glacier National Park for the establishment of a fish hatchery. The sites were visited both during the winter and summer months. The most favorable site for the location of a fish hatchery and one approved by the National Park Service requires that the water supply be obtained from a stream.

During the winter months when the site was inspected in Glacier National Park, it was found that due to the low temperatures prevailing in the park the stream was covered with ice and the water temperature was not suitable for the incubation of trout eggs. It was also found that if this water supply was to be used in ponds it would probably freeze solid. Therefore, a hatchery located in Glacier National Park could not be operated during the winter months and would be suitable only for the purpose of rearing fish during a period of 3 or 4 months during the summer.

In view of the fact that it is necessary to establish a hatchery in this region where eggs may be incubated and fish reared in ponds, an investigation was made of sites outside of the park and a suitable spring-water supply was found at a place known as Jessups Mill, approximately 12 miles from Kalispell. This site is in close proximity to Glacier National Park and because of weather conditions it will be accessible during the winter months. The Bureau of Fisheries, therefore, favors the Jessups Mill site and is not in favor of expending funds for the establishment of a fish hatchery in Glacier National Park due to the unsuitable water supply and weather conditions during the winter months.

FRANK S. BELL, Commissioner.

(Through Administration Assistant, Department of Commerce.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana is agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the able Senator in charge of the bill, on page 61, line 16, I move that there be inserted at the beginning of the line, before the word "investigation", the words "not to exceed $50,000 for"; so that, if amended, the clause will read:

Not to exceed $50,000 for investigation, research, and experimentation to develop and improve aids to air navigation.

Then I move that lines 21 and 22 be stricken from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator state just what would be the effect of his amendment to this provision of the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes. First, let me say as to the two lines which I have asked to have stricken out that the language is:

Replacement, including exchange, of not to exceed two airplanes for service use and two for experimental purposes.

If the Senator will turn over the page, at the bottom of page 62 he will find that provision is made for the exchange of airplanes, not to exceed $16,500. What I desire to accomplish by my amendment, if the Senator shall see fit to take it to conference, is to make sure that there is not a transfer of funds within the appropriation, so that the amount of money which is to be used for investigation shall be limited to $50,000, and all the rest of the fund shall be used largely for construction of necessary lighting, radio, and other signalling and communicating structures and apparatus.

In order that the RECORD may show why I am asking this, I make reference to the latest airplane accident, the one which happened a few days ago this side of Pittsburgh.

The Pittsburgh area is called the graveyard of airplane pilots. Of course, there are several reasons why there should be more accidents at Pittsburgh than at other places, because it is a great transfer point; and yet the amount of business actually done and the amount of traffic actually passing through Pittsburgh is not more than the amount actually passing through Newark or through Chicago. Unfortunately, however, Pittsburgh is situated in the mountains, and it is an interesting thing about the radio beams that they may be split; they may be divided by contact with ice, and sometimes static occurs by reason of snow.

In the last accident the poor chap in charge of the plane, the pilot, thought he was at a point the name of which I have forgotten for the moment, but a place 40 miles beyond where he really was. He thought he was on the northeast edge of a radio beam directing him to Pittsburgh. As a matter of fact, he was 40 miles south of where he thought he was, and was on the edge of a radio beam which was directed toward Pittsburgh, but which led him into the mountains in an unfamiliar terrain. He was familiar with the terrain he thought he was on and knew there was no mountain there over 2,000 feet in elevation; but, as it was, he found himself in a section where looming up before him was a mountain 2,900 feet high, and he was so pocketed that it was not possible for him to get the elevation necessary to go over the mountain, and so he went bang into the mountain. That probably is the explanation of that particular accident.

The accident in which the late Senator Cutting lost his life was a similar one. It came from much the same causes. I am not going to detain the Senate to discuss that accident at the present time, because a full report of it will be made in the near future. I have said these things to point out how necessary it is that money should be spent for safety on the ground. In our ground devices and in our apparatus having to do with the direction of planes we are not keeping pace with the progress of the art as is the airplane itself.

We must do one of two things as I see the matter, Mr. President: Either we must provide these devices—the radio beam, the lighting of the fields, the weather reports, and the other things which have to do with safety in flying—or else we must say, "You must ground your planes and not fly."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I understand, the principal purpose of the Senator is to furnish a specific sum of $50,000 for further investigation and research and experimentation primarily in relation to what, I believe, is called the splitting of beams, a separation of the beams before the destination is reached.

Mr. COPELAND. It is not so much that as it is to place a limitation upon investigation in the Department, and to insure the spending of the money largely for safety devices. The reason why I say that is because the industry itself is spending millions of dollars for investigation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator, and I think the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before yielding, so that the record may be complete at the time we do this, let me say that I was swung out of beat a moment ago about the amendment at the bottom of page 61, in line 25. I think we should restore the House language in order that there may be assurance that a considerable amount of time shall actually be devoted to the very work which has met the approval of the Senator in charge of the bill.

I should not be satisfied to stop with this sum of money if it were not for the fact that by courtesy of the chairman of the subcommittee we had a very full hearing before the subcommittee the other day, at which we presented the reasons why a large sum, $5,000,000, should be used for these devices.

The purpose of that hearing was not to go so far above the Budget in this bill as it was to produce the argument and have it ready for the Director of the Budget, and since we had the hearing I have sent to Mr. Bell, the Director of the Budget, a record of what we did in the committee. But we will not do our duty to the American people if we adjourn this session of the Congress without providing at least $5,000,000, in addition to what we have in this bill, to insure a greater degree of safety in flying.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield, but I wish to say to the Senator, in doing so, that the Senator from Missouri is well aware of the fact that we have a committee investigating the death of our late beloved colleague, Senator Cutting; we have had extensive hearings, and no member of the committee has been more faithful in his attendance than has the Senator from Missouri, and he has given the committee the benefit of his advice and aid.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New York very much for his kind reference to me. I simply desire to recall to the Senator from New York what I know he has in mind, the fact that very large sums of money have been appropriated for safety in the air from time to time, which to a very large extent, as the testimony before our committee shows, have been wasted. I am in favor of appropriating every single penny that can possibly be spent to increase the safety of the airways, but the testimony before our committee has disclosed that in one investigation of the maintenance of the airways of the United States as much as $2,000,000 worth of property having to do with safety has been found in one airport alone which was not carried on the books of the Department of Commerce and has not been accounted for. It was shown that in some instances property designed and purchased for the purpose of insuring safety in the airways had been put aside in warehouses, or in some cases stored in barns, and not taken out of the original crates until it had become obsolete. So that while I agree with the Senator from New York that Congress ought to appropriate as much money as is necessary in order to promote safety of travel in the air, some method ought to be devised by which the Congress can be certain that the money is spent for the purposes for which it is appropriated.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield, but I desire to say that I agree fully with the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, and I may say to the Senator from Missouri that the amendment providing that "not to exceed $50,000 for investigation, research, and experimentation to develop and improve aids to air navigation", makes it a direct appropriation for that purpose, and the Department must so use it, as I understand the Senator's amendment. Under those circumstances it seems to me the amendment is very proper.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am in entire sympathy with the expenditure of whatever money may be necessary to make air travel safer for passengers and for pilots. I am not certain that I understood the full purpose of the Senator's amendment, but it seems to me that the Congress not only should provide the necessary money for safety devices, emergency fields, and things of that kind, but that there also ought to be an impartial public investigation of such unfortunate accidents as have occurred. Therefore I hope the Senator's amendment will not have the effect of curtailing or perhaps preventing the proper investigation by impartial authorities of airplane accidents.

Mr. COPELAND. I may say to the Senator that what we are proposing today by this amendment is a very small part of what we are going to bring to the Senate. We are proceeding with the greatest earnestness to get to the very bottom of the causes of the accidents which have happened. We think we have learned a great deal. We have not been quite prepared to make any pronouncement as yet, because, frankly, some of the testimony has been a reflection upon the Department, and the Department itself has not had a chance to be heard; but it is to be heard. Next week we hope to begin on Tuesday with the Department's presentation; I do not want to call it rebuttal, but it will be evidence to clarify the testimony which has been presented to us. I may say to the Senator also that I am sure that before the end of the session we will present a report which will gladden his heart, from the reflection that possibly out of the disaster which came to his great friend, and to our friend, perhaps some permanent good may come, so that in the future there may not be other accidents.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, I was not referring to the investigation being made by the committee of which the Senator from New York is chairman. As I understand, when accidents occur, the Department of Commerce conducts investigations, and I gathered that the Senator's amendment was designed to allow only $50,000 for the investigation of such accidents.

Mr. COPELAND. No; the Senator has misunderstood. This item is for scientific investigation and research. It has nothing to do with the investigation of accidents.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senator from New York to the language on the bottom of the page, where the amendment has been agreed to making the appropriation $832,920. In order to make the amendment of the Senator from New York effective and not to disturb the remainder of the bill, he will have to ask that that appropriation be increased to $882,920. That will effect what the Senator desires.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well, Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment making the appropriation $832,920 was agreed to be reconsidered, in order that I may move to make the amount $882,920.

Mr. ROBINSON. The effect would be to increase the appropriation by $50,000?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; and the $50,000 is to be used exclusively for investigations, and the rest of the money is to be used for improving the airways.

Mr. ROBINSON. I myself made some inquiry into that subject during recent days, and I commend the position of the Senator from New York in insisting on the improvement of the aids to air navigation, those physical agencies such as lighting and ground work. It is very essential that they should be improved. The effect of his amendment will be to make certain that a liberal fund will be available for those purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the committee amendment on page 61, line 25, was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the figures on page 61, line 25, be increased to $882,920.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have moved that lines 21 and 22, page 61, be stricken from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from New York offered an amendment, on page 61, line 15, after the word "apparatus" and the semicolon, to insert the words "not to exceed $50,000 for."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to page 70, beginning with line 12. This paragraph has to do with the operation of foreign-trade zones. The Senator in charge of the bill will recall that among the recommendations made by the Department of Commerce, as found in the hearings beginning on page 63, and, to be specific, appearing on page 71, it was strongly urged that the figure which is found on line 23, the sum of $25,000, be changed to $35,000.

Last year the appropriation was $30,000. This year the Budget Bureau allowed $35,000, but the committee, I think, perhaps overlooked it in some manner.

Mr. McKELLAR. No, Mr. President; it was considered and voted down.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask the Senator if he would not be willing to take the amendment to conference. I am not asking him to fight, bleed, and die in the conference; but I ask that an opportunity be given to deal with the matter in the conference.

I have more than a passing interest in this question, because this appropriation is made to carry out the purposes of what was known as the Celler-Copeland bill, which became law on the 18th of June 1934. It has to do with the establishment of trade zones. It is a matter of great concern not alone to the port of New York but to other ports as well. There are two applicants for trade zones in New York Harbor.

On page 71 of the Senate committee hearings the Department says:

> The Board has before it at the present time three applications * * * to establish foreign-trade zones * * * in the port of San Juan, P. R., the port of San Francisco, Calif., and the port of Mobile, Ala. With the present staff, which includes only one examiner, no more than one of these applications can be investigated and a report rendered.

I know that in addition to those three ports, two others in my own State, which I have already mentioned to the Senate, and almost all the other ports on both coasts, the Atlantic and the Pacific, are giving consideration to the question of trade zones, including Portland, Maine, and Portland, Oreg. There is hardly a port in the country which is not studying the question of trade zones.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to the evidence on this matter appearing on page 91 of the House hearings:

> Mr. McMILLAN. The last item is for operations, and so forth, of foreign-trade zones, on page 54 of the subcommittee print. In 1936 there was appropriated $30,000 for this activity, and for the fiscal year 1937 there is estimated $35,000, an increase of $5,000. Do you anticipate any unexpended balance out of the current appropriation?
> Mr. DUNN. No, sir.
> Mrs. KAHN. May I ask two questions?
> Mr. McMILLAN. Yes.
> Mrs. KAHN. First, How many applications have you had for the creation of foreign-trade zones?
> Mr. DUNN. There have been four formal applications.
> Mrs. KAHN. And how many have been established?
> Mr. DUNN. One.
> Mrs. KAHN. That is in New York?
> Mr. DUNN. That is in New York.
> Mrs. KAHN. And San Francisco is applying. And what other city?
> Mr. DUNN. San Juan, P. R., and Mobile, Ala. There have been a great many informal inquiries.
> Mrs. KAHN. I know; but those are the only points that have made applications?
> Mr. DUNN. Yes.

Under that testimony, the House declined to make a change, and in like manner the Senate committee left the figure at $25,000. If the Senator desires to have the amendment taken to conference, I have no objection; but I cannot answer for what may be done there.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. I move that the figures be changed from $25,000 to $35,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 70, line 23, it is proposed to strike out "$25,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$35,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 36), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Vice President and of the Speaker of the House of Representatives in signing the enrolled bill (H. R. 4387) entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Barbara Blackstrom", be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of said bill the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed to insert the name "Backstrom" in lieu of the name "Blackstrom" where it appears in section 1 of the amendment of the Senate to the text of said bill and in the amended title.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 4387) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Barbara Backstrom, and it was signed by the Vice President.

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN CRIMINALS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2969) to authorize the deportation of criminals, to guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the noncriminal classes, to provide for legalizing the residence in the United States of certain classes of aliens, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] to recommit the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina completed his discussion of the bill early this afternoon. I then made the request that I be permitted to address some questions to him; but I find that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] will not be here on Friday afternoon, and for fear the bill will go over until that time I shall give way to him and let him discuss his amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the pending motion should prevail, there would be no need, of course, of a discussion of my amendment in the Senate at this time; but if the motion should not prevail, thereupon the question before the Senate would be my amendment.

It is quite possible that a consideration of my amendment might affect the vote on the motion to recommit the bill to the committee. If there is sufficient merit in my amendment to entitle it to a more careful study by the committee than can be made on the Senate floor, I should infer that votes would be gained for a recommittal of the bill to the committee. Therefore, I am led to explain my amendment and to make some comments about the bill, or the amendment to the bill, in connection with it.

I propose, on page 4, beginning with line 7, to strike out all after "1917" down to and including "turpitude", in line 10, and to substitute therefor the following:

(39 Stat. 874), relating to classes excluded entry thereby and classes excluded entry by laws referred to therein and not altered thereby, and classes deportable for causes other than having entered or being found in the United States without an immigration visa or a record of admission for permanent residence.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, is that amendment in the same form in which the Senator submitted it to the committee?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it is not. I think the amendment is very much improved, and I think its present form may meet the objections which were urged to the amendment in the committee. The thought came to me only after the discussion in the committee to add to the amendment a clause which I think meets the objections which I understood were made in the committee to the original proposal. These words are as follows:

And classes deportable for causes other than having entered or being found in the United States without an immigration visa or a record of admission for permanent residence.

I must explain that clause, or it would be wholly unintelligible.

Section 3 of the committee amendment, which is offered in the nature of a substitute for the original bill, reads as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) The Inter-Departmental Committee may permit to remain in the United States any alien who entered the United States prior to the date of the enactment of this act and is found subject to deportation, other than one deportable under the act of October 16, 1918, as amended by the act of June 5, 1920 (40 Stat. 1012; 41 Stat. 1008; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 8, sec. 137), or the act of May 26, 1922 (42 Stat. 596; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 21, sec. 175), or the act of February 18, 1931 (46 Stat. 1171; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 8, sec. 156a), or section 1 of this act, or the provisions of the act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 874; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 8, sec. 156), relating to prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons, if the alien is of good moral character and has not been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude—

I stop reading section 3, at that point, for the purpose of making an explanation. The words "or section 1 of this act, or the provisions of the act of February 5, 1917", are limited by the bill as drawn only to those convicts or criminals who come within the class of being prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons. This limited class is taken out of the discretionary power intended to be given by section 3, and would constitute an exception, as being deportable under the act of February 5, 1917, relating to prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons.

The purpose of the amendment is to remove from the discretionary power undertaken to be granted by section 3, all criminal cases. Whether the persons involved are prostitutes or procurers or other like immoral persons or what not, if they are criminals of any kind whatsoever, they would come under the exclusive features of the immigration act and of the deportation law.

Someone asked me today, if I regarded illegal entry into the United States as a crime within the meaning of this proposed amendment. My answer is it makes no difference whether or not there is a dispute about that question. It is not necessary to decide whether or not those who are simply illegally here—that is, here without an immigration visa and without a record of admission for permanent residence—are criminals, because the amendment takes care of that very situation.

The amendment excludes from its scope those persons who are simply illegal entrants. For example, an individual who is here without an immigration visa and without any record of admission for permanent residence, who has been here for 10 years, and who is not a criminal, will be entitled to the discretion which section 3 affords, if the case appeals to the discretion of the Board. In other words, the title of the proposed act would be carried out by the act itself.

I say frankly that I am in favor of the title of this proposed act. It reads:

To authorize the deportation of criminals, to guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the noncriminal classes, to provide for legalizing the residence in the United States of certain classes of aliens, and for other purposes.

I am in favor of that title, but the bill does not carry out the title. The bill favors the criminal classes and does not single out those hardship cases involving persons who are innocent of any other thing except being here without an immigration visa and give them the grace of justice and humanity which the title of the bill seems to offer. My objection to this bill is that it would not do what it undertakes to do as set forth in its title.

Mr. President, the committee in studying this measure was very, very fair and accepted several proposed amendments to the original draft of the bill which had a tendency to bring the bill within its title; and perhaps if the committee had had this amendment for consideration in its present form, the committee would have accepted the amendment in committee, for all the amendment proposes to do is to separate the criminals from the noncriminals and to extend the grace of the sovereignty of this country to noncriminals in cases where great hardship would be caused by deporting a man or a woman who has lived in this country 10 years, established a home and all the attending circumstances of a home, is perfectly innocent of any crime, and who is just as good a citizen as anyone who was born in this country.

There is another class, namely, the class who have certain relatives in this country, the relatives being specified as follows:

A parent, spouse, legally recognized child, or, if a minor, a brother or sister, who has been lawfully admitted for permanent residence or is a citizen of the United States.

That is the end of the quotation of paragraph (2) of section 3.

Consider a case under that clause. Under the original plan of the bill, any alien who has any such relatives here would be entitled to this clemency. In the discussion in the committee it was realized that that afforded a device by which the exclusion act could be and probably would be avoided, because a man or a woman might within a very short time after arrival in this country establish one of the relationships mentioned, and thus, instead of passing the examination, instead of proving the physical and mental and moral qualifications for entry, instead of obtaining a visa within our quota law, not only be able to come in here illegally but, becoming a father or a mother, to get within the open door of that particular section of the proposed act.

So the committee accepted an amendment designed to afford something of an assurance against that sort of thing by adding the proviso that the person must have lived continuously in the United States for at least 1 year before attempting to establish such relationship as a ground for clemency and permission to remain in this country. Assume a case where a woman who has lived in this country for 1 year, who has acquired during that year a husband who is a natural-born citizen of this country, or who has a husband who has been lawfully admitted for permanent residence here. Immediately, provided she was not a criminal, this amendment would come to her rescue and protect her to the extent that she could have the judgment of the board as to whether she could remain or would have to be deported. If she should be a criminal, then no clemency could be assured her. She would be deportable, and she must be deported under the other terms of the bill.

That, in a word, is the purpose of the amendment—to separate convicts or criminals from noncriminals, to give no clemency, no rights to the criminals that are not given to any other person who is unlawfully in this country, and to give to the noncriminals that amount of leniency and grace which the committee finds they are entitled to in view of their circumstances. That would bring this proposed act within the purpose expressed in its title.

I believe that if this bill were recommitted to the committee and a study of this amendment were made it would receive very fair and rational consideration at the hands of the committee. There are other things that should be considered by the committee if the bill should be recommitted, things which would cause me to be opposed to the bill unless my amendment should be adopted; and, further, unless the Reynolds bill should be substituted for the committee bill. I say frankly I favor the Reynolds bill over the bill reported by the committee even with my amendment adopted. But I say also that if the Reynolds substitute should not be accepted by the committee, I would vote for the bill reported by the committee provided my amendment should be adopted, because of those two things, namely, increasing the power of the Government to deport criminals and giving the power of clemency to the Government to protect hardship cases where the person involved is not a criminal.

The other features of the bill which I think ought to be considered by the committee relate to its criminal phases. As we study the immigration laws and the deportation laws we are struck with the fact that they are scattered all through the statutes, that they are rather heterogeneous in character, that there has never been a codification which brought them together and harmonized them. Really what Congress ought to do is to codify the laws so they may be understood by a person who desires to look them up and to study them. I admit that my knowledge of these laws is extremely imperfect and that I had great difficulty in piecing together even those laws which are expressly referred to in the bill. But assuming that I am correct in my interpretation of the Immigration Act and of the Exclusion Act and of the act of 1924, we have this situation.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am in thorough accord with what the Senator has said about codifying the immigration laws. As a matter of fact, I have on several occasions talked the matter over with other Members of the Senate who are vitally interested in this all-important subject, and I had intended during the present session to introduce a resolution calling for codification of the laws. I think it ought to be done. I want the Senator to know I am in thorough accord with his suggestion.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. I think it is very important that the immigration laws should be codified. I believe the Secretary of Labor in 1925, 1926, and 1927, in his annual reports, and also the Commissioner of Immigration, made such a recommendation. If I remember correctly, there was a partial codification of the laws. It is very important that they should be codified. I think it is one of the most important things the Committee on Immigration could investigate and recommend.

Mr. AUSTIN. I appreciate the opinion of the Senator from Pennsylvania on this subject, as to which I have discovered that he is certainly an expert. I have read his books with a great deal of interest and obtained great assistance from him in my study of the bill, and, therefore, I give great weight to his judgment.

I was about to illustrate the situation with respect to the immigration and deportation acts in order to make it clear that the provisions of the pending bill increase the deportable offenses only slightly and, on the other hand, open very widely the door for keeping the criminals in this country.

The section of the act which describes the causes for excluding a person contains the following, and I do not read all of it. I am reading from section 3, page 24, of the immigration laws and rules of January 1, 1930, of the United States Department of Labor:

That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States:

All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority; persons with chronic alcoholism; paupers; professional beggars; vagrants; persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who practice polygamy or believe in or advocate the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law, or who believe in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; persons who are members of or are affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government—

Mr. President, I am sure that for the purposes now pending it will be sufficient for me to include in the RECORD the remainder of this section, and I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD at this point without reading.

There being no objection, the remainder of the section was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Persons who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocate or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; prostitutes, or persons coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who directly or indirectly procure or attempt to procure or import prostitutes or persons for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who are supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution; persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced, assisted, encouraged, or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, whether such offers or promises are true or false, or in consequence of agreements, oral, written, or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; persons who have come in consequence of advertisements for laborers printed, published, or distributed in a foreign country; persons likely to become a public charge [this clause excluding aliens on the ground likely to become a public charge has been shifted from its position in sec. 2 of the Immigration Act of 1907 to its present position in sec. 3 of this act in order to indicate the intention of Congress that aliens shall be excluded upon said ground for economic as well as other reasons and with a view to overcoming the decision of the Supreme Court in Gegiow v. Uhl, 239 U. S. 3 (S. Rept. 352, 64th Cong., 1st sess.)], persons who have been excluded from admission and deported in pursuance of law, and who may again seek admission within 1 year from the date of such deportation, unless prior to their reembarkation at a place outside the United States or their attempt to be admitted from foreign contiguous territory the Secretary of Labor has consented to their reapplying for admission [see amendment in sec. 1 (d) act approved Mar. 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1551), p. 19]; persons whose tickets or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who are assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such persons do not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes; persons whose ticket or passage is paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government, either directly or indirectly; stowaways, except that any such stowaway, if otherwise admissible, may be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor [see rule 3, subdivision O]; all children under 16 years of age, unaccompanied by or not coming to one or both of their parents, except that any such children may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, be admitted if in his opinion they are not likely to become a public charge and are, otherwise eligible [see rule 3, subdivision N]; unless otherwise provided for by existing treaties, persons who are natives of islands not possessed by the United States adjacent to the continent of Asia, situate south of the twentieth parallel latitude north, west of the one hundred and sixtieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich, and north of the tenth parallel of latitude south, or who are natives of any country, province, or dependency situate on the continent of Asia west of the one hundred and tenth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich and east of the fiftieth meridian of longitude east from Greenwich and south of the fiftieth parallel of latitude north, except that portion of said territory situate between the fiftieth and the sixty-fourth meridians of longitude east from Greenwich and the twenty-fourth and thirty-eighth parallels of latitude north, and no alien now in any way excluded from, or prevented from entering, the United States shall be admitted to the United States. The provision next foregoing, however, shall not apply to persons of the following status or occupations: Government officers, ministers, or religious teachers, missionaries, lawyers, physicians, chemists, civil engineers, teachers, students, authors, artists, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, nor to their legal wives or their children under 16 years of age who shall accompany them or who subsequently may apply for admission to the United States, but such persons or their legal wives or foreign-born children who fail to maintain in the United States a status or occupation placing them within the excepted classes shall be deemed to be in the United States contrary to law, and shall be subject to deportation as provided in section 19 of this act.

That after 3 months from the passage of this act [the literacy test became operative on May 5, 1917. All other provisions of the law became operative May 1, 1917] in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States, the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit:

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who cannot read the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish [for method of applying the reading test, see rule 3, subdivision L]: Provided, That any admissible alien, or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relative shall be permitted to enter. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with slips of uniform size, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plainly legible type in some one of the various languages or dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect in which he desires the examination to be made, and shall be required to read the words printed on the slip in such language or dialect. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who have resided therein continuously for 5 years and who return to the United States within 6 months from the date of their departure therefrom; all aliens in transit through the United States [see rule 6]; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory: Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted, or who admit the commission, or who teach or advocate the commission, of an offense purely political: Provided further, That the provisions of this act, relating to the payment for tickets or passage by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government shall not apply to the tickets or passage of aliens in immediate and continuous transit through the United States to foreign contiguous territory: Provided further, That skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed cannot be found in this country, and the question of the necessity of importing such skilled labor in any particular instance may be determined by the Secretary of Labor upon the application of any person interested, such application to be made before such importation, and such determination by the Secretary of Labor to be reached after a full hearing and an investigation into the facts of the case: Provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, nurses, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, person belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed as domestic servants [see rule 9]: Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens or subjects to go to any country other than the United States, or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone, are being used for the purpose of enabling the holder to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President shall refuse to permit such citizens or subjects of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possession or from the Canal Zone [see rule 8]: Provided further, That aliens returning after a temporary absence to an unrelinquished United States domicile of 7 consecutive years may be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, and under such conditions as he may prescribe [see rule 13, subdivision A]: Provided further, That nothing in the contract-labor or reading-test provisions of this act shall be construed to prevent, hinder, or restrict any alien exhibitor, or holder of concession or privilege for any fair or exposition authorized by act of Congress, from bringing into the United States, under contract, such otherwise admissible alien mechanics, artisans, agents, or other employees, natives of his country as may be necessary for installing or conducting his exhibit or for preparing for installing or conducting any business authorized or permitted under any concession or privilege which may have been or may be granted by any such fair or exposition in connection therewith, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, may prescribe both as to the admission and return of such persons [see rule 9, subdivision G, and act of Apr. 29, 1902 (32 Stat. 176), p. 55]: Provided further, That the Commissioner General of Immigration with the approval of the Secretary of Labor shall issue rules and prescribe conditions, including exaction of such bonds as may be necessary, to control and regulate the admission and return of otherwise inadmissible aliens applying for temporary admission [see rule 13, subdivision B; also rule 9, subdivision F]: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to accredited officials of foreign governments, nor to their suites, families, or guests [see proviso added by act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat. 981), p. 76].

Mr. AUSTIN. The deportation clause really gathers all those aliens who are described in what I have read and what I have referred to, and makes them all deportable. This is what is provided in section 19, at page 41:

That at any time within 5 years after entry, any alien who at the time of entry was a member of one or more of the classes excluded by law * * * shall * * * be taken into custody and deported.

That is the first sentence in the deportation law of this country, and it refers to every one of the persons described in the exclusion act which I have read or referred to; and yet every one of those persons, save the class which commit crimes involving moral turpitude, would be granted clemency by this bill if the amendment I have proposed should not be adopted. That is, they would be within the reach of the discretion of this committee by virtue of section 3 of this bill if it should not be amended.

Moreover, by section 2 of the pending bill a discretion is granted even in the case of criminals which takes in a very large part of the persons who are excluded by our exclusion law, and who would be otherwise deportable. Section 2 cannot be said to tighten up the law with respect to the deportation of criminals. It rather removes the limitations in the exclusion act and the power contained in the deportation act.

Let me read section 2 as it is proposed in the pending bill:

SEC. 2. The second proviso to section 19 of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 889; U. S. C., title 8, sec. 155), is amended to read as follows: "Provided further, That the provisions of the immigration laws respecting the deportation of aliens convicted of crime shall not apply to one who has been pardoned, nor shall an alien convicted of crime be deported if the court, or judge thereof, where the conviction occurred shall within 6 months after such conviction—

That is changed to 90 days—

(or within 90 days after the passage of this amendatory act), due notice having first been given to the prosecuting authorities, make a recommendation that the alien be not deported as a consequence of such conviction and if the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization approves that recommendation, nor shall an alien sentenced to imprisonment be deported under any provision of law until after the termination of the imprisonment, but the imprisonment shall be considered as terminated upon the release of the alien from confinement whether or not he is subject to rearrest or further confinement in respect to the same offense."

What does this do? Does it tighten up the grip of sovereignty upon the criminal, or does it relax it? It does nothing but relax it.

I call attention to the proviso as it exists, in order to show the effect of section 2 as it is now drawn. I read from page 42 of the same document:

Provided further, That the provision of this section respecting the deportation of aliens convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude shall not apply to one who has been pardoned, nor shall such deportation be made or directed if the court, or judge thereof, sentencing such alien for such crime shall, at the time of imposing judgment or passing sentence or within 30 days thereafter, due notice having first been given to representatives of the State, make a recommendation to the Secretary of Labor that such alien shall not be deported in pursuance of this act; nor shall any alien convicted as aforesaid be deported until after the termination of his imprisonment.

That discretion, given to a judge by the law as it is today, is limited. Only those crimes involving moral turpitude are mandatory causes for deportation. Only in crimes not involving moral turpitude is the judge given any discretion; but by the pending bill that qualification is wiped right out, and the judge may take the first step to granting clemency to the criminal in the case of all crimes.

Let me read the language again in order to make that clear:

Nor shall an alien convicted of crime be deported if the court, or judge thereof—

Shall grant him clemency, or make this recommendation. In the original act the language is:

Provided further, That the provision of this section respecting the deportation of aliens convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude shall not apply—

And so forth.

Again, the door is still further opened with respect to criminals by section 2, as proposed here, by extending the time, giving the criminal affected more time in which to induce the judge to make the recommendation. Under the existing law, the recommendation by the judge must be made at the time of the judgment or within 30 days. Under the bill as proposed and as it came to us in committee, the time was extended to 6 months.

The committee reduced the time to 90 days; but, even as it appears in the Senate today, the bill is a very generous grant to the criminals of the country of 90 days instead of 30 days in which to bring enough pressure to bear on a judge to make him recommend that a criminal be not deported. It makes no difference whether he is convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude or whether he is convicted of some one of the vast majority of crimes which do not involve moral turpitude, but which include racketeering, jail breaking, and the violation of nearly all the regulatory statutes and laws which have been enacted to keep the peace in this country.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does not this extension of time from the time of sentence to 90 days thereafter work both ways?

Under the bill it is provided that due notice must be given to the prosecuting authorities. That gives the prosecuting authorities the opportunity, during the period of 90 days after sentence, if the convicted person takes the full 90 days, that much additional time in which to prepare themselves for the argument on the other side.

I recognize the point which the Senator makes; but, in fairness, must we not admit that the provision gives the same advantage to the prosecuting authorities on the other side?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; of course that is true. The law as it exists today also provides for due notice to the representatives of the State, so that the State must act within 30 days. I am not so sure that the State must act within the 30 days; but due notice must be given, and, under the present law, this much must take place within 30 days:

The court, or judge thereof, sentencing such alien for such crime shall, at the time of imposing judgment or passing sentence or within 30 days thereafter, * * * make a recommendation.

That is what the present law requires; and by this amendment he must do that within 90 days, instead of 30 days.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Under section 2, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization is given full authority to prevent deportation. Under the present act, as the Senator has just read it to us, the prevention of deportation is subject to the approval of the Secretary of Labor. Under this bill the Commissioner has full power to prevent deportation without any concurrence on the part of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. AUSTIN. If I understand the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, it would affect our votes a little on the motion to recommit, for it is a matter which ought to be considered in committee, not on the floor of the Senate. I cannot conceive of more difficult and complex legislation than this which relates to our relations with our neighbors throughout the world, and the establishing of a basis that will be, first, beneficial to the United States and the people of the United States, and, second, not inhuman and not antagonistic and hateful, and not likely to arouse resentment and bad feeling between us and our international neighbors.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator in the early part of his remarks with reference to those who come into the United States illegally raised the question as to whether such entry is a crime under the laws of the country. I have always contended that it is. But the Senator does not go far enough, because under the La Follette Seamen's Act, which I have always considered to be the charter of liberty for the seamen, shipowners insisted on bringing in immigrants because of the fact that under that law a seaman has the right to go ashore for 60 days. When we can prove a seaman has been assisted by the shipowner to enter the country illegally there is a penalty of a thousand dollars in each case, and, as I recall, during the time when I was Secretary of Labor, there was imposed upon shipowners for the violation of that law penalties equivalent to $5,000,000 because the shipowners were in the game, first, of trying to defeat the La Follette Seamen's Act by employing cheap help; and, second, giving the immigrants jobs on their vessels and having them paid a thousand dollars, if they are caught, so that the fine may be paid. I think this goes much further, and the Commissioner General of Immigration, without any restraint on him at all, would have the right under this particular section to admit such aliens into this country. It would open a loophole which would encourage the destruction of the La Follette Seamen's Act.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I wonder whether the Senator would object, with the view I have of attempting to work out an acceptance of the Senator's proposed amendment to section 3, to having a discussion concerning it again at this time.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should be very glad to work with the Senator.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator just one or two questions. It may be that he discussed them after he read his amendment. I left the Chamber to look up the provisions of the act of 1917, so as to be able more intelligently to understand the Senator's amendment.

I should like to ask, first, the reason for the exclusion of the words in line 6, page 4, "if the alien is of good moral character and has not been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude."

Mr. AUSTIN. There is no reason for excluding them; that is to say, it was not intended that this amendment should not mean exactly that, and if the amendment is not adequate to make that a condition, I should be very glad to add the words to the amendment.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The act of 1917 defines persons of good moral character, and I assumed that in leaving that expression out it was with the idea that it was defined in the 1917 act.

Mr. AUSTIN. No.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. But I am not so sure that the act defines them sufficiently to meet the requirements we desire in the proposed legislation. The Senator would have no objection to the inclusion of those words?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection to it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. There is another point, if I may ask another question.

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. As I understand, with the amendment the Senator proposes, the only change would be as to those aliens who have been in this country and who temporarily leave the country and return, and who, because of the fact that they have some disease—it may be tuberculosis or it may be a loathesome or social disease—are not able to enter. The provision of the amendment is, "without an immigration visa or a record of admission for permanent residence." Would that include all of the illegal entries into the United States?

Mr. AUSTIN. That was intended.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. So that the only effect of the Senator's amendment, as changing the committee amendment, is in those cases where aliens who have been in the country, who may have been here for 20 years, go to Canada on a temporary visit, let us say, and return. They have come in legally so far as the provisions of the act of 1917 provided at the time they came in; there were no restrictions at that time; but they come back, and they may have some disease at the time they enter, or it may be that within the period of 5 years from the time of their second entry they become public charges. Am I correct in construing the Senator's amendment to mean that those cases are the ones eliminated by his amendment, which are not eliminated by the bill as it was introduced?

Mr. AUSTIN. No, Mr. President, not if I understand my own amendment. Let me state the difference. There are all sorts of crimes which cannot be described as involving moral turpitude, or as acts of those coming within the classes of prostitutes, procurers, and other like immoral persons. I remember the question the Senator from Washington raised in the committee about those crimes, and whether they were large in number or not, and whether they were serious in nature.

As the result of that I undertook a rather hasty search of the statutes, Federal and State, on the subject, and I nearly exhausted myself without getting to the end of it. They are extremely numerous. I have here four sheets containing lists of such crimes, just noted, without description. They include racketeering, extortion, breaches of numerous laws relating to public health, social relations, labor, education, public peace and safety, and, generally, the administration of government. That is a mere characterization of them, but they are exceedingly numerous, and they include very serious offenses.

If my amendment, or one similar to it, were not adopted, a man or a woman could be guilty of those offenses, provided he or she were not guilty of being a prostitute, a procurer, or other like immoral person, and still be entitled to the clemency of section 3. So the amendment I propose is designed to put them all together, and make any alien who is a criminal subject to deportation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator means aliens who have been guilty of these crimes since their entry into the United States?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; not quite that. It includes also the exclusion feature, which provides that if a person admits that he has within 5 years been guilty of a crime, and so forth. The Senator remembers that. It brings all criminals within its grasp, just as the present law does, and no differently, for that matter. It is preventive in its nature; we might say prophylactic in its nature. It undertakes to stop the opening of the door in behalf of criminal classes and to permit the opening of the door of discretion in behalf of noncriminals. If it does not accomplish that purpose, it certainly should go back to the committee and be worked over until it does. It is not easy to amend the bill to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator will concede that the committee did have many meetings and discussions about it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, yes; and worked hard and was very fair and open-minded.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If proposed legislation is desirable legislation, it is hardly fair, when a bill comes up on the floor, to propose a new amendment. I want to say that, from my understanding of the point of view of the committee, if the Senator's amendment means what he thinks it means, I do not believe there is any objection on the part of the committee to the adoption of such an amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thought that might be possible. The Senator remembers, however, that we had difficulty in keeping the bill out of the Senate, and that it was only by close chance that we secured another hearing on the bill, and immediately afterward it was reported to the Senate.

I am not accusing anyone of unfair treatment. On the contrary, I said I thought the committee treated these proposals or amendments very fairly and candidly, and worked very hard on them; and it was my thought that if the committee had had before it my amendment in its entirety, the committee might have adopted the amendment. It did not occur to me until after the discussion in the committee when certain suggestions were made, including suggestions by the Senator from Washington, that the amendment could be made acceptable by adding to it the words I have mentioned.

So it happens that the amendment comes to the Senate floor in different form than it appeared in the committee. However, I must not be charged with delinquency with respect to the amendment when I brought it before the committee.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let us assume that the amendment which the Senator proposes provides for the mandatory deportation of persons who make temporary visits out of the country and then return. The Commissioner has before him cases involving persons who had been here for years, and who went across the line into Canada for an afternoon picnic, and then came back. Very definite hardships will ensue as the result of such situations. Does the Senator object to such change in his amendment as would take care of cases of that sort?

Mr. AUSTIN. Not at all, if it may be done without making an opening of which advantage may be taken in the nature of practically a new immigration act. I shall be glad to work on that. I live on the Canada line. In fact, I was born in the last town north, right on the forty-fifth parallel of latitude, and I know the hardships which exist; and I am as much for the protection of innocent men and women who have come into this country, and have nothing at all against them except illegal entry, as is any man in the Senate. I cannot be outdone in interest in that respect, and I am willing to work with the committee and try to fix up the law so as to take care of honest, innocent hardship cases.

I desire to conclude, however, before dropping section 2. My interpretation of paragraph (2) of section 1 is that it purports to increase the class of deportable aliens convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude by including those convicted but not sentenced to imprisonment. But in connection therewith, power which does not now exist is granted to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization to coddle criminals of all classes.

Section 1 (2) and section 2 weaken the present law by extending the discretion from crimes involving moral turpitude to all crimes and all convicts. Section 2 also grants further leniency to the convict by extending from 30 days to 90 days the time in which the convict may secure from a judge or court before whom he was convicted a recommendation that the convict be not deported.

I should discuss section 4 more at length if the circumstances were not just what they are; but I shall be content with the statement that in effect a new method of immigration is created by means of the change of status of nonimmigrant or student to nonquota immigrant. This tends to relax the restrictive features of the immigration laws.

My amendment to the amendment is intended to give relief to aliens in hardship cases where they are not criminals, save only in respect of having entered or being found in the United States without an immigration visa or a record of admission for permanent residence. If adopted, the amendment should guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the noncriminal classes, which is the declared purpose of the bill; and I am for the purpose of the bill.

I shall vote to recommit if a vote is taken here; but a suggestion has come to me from the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], who is in charge of the bill, with which I am perfectly willing to join, and that is to let this matter go before the committee, not under an order of recommittal, and let the committee consider it more fully. If that is parliamentary and may be done, I am perfectly willing to join in that informal action, so that the bill may not lose its position.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I had hoped that this measure might be brought to a conclusion this afternoon; but I understand a number of Senators expect to speak before a vote may be taken. Therefore I believe, unless the Senator from Rhode Island wishes to make his speech this evening——

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, my speech will be very short. It will take but a few minutes.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, I suggested in a very informal way to the Senator from Vermont that if the bill was likely to remain before the Senate for some time it might be a good idea to call a meeting of the committee so that we might decide whether or not we could agree to his amendment without recommitting the bill, leaving the bill just where it is now. I do not know why that might not be done in the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what is the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. COOLIDGE. Instead of recommitting the bill I suggested to the Senator from Vermont that we leave the bill just as it is while it is under discussion in the Senate, and stated that I would call a meeting of the committee, at which we could consider his amendment. I have the record of the meeting of our committee on March 28; and, except for the Senator from Vermont, the vote in regard to this measure was unanimous. The Senator from Vermont could not vote for the bill because he had an amendment which he was offering.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, of course, if the bill shall not be disposed of this afternoon—and I do not see now that there is any prospect of that being done—Senators may take whatever course they choose. It is my expectation to move a recess until 12 o'clock tomorrow, when the Senator from Rhode Island shall have finished his remarks, unless Senators think the pending measure may be concluded this afternoon.

Mr. COOLIDGE. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], an important member of the committee, is not here. He is very much interested in the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am perfectly certain the bill cannot be disposed of this afternoon.

Mr. COOLIDGE. I am also.

Mr. ROBINSON. During the recess of the Senate the Senator may take whatever course he pleases in regard to convening his committee.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we are considering the enactment of a law which would deport aliens who, under existing statutes, entered this country illegally. The committee have studied the problem and agreed to the form of the bill. I cannot see that any good purpose would be served by recommitting it for further study. That question, of course, will be decided by the Senate.

In the meantime, may I remind Senators of what will happen if no bill is enacted into law? It will mean the immediate deportation of thousands of aliens, many of whom have dependents, and many of those dependents should not be sent away from the country.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is not the Senator from New York aware that the Commissioner testified that approximately 90 percent of those cases contained in the number 2,860 were free from any crime at all; and if that is so, does not the Senator admit that, with the amendment adopted, all of those who have no crime attached to their records would come within the clemency granted by section 3?

Mr. COPELAND. I assume from what the Senator says that he favors that?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I favor that idea.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. We will hope that very soon there may be worked out some compromise or agreement that will prevent the injustices and the cruelties sure to follow if such deportations take place. Now permit me for a moment to proceed.

Under ordinary circumstances an alien who violates the laws of the United States should be treated as any other violator of our laws. Even deportation, under ordinary circumstances, would be a mild punishment. The lawbreaker would be sent back to the land of his birth.

But these are not the days of ordinary circumstances. The conditions in the countries from which most of these aliens came to find refuge here, illegal refuge perhaps, have changed enormously since the days when they left their native land, and they have changed rapidly. By sending them back we would not be sending them to the country which they left. Each would find that his own country has changed.

These aliens came mostly from Russia and Germany. They came not only to escape persecution but they were animated by the first instinct which God has implanted in man, that of self-preservation.

The changes which have taken place in the countries over there not only violate every principle of our form of government but are abhorrent to every man of good will, every lover of liberty, of fair play, every human being who possesses a spark of decency.

I do not want to feel that I am talking merely to Senators. I am talking to clean and decent human beings wherever they may live.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. With particular reference to the point the Senator has just mentioned, that governmental and political changes have been taking place in the past several years, particularly in the countries of continental Europe—and I refer to Italy, Germany, and France, as well as to Russia—does the Senator think America's gates should be open to all the political refugees or religious refugees and to all the peoples of the world who are dissatisfied with the form of government under which they are now living abroad?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I think it would be impossible and doubtless improper to open the gates so widely as the Senator suggests; but I wish to say just a few words along the line we are now considering because my heart goes out to the people of different races from my own and different religions from my own who are being persecuted abroad. Just what we are going to do about it, I cannot say. I know the Senator from North Carolina has given serious thought to it; I know he is worried about it; but it is a problem concerning which there should be discussion and consideration throughout the civilized world.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Does the Senator mean that, in his opinion, all peoples all over the world, assuming that they are prosecuted and persecuted, should be admitted here, and that the Senator would be willing to open up the gates of America to all the peoples of all the countries of the world who are being prosecuted or persecuted?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I would not do that. The first responsibility we have in this country is to our own. I should like, however, to say a word, if I may, to make it clear to certain men on the other side of the world that the Senate of the United States disapproves their actions and the revolutionary ideas they are trying to put into effect.

I am not seeking for a moment to open our gates when we have unemployment and distress beyond our capabilities of relieving it. When we speak of the particular group dealt with in the proposed legislation, however, I think we should temper justice with mercy and certainly not do those things that would make for their destruction, but go as far as we can in relieving their distress and at the same time, as I view the matter, not impose upon ourselves any great burden of added responsibility.

I repeat that in countries across the seas changes have taken place which not only violate every principle of our form of government but are abhorrent to every man of good will, every lover of liberty and of fair play, and every human being who possesses a spark of decency. I am merely stating what all of us know—that the Soviet Government has abolished the rights of honest property owners and is striving to spread communism throughout all the world. Those of their own citizens whom we would send back to them would be crushed.

Germany has outraged the sensibilities of the world. In her struggle to regain her former status—in which so many of us sympathized—she chose the unfortunate course of persecuting helpless minorities. I was one of the first in America to say "the war is over; let us have peace."

But I referred to another Germany. That country has stifled free speech and a free press. She has debauched the home by setting up new standards of religion and of conduct. She has crushed all labor organizations. She has emasculated her great universities by expelling teachers who did not agree with her policy. She has transferred all the attributes of God to her political leader.

To force any unfortunate refugee to return to such a country would be an act of inhuman cruelty. It would mean sending him back to a torture unparalelled since the days of the Inquisition.

My heart has gone out to troubled, harassed Germany, and to my many friends in the United States who come from German stock. I know they are unhappy over the present situation. But no true friend of old Germany, and of those who sprang from that land of kindliness and good cheer, can fail to face an unpleasant truth.

Of the Jews, my friend Edwin Markham said in his poem A Cry for Brotherhood:

Through all these years this people carried chains;
Had dark Assyrias and darker Spains.
They were the tribes of sorrow who were fed
From wells of hate and exile's bitter bread.
They built the tombs of Pharaohs in old years,
Mixing the bricks with tears.
They built but had no houses of their own;
Tyre heard their dirge, and Babylon their moan.
And now in Germany we see again
The old, hard hand laid on these women and men;
And yet this wonderous race has given birth
To genius and a glory on the earth.

Out of this people came
The Book of Books, and many a glorious name—
Moses, who stood once in the holy place,
And gazed upon Jehovah, face to face;
Then, standing on the cliffs of Sinai,
He heard the wisdom of the upper sky.
And handed down the Decalogue to be
A law for men on every land and sea.
It was a wisdom-word
That centuries and continents have heard;
And never a man of earth has added to it—
This wonder-wisdom from the Infinite.

Yes; from the trembling lips of many a seer
The whole wide world has heard, and still can hear,
The Psalms, the Torah, and the Talmud speak,
Protection for the plundered and the weak.
Shall not this race whose gifts have been so great,
Have some protection from the tooth of hate?
They have not yet their safe place in the sun,
They who knew Egypt, who knew Babylon.

Protest this cruel wrong
In thunders of the sermon and the song.
Let cries go forth in shrill tempestous note!
As if they rose from tempest's roaring throat.
Let there be thunders in the world; let be
A protest that will shake the ruler's knee.
Let there be protest till the happy hour
When Justice shall unclothe her arm of power.

Let there be thunders in the world—yes, more;
Let there be Brotherhood in every shore.
Let all men rise into the higher place,
Where they can see God's face in every face.
Let there be Brotherhood; let this long cry
Be heard on earth and under every sky!

During the delivery of Mr. COPELAND's speech——

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish respectfully to call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that we are not especially interested in the 2,862 cases wherein deportation is being suspended, but I respectfully direct the attention of the Senator to the fact that under the pending bill an interdepartmental committee is set up which would have the right to pass upon the deportation or nondeportation of any number of aliens who might be apprehended in this country within the next 3 years, because it is my understanding that the life of the interdepartmental committee is extended for a period of 3 years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I think my good friend from North Carolina, who wishes to be accurate and usually is accurate, misconceives the power and authority of the interdepartmental committee. The committee is provided for only because some persons objected to the Secretary of Labor alone acting upon these matters, as under the law the Secretary is compelled to act; and it was suggested by persons who are influenced in part by the philosophy which guides the Senator from North Carolina that perhaps it would be a little better to have two other members of the Department placed upon the interdepartmental committee, so that the discretion would not be left exclusively to one person. If the provision for the interdepartmental committee should be stricken out, the matter would be left entirely with the Secretary of Labor; and it seems to me, with the Senator's philosophy, that he ought to welcome that provision, because it would tighen rather than liberalize the laws with respect to deportation.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will yield to me sufficient time to answer the Senator from Utah, I am very happy that the Senator from Utah has called my attention to the fact that the creation of the interdepartmental committee was suggested for the reason that it was desired not to have one individual or one department pass upon these cases. Therefore I argue that the others did not wish to have the Department of Labor exclusively pass upon the cases for the reason that they recognized that it is not capable of doing so.

In further reference to that matter, Mr. President, I believe the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization has unquestionably demonstrated to this body that he is not the right person to handle this matter, because he has taken upon himself the authority and the responsibility of holding in this country 2,862 persons who under our present law are mandatorily deportable.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am sure the Senator from North Carolina does not wish to be unfair to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, who, in my opinion, is one of the outstanding men in the public service. The withholding of deportation with respect to a number of persons was pursuant to a resolution adopted by the House; and I may say that notwithstanding that resolution they are being deported daily. Hundreds of persons have been deported during the past year, and in the case of some of them I am sure that if the Senator from North Carolina had been put in the position of determining the matter, because of his humanitarian impulses he would have said they ought not to have been deported.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will yield further until I may answer the Senator from Utah, the O'Day resolution, which was introduced in the House last year, called for laying aside, so to speak, the mandatory features of the deportation law for a period of 1 year, which, according to my recollection, expired on March 1. That time having expired, there is no authority under law, resolution, or otherwise to keep in this country those 2,862 persons, and every day they have remained here they have remained in violation of the law, because the law says they must be deported.

The O'Day resolution, which was adopted by the House, of course, had no legal effect. It never was brought to our attention here. The operation of a law cannot be nullified or suspended by the adoption of a mere resolution. We have done so many things by resolution that many persons probably think laws may be made by resolution and suspended by resolution; but at the time that resolution was adopted only about 2,000 persons came within its terms. Since that time the number has been added to; and I contend that under the resolution the authorities had no legal right to hold here anybody other than those on the list at the time the resolution was passed.

Mr. President, I desire to take this opportunity to apologize to my good friend from New York for interrupting him, particularly since I wish to compliment the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

After the conclusion of Mr. COPELAND's speech—

TUBERCULOSIS HOSPITALS AND THEIR OPERATION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced Senate bill 4516, relating to tuberculosis hospitals and their operation. There has been prepared by the committee of the Southern Tuberculosis Conference an interesting and instructive statement on the subject matter of the bill, and I ask that the statement, together with the accompanying tables, be printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement and tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NEED OF ADDITIONAL SANATORIUM BEDS IN TUBERCULOSIS WORK

Tuberculosis is no respecter of persons. It invades all classes of society, but its devastating and demoralizing effect is most evident in the homes of families in moderate circumstances and below.

According to the figures given by the Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, August 30, 1935, tuberculosis in 1934 caused 48.4 percent of all deaths from infectious and parasitic diseases. In other words, it killed nearly as many persons as all this class of diseases combined. It cost 71,609 lives and had a mortality 15 times as great as diphtheria and 84 times that of infantile paralysis. Among babies under 1 year of age the tuberculosis death rate is about 45 per 100,000—higher than that for diphtheria, scarlet fever, or mumps. It ranks seventh among the causes of death of all ages, being exceeded by heart disease, pneumonia, cancer, nephritis, cerebral hemorrhage, and accidents, but first in the productive ages 15 to 45. Sixty-seven percent of all deaths from tuberculosis occurs in this age group, whereas these other causes, with the exception of accidents, are largely fatalities of middle life and old age.

A recent study of deaths, by occupations, based on data of the United States Census Bureau, showed that tuberculosis is the second cause of death among men aged 15 to 64 in the United States, and also the second cause of death among gainfully occupied men in the same group. The rate fluctuates widely from a low of 20.3 per 100,000 among lawyers and judges to a tenfold high of 238.6 among factory and building-construction laborers. Porters in domestic and personal service have a tuberculosis death rate above 600. In Negroes the national rate is 3.6 times the white, in Florida 4.2 times the white, and in certain urban areas it reaches 6 times the white. The Negro migration during the war period has greatly intensified the problem in urban centers of the North.

Tuberculosis cost the United States more than forty-three millions in 1932 for service compensation alone. From 1923 to 1932 the Government paid out $400,090,756 in compensation to World War veterans sick with this disease. The sum is one-third the total amount paid for compensation and does not include hospitalization.

Pneumonia runs its course in 9 days, typhoid in about 3 weeks. The average length of disability from tuberculosis is 2½ years, during much of which the wage earner suffers total loss of income. Sick people are not producers of wealth or sources of taxation but are a burden to the family or the community. As a usual result, regardless of the termination of the disease in the patient, family finances are wrecked and only too often the home is broken by death or poverty. Tuberculosis has been well called the maker of orphans. The Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. estimates that for each death from tuberculosis there are two children either totally or partially orphaned. Since broken homes are reckoned as one of the most prolific causes of delinquency, much crime may be safely charged to this plague.

That tuberculosis can be controlled is shown by the fact that in the 35 years since the fight on it began the death rate has dropped from 200 per 100,000 in 1900 to 59.5 in 1933. From the beginning the importance of segregation and treatment was recognized, and the sanatorium was the hub of the program. With the advance in methods of treatment and wider use of surgery, the sanatorium has become increasingly important. It fills a threefold place in the picture—preventing the spread by segregation, affording scientific treatment, and training the patients so that they become home missionaries on the cure and prevention of the disease. Cases that can have early hospitalization have a far better chance of recovery and infect fewer persons than advanced cases. Where sanatorium provision has been adequate the best results have been obtained. A case in point is the city of Detroit where within the last few years two beds per death have been provided, with the result that patients are seldom on the waiting list very long, their stay in the sanatorium is much shortened, and the death rate has diminished with consequent increased value to the taxpayer who gets more for his money and to the city a greater social benefit.

In 1934 there were 73,615 sanatorium beds for the tuberculous in this country, exclusive of those in Federal and penal institutions and hospitals for the insane. Exhibit A shows sanatorium provision, by States. The goal set some years ago by the National Tuberculosis Association as a working minimum for each State was one bed per death. Twenty-one States have reached that goal and several exceed two beds per death.

In some States, however, sanatorium provision is notoriously inadequate, and the tuberculous sick constitute a serious economic problem. Arizona, with the highest rate in the Nation, 225 per 100,000, suffers from an influx of indigent invalids for whom she is entirely unable to care. The South, with 74.1 percent of the Negro population and a per-capita wealth of approximately $1,785 as compared to $3,609 for the rest of the Nation, has made provision for its whites which compares not unfavorably with other sections but has been unable to carry the load of its dependent Negro group. It is not likely that many of these States will make great headway with this problem without Federal help. With the sanatorium the crux of the tuberculosis control, tuberculosis promises to be a long story with the Negro race unless the Federal Government steps in.

The Federal Government has already recognized its responsibility for assisting the States in the control of communicable diseases. Tuberculosis is a recognized article of interstate commerce. The United States Public Health Service has had long practice in working with State health departments, and the channels are already open through which expansion of its activities may move into the sanatorium field. In many States existing properties might be acquired by purchase or lease. Plants already existing need only additional wards. Beds in general hospitals may be procured as well as vacant beds in private sanatoria. New plants can be built and equipped at a cost of $2,500 per bed throughout the South and $3,500 in the rest of the Nation. Exhibit "A" shows the needs of the various States, and exhibit "B" of the southern group, where it will be noted the greatest dearth of beds in the entire Nation lies among the Negroes of the South, where on the basis of bringing each State's quota up to one bed per death, three-fifths of the suggested provision would ultimately fall.

In a talk before the New York Tuberculosis and Health Association and associated agencies in New York on February 25, Dr. Thomas Parran, Jr., State commissioner of health and president-elect of the American Public Health Association, made this significant statement:

"'The greatest need for health action is where the greatest saving of life can be made. First, I would place tuberculosis. The tremendous decline in tuberculosis in New York State from 173 per 100,000 population in 1905 to less than 50 in 1935 should not obscure the fact that it is still the leading cause of death in the 20 to 40 age group. Our slogan used to read, 'Tuberculosis is preventable; tuberculosis is curable.' I maintain that it may now be amended to read, 'Tuberculosis can be wiped out in our State and Nation.'"

Figures given in this brief can be supported by United States census and public-health records and studies of scientists associated with the National Tuberculosis Association.

Kranz, secretary, Southern Tuberculosis Conference; Dr. Elva Wright, president, Southern Tuberculosis Conference; Mrs. John M. McBryde, executive secretary, Louisiana Tuberculosis and Health Association; Dr. L. J. Moorman, director, Oklahoma Tuberculosis Association; Dr. J. W. E. Beck, director, Texas Tuberculosis Association.

Annual maximum maintenance cost $2.50 per day		13,801,634
If Federal Government agrees to pay 50 percent of maintenance, not to exceed $1.25 per day, Federal Government's part annually		6,900,817

If the State is required to match Federal maintenance, this figure will probably be kept lower, particularly for beds in the South.

No amount is figured for administrative expense in the Surgeon General's office, as committee has no means of estimating cost.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES IN WORLD COMMERCE

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, before I begin my remarks relating to the subject I have in mind, I ask to have printed in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an article published in the Journal of Commerce of New York, April

21, 1936, entitled "U. S. Held Concerned on Loss of Position in World Commerce."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Journal of Commerce of Apr. 21, 1936]

UNITED STATES HELD CONCERNED ON LOSS OF POSITION IN WORLD COMMERCE—BELIEF IS BASED ON DELAY OF MARCH REPORT OUTLINING INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS—CABINET MEMBERS PLAN TO CONSULT ROOSEVELT—HULL PROTESTS PEEK PROGRAM VESTING CONTROL OF TRADE IN NEW GOVERNMENT AUTHORITY

By Clarence L. Linz

WASHINGTON, April 20.—The annual balance-of-payments study of the United States, said to disclose that this country has lost its position as the world's great creditor nation and is on the verge of again being a debtor country, as yet unpublished by the Department of Commerce, is causing some apprehension to the administration, it is reported.

Ordinarily the Department of Commerce issues its report upon the balance of international payments early in March. In the formulation of the report this year, it is rumored, there entered several factors contradictory of the New Deal contentions, so that it was deemed best by President Roosevelt's advisers, including Secretary of Commerce Roper, Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, and Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, that the Chief Executive be apprised of the situation.

PLAN TO SEE PRESIDENT

They had hoped to discuss the matter with Mr. Roosevelt before he went on his recent fishing vacation and now find they cannot get to him with their problem before some time next week at the earliest.

It has been the standard argument of economists that, because of America's position as the world's greatest creditor nation, that the exorbitant rates of the infamous Hawley-Smoot tariff law must be reduced to facilitate the entry of foreign goods and to bring our balance to even level.

Today letters were made public from Secretary of State Hull in opposition to such legislation, characterizing it as carrying out the viewpoint of Mr. Peek and unnecessary in view of the present set-up in the administration for dealing with foreign-trade policy.

It was in 1934 that Peek discussed the desirability of unifying foreign-trade activities of the Government which, he contended, is spread over 50 or more independent jurisdictions. Later when Senator SHEPPARD introduced his bill the suggestion was given the indorsement of the National Foreign Trade Council.

"The purpose of such a law, as stated in sections 2 and 3", wrote President E. P. Thomas, "will accomplish the very desirable purpose of assisting in the coordination of the functions and practices of the large number of governmental bureaus concerned with our foreign trade and aid in the formulation of foreign-trade policies which should be of assistance in the furtherance of our export and import commerce.

"While time has not permitted, since introduction of your bill, obtaining full consideration by foreign-trade organizations, we regard it as highly essential that a foreign-trade board be constituted, empowered, and capable of accomplishing the objectives outlined, irrespective of what may be deemed the suitable personnel of a permanent board to make it fully representative of all the agencies of the Government which now has numerous and varied problems under their separate jurisdictions, requiring essential coordination and cooperation, without foreign-trade interests."

SECRETARY ELABORATES VIEWS

Secretary Hull declared that from the statement of the number of Government agencies interested in the subject "it would appear that a high degree of confusion exists in this list, since no attempt is made to discriminate between subordinate organizations having incidental knowledge or administrative functions in connection with foreign commerce and those Cabinet executives who are responsible for and with the President share our national policy in the expansion of our foreign commerce."

He asserted that a very erroneous picture of the situation had been presented; that the actual governmental organizations having the duty and power to shape policies in this field are few, and they are represented upon the executive committee on commercial policy.

Through that committee, said Mr. Hull, they are in active consultation with each other, and in that committee a satisfactory procedure of consultation has been developed. This, he added, is an adequate agency for effecting the purposes of the bill, "and may be trusted to continue to develop that work." The membership of the committee includes the Departments of State, Treasury, Agriculture, and Commerce; Tariff Commission and Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

CENTRALIZATION OF FUNCTIONS

He averred that there has been centralized in the hands of one agency supervision of all governmental activities affecting our export and import trade and through exchanges of views coordinating the policy between the various departments and agencies. The committee serves as a channel for the discussion of new and pressing problems in the field of commercial policy and recommends action to the appropriate agencies. For example, Hull said, the committee has concerned itself with problems arising out of the competition in the United States of certain commodities imported from Japan and has recommended means of dealing with those problems.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, the 19,000 workers in the lace mills are very much alarmed over the prospect of being added to the already large army of unemployed by the inability of their employers to continue in business in face of foreign competition.

There is on the point of consummation a reciprocal trade agreement with France. While Secretary of State Hull declines to make known his intentions in respect of rate reductions in favor of that country, French officials are said to be less secretive and to have informed their people of their success in opening the way for the marked-downward revision of the lace tariff.

These lace manufacturers and workers in my State have been joined by others in other States in appealing to Senators for aid in preventing this happening. It is a sad commentary upon the constitutionally guaranteed independence of the legislative body to have to confess that while the parliaments of other lands have the right of review over such treaty-making powers of their governments, we have surrendered such a right to the executive branch of the Government.

We, who are the direct representatives of the people, are denied a voice in determining such vital policies as the protection of our constituencies, and forced to submit them to the dictates of men who seemingly, by temperament and training, are not particularly well equipped for the duties they are assuming.

With millions roaming the streets looking for work, the question arises whether one is seeking recovery for the United States or for foreign nations.

Secretary Roper's Department of Commerce announces that in March United States exports increased about $14,500,000 over the preceding 29-day month of February, while imports were a little less than $7,500,000 above February.

His report showed that for the first time in 10 years February and March imports were greater than exports. Now, about $4,500,000 of the increase in March over February exports is due to increased sales of unmanufactured cotton—this in the list of commodities subject to seasonal influences. In contrast with this is the statement that the increase in imports for consumption was due chiefly to larger imports of sugar, textiles, hides, skins, furs, paper base stocks, and newsprint.

An analysis of the Department of Commerce figures would seem to me to warrant the apprehension of our mill workers. The textile industry has suffered the loss of a needed portion of their home market through the uncontrolled entry into the United States of Japanese textiles. Now comes the threat of more competition from France, not only in laces, but all kinds of so-called Paris manufactures.

My constituents assuredly have before them the question of whether the underlying policies, based on the theories so often expounded by Secretary of State Hull, are in fact sound and whether the Government reports, even prepared with a view to painting the brightest kind of a picture to support that official, will not show it all to be a veritable dream picture ultimating in a break-down of our economy, when it is too late for even a New Deal magician to put the parts together again.

The New York Journal of Commerce reports "U. S. held concerned on loss of position in world commerce", the headlines of the article by its Washington correspondent adding that the "belief is based on delay of March report outlining international payments." This story alludes to the contest between Secretary Hull and George N. Peek, who for a long time was the special adviser to President Roosevelt on foreign trade, over their respective viewpoints as to how to deal with our trade situation, Mr. Peek approaching the matter from a practical standpoint gained through years of actual business experience.

It relates also to our lace situation, and the article continuing in its analysis of the situation shows the efforts being made by Mr. Hull to be dictator of our trade policies. I have protested the rumored reduction in the tariff on French lace and have been informed by Secretary Hull that "thoughtful study in connection with the negotiation of trade agreements with foreign countries" is being made. I am afraid that most of this "thoughtful study" is carried on by foreign diplomats and the result will be further loss of our export market and increased unemployment.

THE AIR CORPS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to move to recommit for further study a bill recently reported by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. I refer to Senate bill 4309 to increase the efficiency of the Air Corps Reserve. I also move that a similar bill which has come over from the House of Representatives, being House bill 11920, to increase the efficiency of the Air Corps, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I feel bound to object if the motion is insisted upon. There are present on this side of the Chamber only the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], and myself. At this late hour I feel bound not to assent to a unanimous-consent agreement which undertakes to transact legislative business. I know that many Senators have left because it was the understanding that nothing else would be done except the taking of a recess after the debate on the pending business was concluded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I withdraw the request.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

NOMINATION OF WILLIAM H. STROUD—RECOMMITTAL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], I ask unanimous consent that the nomination of William H. Stroud to be postmaster at Verbena, Ala., now on the Executive Calendar, be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

NOMINATION OF GLEN A. HENDERSON—RECOMMITTAL

Mr. McKELLAR. Likewise, at the request of the Post Office Department, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination of Glen A. Henderson to be postmaster at Houlton, Oreg., also on the Executive Calendar, be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of R. Henry Norweb, of Ohio, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Bolivia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Fay A. Des Portes, of South Carolina, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Guatemala.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Raymond E. Cox, of New York, to be consul general.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry other nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the remaining nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John L. M. Irby, of South Carolina, to be State director in South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, with the exceptions of the nominations which have been recommitted, I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations, with the exceptions referred to, are confirmed en bloc. That completes the calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, April 23, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate, April 22 (legislative day of Feb. 24), 1936

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

R. Henry Norweb to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Bolivia.

Fay A. Des Portes to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Guatemala.

Raymond E. Cox to be consul general.

J. Webb Benton to be consul.

Joseph F. Burt to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Daniel M. Braddock to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Ware Adams to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

William K. Ailshie to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Ralph J. Blake to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Claude B. Chiperfield to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Albert E. Clattenburg, Jr., to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Montgomery H. Colladay to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

William S. Farrell to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

R. Borden Reams to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Arthur R. Ringwalt to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

William E. Scotten to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Elvin Seibert to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Llewellyn E. Thompson, Jr., to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

Milton Patterson Thompson to be secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION

John L. M. Irby to be State director for the Public Works Administration in South Carolina.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 22, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Merciful and eternal God, we thank Thee for the supreme expression of divine love. It transmutes the dross of selfishness; it makes a halo in the darkness and turns its shadow into morning. We would humble ourselves under Thy hand, our Heavenly Father, that we may be exalted and be used for wise and patriotic service. Inspire us with that knowledge that expresses itself in the most helpful legislation. Be with every section of our country in these unnerving times with their blendings of sufferings and joys. We beseech Thee to fill our minds with the realities of the unseen, and may we be even contemptuous of the things that frighten the weak and wreck their souls. Move us to unresting labors and ceaseless endeavor to improve the conditions of our fellow men. In the name of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 48. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of additional copies of the hearings on the bill entitled "The Revenue Act of 1936."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 12037. An act relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced providing for the control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such States, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill and concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3531. An act to amend the act entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries and for other purposes", approved May 15, 1928; and

S. Con. Res. 35. Concurrent resolution to provide for the printing of the revised edition of the Constitution of the United States of America (annotated).

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10919) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill and joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 3413. An act to give effect to the Convention between the United States and certain other countries for the regulation of whaling, concluded at Geneva, September 24, 1931, signed on the part of the United States, March 31, 1932, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 233. Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition to be held in the State of Ohio during the year 1936, and authorizing the President to invite the Dominion of Canada to participate therein, and for other purposes.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. LUDLOW submitted a conference report on the bill (H. R. 10919) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

FARM, HOME, AND SOIL REHABILITATION A NATIONAL NECESSITY—THREE ACRES AND THRIFT

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have little patience with the caustic and carping critics of this administration who assail the so-called "brain trust" and President Roosevelt's attempt to rehabilitate men and soil and the natural resources of our country. It is shocking to think that a program so fundamental to the happiness and prosperity of this country has been so long delayed. I congratulate the New Deal leaders who have had the courage to formulate the basic ground work of an agricultural and rural program, which, if carried out, will assure an unhappy part of our population prosperity, security, and contentment—the enduring foundation of a truly great government. I believe the "brain trusters" are launching a self-help program of tremendous value to the forgotten man, to the farm tenant who clings to barnlike hovels and chicken-house conveniences, and to the unfortunate rural people who have jumped from the frying pan of the barren farm into the feverish fire of city slums and there trapped by its baffling environment of poverty, vice, crime, and disease. In my opinion, these leaders with a vision will be memorialized in stone and story by future generations and their detractors buried in deserved oblivion.

The New Deal is making an important approach to, and a commendable recognition of, this stupendous problem of the rehabiliation of population and the resources of land and soil, rivers and forests, and the restoration of home ownership, and the reinstatement of the victims of misfortune to their inalienable rights of an abundant life, economic liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

What a paradox, what a reproach to our present economic system that millions deprived of employment suffer for food, clothing, and modern shelter while cribs are bursting with corn and wheat, feed yards grunting with prime cattle and fat swine, storehouses overloaded with cotton and wool, and idle mechanics eager to build with overabundant materials. The prayers for help, the pleas for employment, the demand for a solution is heard in every corner of our land. This issue must be faced, this problem must be solved. The only beacon on the horizon, the only hope that lights the future is the efforts of the present administration in inaugurating new agencies to combat this blight of today's civilization.

Mr. Speaker, 50 years after my parents had departed from a landlord's acres on the banks of Spoon River in central Illinois and had purchased lands in northwest Missouri, I returned to the scene of my childhood. Approaching this fertile land with eager curiosity I met with surprise and disappointment. Few of the early family names had survived, except in the cemeteries. Thriving small towns had been reduced to a post office, an elevator, a coal yard, and a gas station. All but a very few of my childhood playmates had sought other fields of endeavor. Only three farms in our neighborhood remained in the possession of the descendants of the pioneer families of 50 years ago. Many of the early and one-time prosperous homes and churches showed signs of neglect, and others were deserted, and some had disappeared. The river was choked, the springs and lakes dry, but the ditches were deeper.

The saddest sight of all was my first schoolhouse. In the 50 years it may have been rebuilt, but there it stood as of old at the crossroads on an acre bleak and barren, devoid of a single tree or shrub. One tree would have added beauty and value to the uninviting surroundings. It scarcely seemed possible that not one teacher in 50 years had corrected this deficiency, this ugliness of neglect, this void of beauty, that could easily have been transformed by the simple act of planting a dozen trees. But these teachers without vision, without thought of posterity, were but typical of all America, that has been ruthlessly destroying and exploiting the rich resources of our country, not only here but elsewhere and everywhere, not only in central Illinois, but throughout the 48 States of the Union. We must regretfully admit that our people, all of us, have invited the floods, the erosion, the droughts, and the dust storms, and the calamities that follow.

I have often reflected and remarked concerning the striking changes in my childhood country. What occurred there was repeated in northwest Missouri, my later home. The soil has lost much of its virgin fertility. Farms have been consolidated and many happy homes have been deserted and fallen into decay. Wherever you travel in the Middle West, the North, the East, and New England, the South, you find the constant and never-ending erosion of the soil, the cancerous growth of tenancy, and the removal and the decline of the population. Somehow I am unable to disassociate rich soil, prosperous homes, and contentment, and the correlated conclusion that poor soil breeds poverty and discontent. And I draw the further conclusion that the erosion of the soil, the destruction of national resources threaten a corresponding decadence of the population and the Nation. In reviewing this problem from a national viewpoint it seems relevant to take stock of some of the contributory causes that have added to the decline of agriculture and the migration from the farm to the city.

THE RURAL SCHOOL

The country school, the humble temple of hope and destiny, has been a factor in the great emigration of the farmer boy and girl, deserting the hearth of their ancestors and departing for the glamor of the great city. Too many of our schoolbooks, too many of our urban-awed teachers, pictured the charm and the attraction of city life and failed to see and to appreciate the values of rural life. Every gray-haired Member here still can see the great bridges pictured in the geography, along with tall and mysterious buildings, busy streets, mammoth packing houses without an odor, steel mills without grime, flour mills without dust, the gardened mansions minus the stench and poverty of slums. The problems of arithmetic were taken from the counter and the cash box, and rarely, if ever, did the rural teacher instruct a pupil how to measure a corncrib, a bin of wheat, stack of hay, or a field of corn or wheat. No attention was paid to the mathematics of the farm, the geography of the neighborhood, or to the domestic life of the community.

Fortunately, many rural teachers have awakened to the necessity of a revitalized rural school. Country students are now being taught the values of rural life. The school district with its farms, buildings, and orchards, its highways, streams, and bridges furnishes a vivid lesson in geography and map making at home. The roots of history are found in the neighborhood and in the biographies of the pioneers. The mathematics of the farm and the community keep busy the classes in arithmetic. The judging of livestock, the study of plant life, birds, and insects are among the interesting studies of modern rural schools. Drawing and household art and science afford an inviting field. Prof. Bert Cooper, of the Missouri State Teachers College at Maryville, Mo., has made a notable and worthy contribution to the cause of rural education along these interesting paths. Many years ago, as the first president of the board of regents of this teachers college, I was happy to have a part in the revitalization of the rural school, which I consider one of the important experiences of my life.

FARMERS ASK BENEFITS

The protective tariffs of this country have been framed to foster, protect, and to build industry. The farmers of this country have paid a large part of the burden of tariffs. The farmers have paid more for their clothing, their farm implements, and for many other commodities and supplies, on the theory that the final result would be a better market for the farmer and better wages for the worker. But we have witnessed that many great industrial enterprises did not pass their benefits on to the worker, but for years imported and availed themselves of the cheapest alien labor to be found. While the American worker has suffered, and now suffers, from this tremendous foreign immigration, the farmer has been obliged to sell his surplus in the foreign markets, competing with the cheapest agricultural products of the world.

While the A. A. A.—the Agricultural Adjustment Administration—had numerous difficulties, and in some of its applications aroused violent controversy, yet it was an emergency effort to equalize the benefits of domestic production and to give to the farmer in a different way the same benefit that the industrialists have enjoyed from their protective tariff. So one of the problems of the farmer is to secure the governmental aid that has been given to the industrial development of the country. Yet some of the great industries that have grown to be colossal enterprises from the tribute exacted from the farmer by enacted special privilege are the most bitter and persistent opponents of the New Deal program to spread the benefits of Federal legislation to all alike, to the manufacturer and to those who toil on the farm in the sun, the rain, and the snow. The decision of the Supreme Court in declaring the A. A. A. unconstitutional has obliged Congress to seek other methods to bring relief and economic justice to our rural population. The benefits to agriculture and industry must be balanced.

FOREIGN MARKETS UNCERTAIN

Another problem that presents itself to the farmer of today is the disappearance of our country's foreign markets for wheat and cotton, our two great agricultural surpluses. To depend upon selling this great surplus in foreign markets means that our farmers must be brought to the level of competition with the poorly paid labor of foreign lands, where the standard of living is far below our own. The inevitable conclusion is that we must control the surplus production of cotton and wheat, and other agricultural products, for our own use, and turn these productive areas into other crops and uses to provide us with other necessities and comforts of which we have a scarcity. This, too, requires careful national planning.

FAIR TRADE FOR FARMERS

Some foreign markets for agricultural products can be restored by reciprocal treaties. This is now being done by the New Deal administration. Already treaties have been made that enlarge the market for farm and orchard products as well as for industry. The reciprocal program provides for a fair exchange between nations that have a surplus. This method has already increased the demand for California fruits and other products adapted to our State. Many other sections of our country have been benefited. Reciprocity means fair trade and has many possibilities in developing a wider market. Our country consumes vast quantities of tea, coffee, sugar, rubber, silk, and other foreign products, and it is a reasonable request that the beneficiaries of our great market should reciprocate by affording a market for our surpluses.

RAILWAY DISCRIMINATION

Another factor that has been a severe handicap to the farmer is high transportation costs and the railway discrimination and rebate system that existed some years ago, at the period when our country was undergoing its most rapid industrial and agricultural development. The railroads decidedly discriminated in favor of competitive points and to these points the industries flocked and consequently the population of the country. These competitive centers still retain discriminating advantages. Coupled with the practice of promiscuous and discriminating rebates, these abuses enriched some individuals and ruined others, prospered favored industries and impoverished their competitors, and built cities at the expense of their neighboring towns. If, in those days, the industrial plants of this country could have been scattered throughout the rural sections, on the plan that Henry Ford has so successfully established a number of his plants, the country would have reached a much better balanced location and distribution of wealth and population. The manufacturing plants that are established in the cities because of railway advantages, usually in the way of favorable freight rates, have brought millions of the population from the country towns to the cities. How much better for the morale of the population if these manufacturing plants could have been distributed where the working people and the population would be in closer contact with the farms and their needful production!

The factory contiguous to the farm is an ideal situation for both the farmer and the worker. Because of the less cost of land it invites home ownership on the part of the worker. It affords him a larger plot of land and, in many instances, a few acres of land with which to augment his income. It gives him greater economic independence and enables him to own a few acres with which to provide a subsistence in his older days. In any event, he is assured of fresher vegetables, fruits, dairy products, a better living from the nearby farm, and the farmer is also benefited by accessible markets. This is an important factor that should always be considered in the regulation of transportation costs. Transportation rates have a social sequence of vast significance.

THE MACHINE AND CHEMISTRY

The machine on the farm has become an important factor. It wrought a revolution in the production of wheat and cotton and created the commercialized farm. It has displaced millions of farm laborers. The new cotton-picking machine threatens to displace a large population of whites, Negroes, and Mexicans throughout the southern sections of the country. This readjustment means loss of employment to thousands, their deprivation of tenant homes, that will prove calamitous to those displaced and heap another burden upon society and government.

Chemistry on the farm joins with the machine to add new problems to the farmer's life. Chemistry not only increases the product of acreage but it affords many substitutes for the products of the farm. While the machine has a tendency in many cases to enlarge the area of the farm, chemistry has a tendency to encourage intensive farming. The raising of vegetables by chemical substance is increasing in popularity in some parts of the country. As yet it is an unknown commercial factor, but it has possibilities that may have tremendous effects upon the future area of the farm.

SPECULATION SHOULD BE CURTAILED

One of the handicaps of the "honest to goodness" farmer is the holding of land for speculative purposes. It would be to the interest of the real farmers to establish a graduated land tax, instead of the present system. There has been a serious abuse of the fundamental principle of taxation that men should pay taxes according to their wealth. To charge the same rate to the farmer with 100 acres, who has a family to support, as against the man who has 1,000 acres, with the same sized family, or no family, is not fair taxation. The graduated tax as is now used in the taxation of incomes and inheritances is much more equitable and should be applied to real estate, not only in the country but in the cities as well. The low-income citizen with the small home or farm necessary for the use and comfort of his family is entitled to exemption or the lowest possible tax rate, which should gradually increase on larger and more expensive investments. This would not only be a fair method of taxation but it would discourage holding land in both country and cities for speculation, further discourage landlordism and commercial farming, and help the landless.

TWO KINDS OF FARMERS

The restrictions and penalties on overproduction and regulation of crops should be eliminated as far as possible from the owner of 160 acres, or a less acreage, and who lives on his farm and supports and educates his family therefrom. Whatever penalties may be administered should be levied on the absentee landlord and upon the commercial farmer as far as possible. If production is to be curtailed, it should apply to those who wring their sustenance from the farmer in the field and from the great commercial farms that compete unfairly with the dirt farmer. The so-called farmer who farms the farmer should receive secondary consideration in any governmental policy, and the farmer who follows the plow should be granted the primary aid of the Government. One of the abuses of the A. A. A. program was the distribution of too large a proportion of Government aid to the landlord and the receipt of too small a portion by the tenant and sharecropper. In many instances the landlord curtailed his acreage and production, pocketed the Government bonus, and turned the sharecropper out on the highway. This is a vicious practice.

THE RISE OF TENANCY

It is most surprising to find by the 1930 census that in the State of Mississippi more than 72 percent of the farms were operated by tenants; Georgia follows with 68 percent, Louisiana with nearly 67 percent, South Carolina with 65 percent, and Alabama closely following. In the great State of Texas, with its abundance of cheap lands, almost 61 percent of all farms of the State are operated by tenants. In the prosperous States of Iowa and Nebraska over 47 percent of the farms are occupied by tenants. In the productive State of Illinois the percentage is over 43, Missouri nearly 35 percent, California 18 percent, with Oregon and Washington following closely. Strange as it may seem, the State with the largest number of farms occupied and operated by their owners is the hilly, stony, and stumpy State of Maine, with but 4½ percent of its farms operated by tenants. The percentage of the farms of the entire United States operated by tenants was 42.4 in the 1930 census. The accumulation of large tracts of land and the growth of tenancy is a national menace that demands our profound attention.

OUR FREE LANDS GONE

A problem that confronts the American people, and one that has brought us face to face with the same problem that has troubled the people of Europe for many centuries, is that our arable public lands are exhausted and that the free homestead is no longer to be had for the asking. When our fathers and forefathers faced misfortune, or when they started out in life with few worldly possessions, they moved westward into the rich valleys, the woodlands, and the fertile prairies. There, with strong arms and eager hearts, they carved out their homes and farms and made America the great country that it is today. But the youth of this generation, if denied this opportunity of self-help, must seek employment and serve others or purchase land, much of which is held for speculation, and assume a mountain of debt.

THE HOME A CITADEL

In these days of congested city population and the growth of tenancy in our rural sections we must not overlook the importance of home building and home ownership. The country home and the city home contribute the strong attributes of good citizenship. The unmortgaged home, with the family free from debt, is a haven of comfort, fortified against the worries of doubt and uncertainty. A vine-clad cottage with its garden, its fruit, with a few productive acres, is the best security that this or any other nation affords. It is a citadel of good citizenship. It is the foundation of the church, the school, and the State. The home is an asset in a farm that must be considered in addition to its production possibilities.

The pride of home ownership, the ability to possess, the opportunity to derive a livelihood, the change from a transient to a permanent citizen and a solid member of the community have an invaluable individual and social effect. When a citizen establishes a home he becomes interested in the activities of the community, the church, the school, the civic, and political problems. His credit increases with the grocer and the doctor, and, we might add, with the automobile dealer and the repairman. Thus the citizen becomes entrenched and has a political and social as well as an economic value. Consequently, in spite of the depressing state of agriculture, the small estate, the acre tracts, become a refuge for those who find no employment or only part-time employment in our congested cities and industries.

THE ARMY OF UNEMPLOYED

Since the unemployed constitute such a large surplus in our population, these are faced with a hopeless future in the cities, where they must become a burden to the community and are reduced to a bare existence. In these days of unemployment, caused by the depression and the machine, there is little hope for the aged, as the employers generally, year by year, are employing younger men. The resettlement program and the acres out in the open afford an opportunity for self-sustenance to a continuous growing population.

One of the most fundamental programs of the New Deal is the resettlement and subsistence-homestead plans, now under the direction of the Department of Agriculture. Ways and means are being found to aid the tenant, the unemployed, and the overaged. New methods are being introduced to restore home ownership and to rehabilitate those who have fallen by the wayside. It is a plan that brightens the horizon, that rebuilds hope in the hearts of millions who have suffered discouragement and despair.

A DIFFICULT TASK

Those now looking to the land are faced with the competition of a rural population which has been in deep distress. In many parts of the country the soil is poor and ravaged by erosion. The forests that once conserved the moisture and afforded the rivers a normal flow have been destroyed, and the country subjected to alternate droughts and floods. This is a problem that cannot be met by tenants and farmers struggling with heavy mortgages. The tenant is impelled by unrelenting necessity to pay rents that spur him to exact every dollar from the soil of his field with little or no regard to future consequences. The farmer with a mortgage is driven by the same stern compulsion. Under the circumstances, there seems to be no agency except governmental to plan a resettlement and conservation program that will assist not only the tenant and the unemployed, but the mortgaged farmer, in order that they may become the owners of a home or a farm, and be enabled to rotate crops, rebuild soil, and plan their own economy, not for a single year, as does the tenant and the heavily mortgaged farmer, but for a period of years, thereby rehabilitating men and soil.

BEGIN AT THE SOURCE

Mr. Speaker, digressing for a moment, it is my opinion that in our attempts to control floods we are like that unskilled but proud home owner who began painting his house at the bottom and worked to the top. We have built great levees on the lower Mississippi and other rivers, beginning at the bottom instead at the top. Much more attention should be given to the sources of floods. Check dams and storage basins near the source are more effective, in my judgment, than the expensive and uncertain structures in the lower lands.

A BOYHOOD EXPERIENCE

When I was a small boy on a Spoon River farm, in the State of Illinois, I had an experience that grooved itself deeply in my memory and taught me a valuable lesson on the security of American life. Our family was poor. We were farm tenants, but we had rich relatives in a nearby city. At least, I thought so in my boyhood days. About 20 miles away I had an uncle who was a millwright. He dressed the stones that ground the grain at the gristmill that served the surrounding country. If I remember correctly, he earned $10 or $12 per week—a princely sum to my boyhood imagination. It was a memorable holiday when my parents, my sister, and myself were invited to this lovely little home in a small town in central Illinois. I still remember the white cottage, the green shutters, the white-painted picket fence, the front yard with grass and flowers and maple trees. In the rear was a garden and vines and berry bushes and a painted chicken house, where I gathered the eggs.

Upon our arrival the village band was in the yard—uniforms and drums and horns and other mysterious instruments that were thrilling wonders to me. It was the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of these prosperous relatives, who not only owned this delightful little home but were set up above all their neighbors and friends because they had traveled to far away Philadelphia and had attended the centennial exposition. I was privileged to remain over for a week to live and to enjoy this luxury—this little palace of white and green.

THEN MISFORTUNE CAME

Years passed away. My father and mother moved to northwest Missouri, where they purchased land on the prairies, where we all worked hard and prospered. Some years later my uncle and aunt arrived from Illinois. The mill had been closed by improved machinery and the competition from the great cities. My uncle was unemployed, a victim of the machine. He sold his little home and his furniture and with the proceeds came out to Missouri and rented a farm. He and his son purchased horses, harness, wagons, plows, and tilled the soil, but they were not successful farmers. The son became discouraged and went west to a cattle ranch in Wyoming. The uncle and aunt were disheartened. They had lost practically everything except their farm equipment. So they held another sale and now were reduced to about $500, only a fragment of what they invested. Soon my uncle and aunt for $150 had purchased 3 acres of stumpy hillside on which stood an abandoned log house. It once boasted of an orchard, but now the trees were grown up with sprouts and were full of worms and bugs. My father and I assisted our relatives to move to this desolate 3 acres. My heart ached as I thought of that comfortable little cottage back in Illinois and their reduction to this stumpy and worn 3 acres that held out such poor prospects.

THRIFT ON 3 ACRES

But the misfortunes of life had not defeated the hopes of my uncle and aunt. They were sturdy Pennsylvania Dutch. They repaired the house, dug out the stumps, trimmed the trees, bought a cow, a pig, and chickens, and in the course of a few years had a surplus of fruits and berries and vegetables, meat, milk and butter, poultry, and eggs. The table in that old log cabin was one of the most delectable and satisfying for miles around. It was always overloaded with good things to eat—with jam and jellies and preserves and honey and other delicacies. This old couple spent many years in labor and contentment. From the proceeds of 3 acres of stumpy hillside land they enjoyed a security and an abundance in life that neighbors did not attain with mortgaged farms many times as large and facilities much more ample.

As I think of it now, it was a security that defied mortgages, the ups and downs of markets of the great cities, and the richest bankers of the world. It was a security built on a rock and strong enough to withstand the adversities and the discouragements of life. Resettlement and subsistence homesteads, coupled with cooperatives, occur to me to be methods of making millions secure and content and an opportunity for that abundant life of which we dream.

The demonstration I witnessed on this thrifty 3 acres convinces me that a few fat acres and simple living is a great factor in rehabilitation of the forgotten man, and that 3 acres and thrift, 5 acres and freedom, with a humble cottage, may afford plenty, comfort, content, and freedom—all the virtues of a humble home, the secure foundation of a nation. So now I welcome and approve the efforts of this administration to restore to home ownership and fat acres of plenty, those who are unemployed, and the farm tenants who must be aided to regain a foothold to prosperity and security. Such a program is a rainbow of great promise to those engulfed by the whirlwinds and dust storms of present-day life.

A NEW FARM LIFE

Low incomes and farm drudgery drove millions of our population to the great cities during and following the World War, when wages were attractive and the cities afforded modern homes and better living. It was a great relief to the farm wife, bent with an aching back with the laborious and ancient tools of her household—the mop, the broom, the tubs, the washboard, and the waterbucket. The husband labored in the fields with the same handicaps. Well do I remember those days of drudgery, pulling water with a rope and bucket from a well on a hot summer day to quench the apparently insatiable thirst of a dozen horses, 30 head of cattle, and 100 head of hogs and pigs, and this was but a chore aside from the fields. In those days the windmill pump, to me, was the most-prized invention of the ages, and deeply envied was the fortunate owner. My enthusiasm for a new deal, a new order, and a more abundant life for the farmer is rooted in my own tedious experiences in my early life.

Today the New Deal program promises a new life on the farm. There is a possibility of power to do the pumping, the grinding, wood sawing, and other chores, along with the lighting of the home, the washing, the ironing and churning, the comforts of ice for the kitchen and dining room, and the cooling fan. About 1 American farm in 10 enjoys electrification. We are far behind many nations in this respect. My recent vote for rural electrification gave me a happy thrill. With the automobile, the telephone, the radio, the daily mail, and good roads, and with the guaranty of plenty of food and luxuries of the farm, the aspect of rural life has taken on a rosier hue. It beckons back thousands who have tramped the streets seeking but not finding employment, for thousands who have been denied the necessities of food, clothing, and shelter.

HOMES FOR ALL

In addition to reestablishing a large population in farm homes of their own, and the rehabiliation of the discouraged and the unfortunate unemployed, no activities of the Government, the State, the county, and the city, would do more to restore prosperity than the building of adequate and modern homes for our people. Throughout many sections of this country, not only rural, but in both city and country, there are millions of people living in hovels scarcely fit for the beasts of the field; millions living in shacks barren of every comfort; parents and children who know nothing by actual experience of the ordinary comforts of a bathroom and the equipment of a modern home. What goal in our national economy would compare with a modern home for every family in America? "End Poverty in California" has aroused considerable derision from those who have never felt the pinch of poverty, or who have known nothing of woeful want, but a rehabilitation program with an objective of enabling every American family to enjoy the comforts of a modern home, would be an unparalleled achievement. The Resettlement and Subsistence Homestead programs, the Bankhead-Jones bill, the Utopian and the Epic ideals, and others, point in that happy direction. If such an ideal can be achieved, ours would be a happier, a more prosperous, a more powerful America.

WOULD RESTORE EMPLOYMENT

Such a national housing program with an objective of a modern, comfortable home for every American family, a new era of "little landers", in which Federal, State, and local agencies participated, would do much for recovery. The building trade requires a large variety of mechanics and creates a demand for a very wide variety of materials, from coal scuttles to canary birds. Every industry and every commercial enterprise would share in this sort of construction—the railroads, the banker, lumberman, miner, manufacturer, along with the plumber, painter, plasterer, carpenter, and so on down to the ditch-digger. It would absorb the capital of the inventor, the materials of the merchant, and be a blessing to the unemployed, and would bestow untold benefits to our millions who are improperly sheltered.

COOPERATIVES AFFORD AID

Farmers and consumers of America have not availed themselves of the advantages of cooperatives as has been done in other countries. The dairymen of Denmark have lifted themselves from a struggling subsistence to a state of prosperity by a cooperative system of producing and marketing. A similar success is being attained in Wisconsin and adjoining States. Consumers' cooperatives have been of great aid to many people of other nations, including Sweden and Japan. The Rochdale plan in England has thrived for 90 years. It was organized with a capital of $130 and now owns and operates approximately 150 factories and also tea plantations in far-away Ceylon. Farmers in the Northwest are operating hundreds of cooperative gas stations. "Production for use", a cooperative plan to aid the unemployed of California to self-help, has many earnest advocates. The various phases of the cooperative movement are now receiving growing attention and promise much to the future farmer as well as to the consumer and the unemployed. The cooperative is certain to find a fixed and important place in our future economy.

THE DESTINY OF NATIONS

Land and water determine the destiny of nations. Blessed is a country like ours with abundant acres of fertile soil, innumerable forests, and immeasurable deposits of coal, iron, copper, oil, and other minerals that are required by an industrial civilization. The time has arrived when we must take note of the tremendous waste that has accompanied our development.

Other nations have made notable advances in the rebuilding of natural resources. The French, the Germans, the Danes, the Hollanders, and the Japanese have made marked strides in the conservation of the soil. One of the principal reasons for the prosperity, the patriotism, and the happiness of the French is due to the ownership of the land and the persistent conservation of the soil by the farmer dating back to the revolution in France. One of the contributing causes of the poverty and the degradation of the Chinese and the collapse of ancient nations has been the denuding of the hills and the mountains of forests, with resulting erosion; the waste of the topsoil and the alternating droughts and floods that have devastated the valleys and have destroyed the lives of millions. France and China represent the most vivid contrast of conservation, home ownership, patriotism, and prosperity on the one hand, and natural waste, tenancy, national indifference, and helpless poverty on the other.

Unemployment, tenancy, and the depletion of our national resources are three plagues—economic afflictions gnawing at the heart of individual independence, self-help, social security, and the liberty and patriotism of America. A program of reconstruction on a national scale, reforestation, the defeat of droughts and dust storms, checks and dams to control our floods, production of power, rural electrification, the building of decent homes, parks, and playgrounds; the development of small security estates, so that every American may live decently, is a momentous but a thrilling task. Such an undertaking requires national planning, pioneers with brains, vision, and courage. Thoughtless partisans may sneer and dub them "brain trusters" but these are the prophets of a new order leading the way to the rescue of neglected millions from poverty, decadence, and anarchy, and future generations will exalt their achievements to a secure place in the pages of our Nation's history.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY IN ILLINOIS

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] asks unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have this opportunity to appear before this body and address you this morning. This is the first time since I have been a Member of this House that I am asking this privilege. I come now because I believe I am justified in asking for this time.

During the past 3 or 4 months we have heard a great deal about what the New Deal program is doing to the country. If we are to believe the reports that have been made to us by the gentlemen to my left—Republicans—the country is already ruined.

We have watched the taking of a straw vote by the Literary Digest, and we have watched the reports that have come through the great metropolitan press of this country, and all of this has been an effort on the part of Republicans to show that the Democratic Party has made a miserable failure of its job of handling the Government of the United States; but last Tuesday was a memorable day in the great State that I represent, the great State of Illinois, the common people, the voters gave the world the truth. We told the world exactly what the American people think of the Democratic Party and our great President.

We did not have the Literary Digest to speak for us last Tuesday. We did not have the great metropolitan press last Tuesday, neither did we have the representatives of the great wealth of this country, but we did have the common people of that great State [applause]; and since those people have spoken, I believe that those who would misrepresent us are inclined to be a little more careful about their statements regarding where the country has been led under the leadership of the Democratic Party.

I have heard those who have defended the Democratic Party stand here and refer to the reports that we have seen in the financial sheets of our great dailies, which have always been in contradiction to the editorials, and to the news items that have been handed the public by those papers that would like to destroy the program of the Democratic Party; but last Tuesday, when the people of the great State of Illinois marched to the polls almost two and a half million strong to register their decision and to tell the world what they think of the New Deal, it was our great President of the United States who headed that ticket and who received more than one and a quarter million votes out of two and a quarter million votes. [Applause.]

They may try all they please to explain this away, but they cannot do it. Let me relate the story of a school happening. It is said that on one occasion there was a teacher who wanted to test the attention of the children to the work that was put on the blackboard and she asked the children to call out certain numbers. One child called out 16 and the teacher put down 61 and went on. Again a child called out 21 and that was written 12 and the teacher went on. There was one little boy in the group who seemed to be paying no attention to what was going on, and finally he was asked to call out a number and he called out 22 and said, "Goll dern you, let me see you take that one and turn it around." [Laughter and applause.]

I say to my friends on the Republican side we would like to see you take the action of the great State of Illinois as it was handed out to the public last Tuesday and "Goll dern you, turn that around."

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY FAILS THE NEGRO

I have heard a great deal said here about the sanctity of platforms. It is an easy thing to talk about. I represent a group of people who, during a period of 60 years, the only things they have got from the Republican Party were beautiful promises made by a platform that they knew was made to be broken. For more than 50 years my people have been almost solidly registered in the Republican Party. It is only during the past 4 or 5 years that Negroes have found that the Democratic Party is a safe place to live and vote.

During all this time we were told by the Republicans that we had been freed by the Republican Party; that Lincoln was elected to the Presidency of the United States for the purpose of liberating the slaves; and because of that doctrine that was preached to us year in and year out we developed into an almost solid Republican block of voters in this country.

Now, I have taken the trouble to bring to you the platform that Lincoln was elected on, and to bring to you Lincoln's inaugural address showing that there is absolutely no truth in the statement that Lincoln was elected President of the United States for the purpose of liberating the Negro slaves.

I read from his own address:

Apprehension seems to exist among the people of the Southern States that by the accession of a Republican administration their property and their peace and personal security are to be endangered. There has never been any reasonable cause for such apprehension. Indeed, the most ample evidence to the contrary has all the while existed and been open to their inspection. It is found in nearly all the published speeches of him who now addresses you. I do but quote from one of those speeches when I declare that "I have no purpose, directly or indirectly, to interfere with the institution of slavery in the States where it exists. I believe I have no lawful right to do so, and I have no inclination to do so."

I want to read you a plank from the Republican platform in 1860:

That the maintenance inviolate of the rights of the States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depends; and we denounce the lawless invasion by armed force of the soil of any State or Territory, no matter under what pretext, as among the gravest of crimes.

I say again there is absolutely no truth in the statement that he was elected to free the Negro slaves. It might have taken the Negro a long time to find out the truth, but, my friends, the vote in Illinois last Tuesday by the Negroes tells the Republican Party that it no longer has that vote in its vest pocket. [Applause.]

I think you will be interested in hearing an experience of my own. About 1928 I went to a great Democratic leader in this city and said, "I want to know what will be the attitude of the Democratic Party toward the Negro voters in 1932." I could see that the political situation was changing and that the Democratic Party was marching to power; dumb and unacquainted as I was with politics, I could see the stupendous blunders the Republican Party was making, and that the American citizens would not stand for it.

So I went to see this gentleman to talk to him about the consideration of that party to the Negro, and I believe you will bear with me when I quote the exact conversation that took place between us. I said to this gentleman, "I have come over to find out what the attitude of the Democratic Party will be toward the Negroes in 1932." He looked at me and said, "I am glad to talk to you about that subject." We were both seated in his office over here in the National Press Building. He said, "To begin with, I say to you that the Democratic Party does not owe the Negro a damn thing." I stood there, almost ready to sneak out of the office, because I did not know what was going to follow. I am merely quoting the words the gentleman used. Before I could sneak out of the office, he turned and said, "The Republican Party owes the Negro a hell of a lot, and will not pay him." He continued, "Now, politics is a cold-blooded business. For 50 years the Republican Party has had the Negro vote in its vest pocket, and have not you learned that nobody tries to catch the fish that he has in the basket or in the pail? When we go fishing, we go after the fish in the pond, those that are in the lake or the river, and as long as any party can boast that it has the Negro vote in its pocket, you may expect no consideration from that party, and you can expect less from the party that you have never affiliated yourselves with or attempted to work with." That opened my eyes, and I immediately began to work for the Democratic Party and to bring into the Democratic Party as many of my people as I could. In 1932, when Franklin D. Roosevelt sought the Presidency of the United States, I was chosen by the National Democratic Committee to trail Mr. DePriest, my predecessor in office, to speak for the Democratic Party everywhere that he spoke. During that campaign we were able to bring to the folds of the Democratic Party 60 percent of the Negro vote in those States where Negroes can vote. [Applause on Democratic side.] It is no longer true that the Republican Party has the vote in its vest pocket, and they are learning that that is not true.

My friends, I want to talk to you about the campaign that we are about to go into. I have just done some work for the national Democratic Party. I have been busy compiling statistics to be used in this campaign, and I find that in 23 States, where we expect to wage a campaign for Negro votes, where Negroes are permitted to vote, and where their votes are counted, we have more than 2,400,000 Negroes who can vote in this election. We expect to wage a campaign and to show the Republican Party, that has abused the Negroes more than it has abused this country, that we stand politically emancipated, and we are going to give the Democratic Party and the great President that I love so dearly the largest vote that any Negro group has ever given a President of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am not unconscious of the fact that in this country we carry a tremendous burden. I know that the white people of this country are burdened, and I want to tell you a story in that connection. I was in Boston a great many years ago, and I attended a meeting where they were celebrating the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. I listened with a great deal of interest to the many speeches delivered on that occasion. I heard the great men of the State of Massachusetts stand up and tell the public about the hardships and the sacrifices and the struggles made by those who landed at Plymouth Rock and founded the Massachusetts Bay Colony, and after all of these speeches had been made a woman got up and said, "I have listened with a great deal of interest to all of the speeches made by the men. They have told you of the sacrifices they made, they have told you of the struggles through which they have gone, and they have told you what they endured, but I come to tell you that the women who came over with these men not only endured all the men endured but they have had to endure the men along with it." [Laughter.] And I say to you, my friends, that the Negro race which I represent has not only had to endure all that you have had to endure but we have had to endure you along with it. I say that with the kindliest feelings. I thank God that there is no bitterness in my soul against a single individual in this world. I pity that person whose heart is so wrapped up in ignorance, prejudice, and race hatred that he cannot see real manhood and womanhood, whether it be wrapped up in a black skin or a white skin. [Applause.]

I have dedicated myself to the task that has been given me here in this Congress, and I realize that it is a technical task. I came here to sit on the Democratic side of the House, when no Negro ever before had that privilege or responsibility, and I say to my colleagues, every one of you, that you have treated me like a man. I have absolutely no complaint to make. You have received me with open arms, you have rendered me that cordial support and help that every new Congressman needs. No group of men could have been more considerate than you have been of me, and I take it not as a compliment to myself but I take it as a compliment to the race that I represent—a race that you know has borne the burdens of this country without complaint, and which, I contend, is entitled to full and equal protection of the law. I here and now raise my voice against all forms of racial discriminations and ask that my people be treated no better and no worse than the other races of this country.

ANTILYNCHING LEGISLATION

There is not a man in this House but who knows how strongly I oppose lynching and how deeply interested I am in the early passage of a bill which will make this crime punishable by a Federal law enacted by this Congress.

I know much progress has been made in the way of removing prejudice and securing support for this legislation. I shall continue to work for the passage of this bill and for the passage of other bills which I have introduced that have for their purpose removing injustices from which my people now suffer.

I stand here and ask you, speaking to the Congress of the United States, will you not be considerate of the Negroes of this country, whether they live in Massachusetts or whether they live in my native State, the State of Alabama.

I believe our general trend is upward; that we are making progress. I thank God that I was brought up at the feet of that great statesman and leader, Booker T. Washington. [Applause.] I am a natural born optimist. I do not believe we are going backward. I do not believe we have a single problem in this country that we cannot solve. I am insisting that we apply brains and thought and patience and indulgence and absolute justice to these problems, and I believe every one of them will eventually pass away.

Mr. Speaker, I have a short editorial that I would like to read. This comes from a paper in Alabama. It is one of the bright lights that has encouraged those of us who are fighting for our people and for human rights in this country. This comes from the Anniston Star and was published immediately after my election. With your permission, I am going to read it:

NOTED ALABAMA NEGROES

The people of Alabama generally should view with pride the achievements that have been made recently by two Negroes in the realms of music and politics. Both William Dawson, the Anniston musician, and ARTHUR W. MITCHELL, who is to be Congressman from the First Chicago District, the richest in the United States, got their inspiration to high achievement from Tuskegee Institute, which also has given to the world of science that great genius, Dr. George Washington Carver.

William Dawson is director of music at Tuskegee. A few years ago he was shining shoes here in this city, but on Wednesday evening of last week he had the pleasure of hearing the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Leopold Stokowski, one of the world's greatest, give the premiere performance of his fine musical composition, "Negro Folk Symphony No. 1", which has been widely acclaimed by critics who say that Dawson has genuine creative talent.

Dawson's triumph seems to verify a statement that repeatedly has been made by the Anniston Star—that the first genuinely great American music would be written by a Negro. We do not know whether the composition in question will qualify in this respect or not, but we still are of that opinion; for it has been observed that no people ever produce a great music until they have suffered, and the mental, spiritual, and physical hardships that the American Negro has undergone eventually will be expressed in terms of music, whether Dawson has done so or not. As great an artist as Lawrence Tibbett stated recently that the best singing he has ever heard was that of a Negro chorus in Birmingham. The race is peculiarly gifted in the art of song and if they once are educated we may expect from them a large contribution to American culture.

The reason that we rejoice in the election of MITCHELL to Congress is because he defeated the despicable Oscar DePriest and seems destined to keep his feet on the ground, recognizing that he can help his race only in proportion as he works with and not against the dominant race on this continent. Mitchell says that as long as his predecessor was in Congress he worked almost exclusively in the interest of his own people, although there are both whites and blacks in his district. The Democrat promises that this sort of discrimination shall be ended and that he will serve his constituency regardless of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

There will, of course, be shortsighted white persons all over the country who will resent the election of a Negro to Congress. But the Anniston Star does not share this view. We believe it would be well if we could have one or two Negroes of the Mitchell type in every State legislature to speak for their race. Indeed, there is probably not another civilized country in the world where a minority race as considerable as is the Negro race in America is given so little opportunity for self-expression. They have rights that should be recognized and the white race is hurting itself as long as those rights are denied in the various channels of social control.

It was Edgar Gardner Murphy, the great Alabama preacher and social worker, who made the statement several years ago that no graduate of Tuskegee had ever been accused of a crime against a white woman and we believe the statement holds good to this day. Certainly Booker Washington, one of the greatest Americans of all time, did a big work there and his tradition has been carried forward by Dr. Robert R. Moton, who is honored by such men as Dawson and MITCHELL, and whose proposed retirement as president of Tuskegee is to be deplored.

I say to you that you control this country, but in the language of Booker Washington it is incumbent upon your shoulders to be absolutely just and fair to every race and to every people that live under this great American flag. Mr. Washington used to say—and I repeat here—that the Law of changeless justice binds the oppressor with the oppressed and as close as sin and suffering joined they march to fate abreast.

No hardship can be worked on any group of people in this country without reacting on the group that works that hardship. I know we are approaching a better understanding in this country. The very fact that we have been treated so cordially, that the requests we have made of this Congress and the President of the United States—and I have seen him and talked to him on many occasions—the very fact that those things have always been handled cordially and respectably and been handled favorably by those who were in power tell me that we are approaching the day when these things will be settled and settled right.

I know you realize, as I do, that no great question can be settled until that question is settled right. It matters not what we think or what we do; there is a God that presides over the destinies of men; and there is no escape from that sentence or from that decision that He reaches, which must, in the final analysis, be the decision that will triumph.

My friends, I say to you that my race which I represent here appreciates the fine work that our great President has done and that this great Democratic Party has done for suffering humanity during the past few years. As I read the platforms back in various years and see the beautiful promises that my Republican friends have made to my people and then led us dumb and hopeless and voted us and took the offices and went on and forgot us until they wanted us to vote again; and then when I see what the Democratic Party has done and how you have opened bureaus, how you have invited cooperation from all over this country to settle this question amicably and with a larger degree of justice than we have had under the Republican Party, I say that you are our friends; and I hail you as our friends today. I know we are approaching better times and a larger degree of racial justice.

I do not lose patience because we are not doing this thing as rapidly as we would like to do it. I am a student of history. I know how long the white women of this country stood at the doors of you white men and knocked and begged you to let them vote. Quite a change has come over this country. As I look over this House I see women sitting side by side with us. As I look into the Senate I see women there who 30 years ago could not even vote. I look at the President's Cabinet and I see a woman sitting in the President's Cabinet. They tell me it took a century for these women to achieve the success they have achieved in that respect. If it takes a century to do what we would like to do, I still believe that that time will come, and I believe I will live to see the day when we will have the same rights in all of these States that are given all of the other citizens because we are loyal. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, let me close these remarks by using this quotation from Laurence Hope:

Men should be judged not by their tint of skin,
The gods they serve, the vintage that they drink,
Nor by the way they fight, or love, or sin,
But by the quality of thoughts they think.

[Prolonged applause, with all Democrats standing.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] has expired.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Mr. SCHNEIDER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHNEIDER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the welfare and happiness of millions of American citizens are involved in the rural electrification bill. Practically everybody enjoys electric light and power service in our cities, but only 800,000 farm homes are electrified. The remaining 6,000,000 farms are without this essential service. These farmers must grope their way in the dark and read with inadequate kerosene lamps. By Presidential order, a temporary Rural Electrification Administration was created early last summer. It was given $100,000,000 to be loaned to farm cooperatives and similar nonprofit organizations for extension of electric service into rural communities. The legislation which we now have under consideration provides that this organization be continued for a 10-year period and authorizes appropriation of $50,000,000 for the first year and $40,000,000 for each succeeding year for loans to build power lines, to set the poles, and string wires to farms.

Under this program it is not necessarily contemplated that as a rule the cooperatives and other distribution units will make their own power. They can buy it from municipal or private utilities wherever suitable prices can be secured, although, if it appears practicable and necessary to construct their own plants, money may be obtained for that purpose. Bulk production and distribution of electric energy in most cases results in cheaper rates, and this legislation aims to give the farmer the advantage of these rates.

The bill does not provide for any grants or gifts, but requires that the money be paid back over a 25-year period, with interest at 3 percent. Loans for wiring of houses, purchase of electrical appliances and equipment and plumbing fixtures are also authorized. The proposed legislation provides that these loans may be made to any distributing cooperative or municipal unit organized under this law, or to any person, firm, or corporation supplying or installing the wiring, appliances, and equipment.

The need for this legislation is demonstrated by the fact that only about 10 percent of our American farms now have this essential electric-power service. In Japan and France 90 percent of the farm homes are electrified, while in Sweden the percentage is about 50 percent. The highly successful publicly owned Ontario power system gives service to a much larger proportion of the rural communities. This is done in Ontario at lower rates, in country similar to ours, although conditions are not so favorable, because the territory is more sparsely settled than many of the farm communities in the United States.

One of the reasons rural electrification has lagged in this country has been due to the fact that our utility organizations are largely privately owned. These private companies have been disinclined to extend service to rural sections, especially those not thickly populated. Interested only in the largest possible profits, they apparently want only the cream of the power business and have served only the best territory.

Farmers are required to pay the cost of the lines within a period of 3 or 4 years. The company then owns the lines, and the farmer continues to pay high rates based on the increased capitalized value of the equipment which he paid for in the first place. Under the R. E. A. program the farmer, when he pays for the line, owns it, and does not have to continue to pay tribute to the Power Trust.

Utility construction shrank from about $920,000,000 in 1930 to $100,000,000 in 1934. Since the Government has encouraged farm cooperatives and similar groups to build their own lines, thus giving themselves the advantage of a low rate, the companies have changed their attitudes and in many places they are now offering special inducements to farmers to sign up with them and thus defeat the R. E. A. program.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me to the subject of the drastic change made in this bill since it was approved by the Senate and brought to the House for action. The private utility companies now want to grab this Government money, originally intended to be loaned to the farmers' own organizations to extend electric service where the corporations have previously refused to give service.

Not content with the great doles which business has received from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Power Trust is now reaching for this money originally intended for agricultural people to enable them to bring to the agricultural workers that burden-lifting servant—electricity. I am utterly opposed to the action of the House committee in letting down the bars to enable private corporations to participate in this program. I hope that the conference committee of the two Houses will recommend restoration of the original bill, under which the money will be available only for farm cooperatives, States or municipalities, power districts, and other nonprofit organizations.

Farmers, their wives, and families are entitled to this service. It should be possible for them to discard the kerosene lamp and hot cook stove. To them electric-power service is even more important than to the city dwellers. It will pump their water, grind their feed, separate the cream, and perform numberless other chores which now make farm life burdensome.

Private companies have failed to provide this service. Due to payment of high salaries, expensive advertising, and propaganda campaigns, and excessive service charges of holding companies, electric power, drawn from our natural resources, has been denied to the farmer. If he is to get it in the future, at rates which he can afford to pay, it must come through his own nonprofit organizations.

What would the opponents of this legislation do? Would they permit the private power monopoly to continue to deny electric service to the American farmer. Monopolistic practices of the privately owned utilities and their determination to maintain high rates, to bring a return upon alleged capital that never was invested, have made this legislation necessary.

The manner in which publicly or cooperatively owned utility systems can give good electric service at rates far below those charged by the ruthless Power Trust is well illustrated by the experience of two of the leading cities in my congressional district of Wisconsin.

In Manitowoc, a city of over 25,000, the electric plant and distribution system was purchased by the city and placed in charge of a nonpartisan public-utilities commission in 1914. The purchase price was $146,000 and general city obligations, issued to pay for the plant, were all retired 2 years ago. The plant was replaced a few years later at a cost of $110,000 and yet there has been returned to the city treasury from profits of the utility a total of $536,794, amounting to $355,787, more than the original investment from general city funds plus the interest paid for a few years until the utility could assume this burden.

The city of Manitowoc no longer pays tribute to the Power Trust. With the local utility on a sound financial basis, they are able to charge rates far below those in force in the 13 other cities in Wisconsin with populations ranging from twenty to fifty thousand and served by private companies. A recent table prepared by the Wisconsin Public Service Commission shows Manitowoc charges 70 cents for the first 20 kilowatts, while the rates of private companies in the other 13 cities run from a minimum of $1.24 to a high of $1.78 for the same amount of power. Consumers of larger amounts of electric power enjoy even more favorable rates when compared with those charged by the private power monopolies.

The city of Kaukauna, population 6,581, purchased its power plant in 1912. All money advanced by the city has long since been repaid. Nearly $300,000 has been paid out of profits of the utility at various times for city improvements, including the municipal building, municipal garage, bridges, and fire-fighting equipment. Kaukauna has a much lower rate than any city with privately owned electric companies of the five to ten thousand population class, although some other cities with municipally owned plants have lower rates.

In addition to the city of Kaukauna, this plant serves the neighboring village of Little Chute and owns 60 miles of rural lines, serving over 200 farm customers.

Electric power service lightens the burdens on the farm. Those engaged in agricultural pursuits are anxious to secure this service and are cooperating in every way when they see a chance to get electricity at rates that they can afford to pay. Experience both in Wisconsin and throughout the country shows that this service can be made available to rural communities at reasonable rates by municipal power plants or cooperative organizations. The rural electrification program should be approved as originally planned by that great fighter for adequate and reasonably priced electric service, Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska. We must resist every attempt of the Power Trust to sabotage and defeat this plan to bring that great necessity, electric power, to American farms.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, at this time I rise to a point of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I received confidential information by telephone about 2 weeks ago that I was to be framed by the Department of Justice, the great G-man. It raised a question of reasonable doubt in my mind. I did not think they would be quite that bad.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. This morning, Mr. Speaker, I received a letter from Jackson Heights, N. Y., dated April 18, 1936, which tells about the G department and how this party has deciphered their telegrams. On the third page of this letter there appears a deciphered telegram. I will give the code if the Speaker wants me to, but it does not mean anything to anyone.

Mr. Speaker, I do not care whether they shoot me or not, at least I will take it standing up any time they want to come up and get started.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will first state his question of personal privilege. The Chair will rule upon that, then the gentleman, if he is in order, will have an hour. Has the gentleman stated his question of privilege?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have stated the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is familiar with the rule.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include this entire letter in the RECORD together with an article from Harper's Magazine of January 1936, which has been called to my attention after this request.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his question of personal privilege?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes; I withdraw the question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks and to include therein the letter to which he has referred. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding that the letter in no way involves any other Member of Congress, I shall not object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I do not think it does.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

HANS OMENITSCH.
35–45 EIGHTY-SECOND STREET,
Jackson Heights, N. Y., April 18, 1936.

Representative ZIONCHECK,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: Permit me to compliment you on your courageous stand in the Department of Justice matter.

You are on the right track.

A criminal system of codes is operated daily in the press by the real masters of the country, who not only control the press and the politicians in power but who also control and direct the so-called "red" movement (international) as a sham to hide their real operations.

This group is in a conspiracy against the people and the country.

My work in exposing this group dates back to February 1935, and I have most diligently informed the Department of Justice and Director Hoover of the Bureau of Investigation since then with no other result than that the code is frequently changed.

I shall herewith list concrete proofs of the operation of this code, and would appreciate an opportunity to appear before the House and the Senate.

It will be a hard fight to force this issue, but you owe it to the people on your oath of office.

The exposure of this code was at stake in the Lindbergh case; that is why no amount of the people's money was spared to suppress the real solution and to close the case by executing Hauptmann.

Through tireless search for the past 14 months I have found the master key to this code, and, since it was operated in the press, it is on record, and we can now read history backward and once more set the people free by exposing the financial piracy which has enslaved them through the operation of this criminal code and through which criminal operation all the wealth of the world was concentrated into the hands of this group.

All they need now is a dictatorship to protect their plunder, and for this reason they are fostering and directing the "red" movement in order to suppress it in due time in the guise as the saviors of the Nation.

America, awake!

SHOOT TO KILL?—A NOTE ON THE G-MEN'S METHODS

By Howard McLellan

I

The most recent applications of the police doctrine of "shoot on sight and shoot to kill" were the annihilation last September of the young New Orleans surgeon who assassinated Senator Huey P. Long and the killing a few weeks later of a New Jersey farm woman by deputy sheriffs seeking to serve upon her husband a court order citing him for contempt. They were horrifying examples of the application of a doctrine which has been translated into deadly action many times during the past few years, at a cost which has been lost sight of in the melodramatic atmosphere which surrounds the taking of human life by violent means.

There is, for instance, the case of the unlamented John Dillinger. In doing away with him the doctrine of shoot on sight and shoot to kill was translated into action by officers of the Government with wide approval from the public. But of the costly aftermath no reckoning has been made.

No doubt about it, Dillinger was a bad man. Public approval was vociferously bestowed upon the Government police agent who gave the signal to kill him outside the little motion-picture theater on Chicago's north side. Branded as America's public enemy no. 1, after Alphonse Capone of the same city had forfeited his right to the title by being convicted of an income-tax evasion, Dillinger had become a symbol of diabolical evil in human form; and when news reels flashed upon the screen photographs of his bullet-pierced body audiences manifested their hate of him and their approval of his slayers by shrieks, clapping of hands, whistling, and stamping of feet—somewhat as audiences in Roman amphitheaters expressed themselves when Christians were thrown to the lions. The hero of these demonstrations, the antithesis of public enemy no. 1, was a little, square-jawed man (and a lawyer, by the way) named Melvin H. Purvis, who was special agent in charge of the Chicago office of the United States Department of Justice. Mr. Purvis had not actually fired at Dillinger. His 12 or 15 men had done the firing. Mr. Purvis had merely clenched his hand and the firing had begun. But that was enough to make him public hero no. 1.

In giving the signal to kill Dillinger, Agent Purvis was acting under the doctrine of "shoot on sight and shoot to kill", which had been enunciated not only by many responsible high police officials but also by his superiors in the Department of Justice. His immediate chief, J. Edgar Hoover (also a lawyer), had publicly stated that the policy of his Division of Criminal Investigation was "Act first, talk afterward", and "to shoot straight and get the right man." Joseph B. Keenan, Assistant Attorney General, had publicly stated, when the Department set out to get Dillinger, "I don't know when or where we will get him (Dillinger), but we will get him, and I hope we get him under such circumstances that the Government will not have to stand the expenses of a trial." When Homer S. Cummings, the Attorney General, was told of the killing of Dillinger, he said to the press, "The news of tonight is exceedingly gratifying as well as reassuring." Even such an able and long-experienced lawyer as Mr. Cummings did not pause to consider what eventually would be the cost of endorsing the shoot-on-sight doctrine.

It is true that great provocation stirred these representatives of official justice. A special agent of their Department had been slain in a battle with desperadoes in the Wisconsin woods. But that killing had not been attributed to Dillinger. Mr. Hoover had publicly charged the slaying to George "Babyface" Nelson, said to have been an associate of Dillinger's. Then, it will be asked, for what crime did the Department of Justice want Dillinger? Here it is necessary to emphasize a fact brought out by only one observer, Turner Catledge, Washington correspondent for the New York Times, who wrote. "Not a single word of complaint has reached Washington about Department of Justice agents stretching the Constitution when they drilled a couple of holes in John Dillinger last Sunday night. * * * Nevertheless, Dillinger's only known Federal offense was the transportation in interstate commerce of a stolen automobile. For this the offender is seldom shot on the spot. When Federal bullets dropped him to Chicago pavements he (Dillinger) was not in an automobile."

You probably will remark, "Why, Dillinger had robbed banks and killed people!" He had done both; but Federal laws making it a felony to rob national or Federal Reserve banks and making it a capital crime to kill a Federal officer had been passed in May 1934; Dillinger's crimes against national banks had been committed previously, and the law could not be retroactively applied to him. And as to the murder of the Department of Justice agent in Wisconsin, that also had been committed before the passage of the law which put it under Federal jurisdiction; and, for another thing, Mr. Hoover attributed that crime to Nelson. Thus, as a matter of strictly legal reasoning, the only crime Dillinger had committed against Federal statutes was the minor offense of transporting a stolen automobile across State lines, and, as Mr. Catledge wrote, for that the offender is seldom shot on the spot. "But," he added, "the Federals got him and they are out to get more of his ilk, dead or alive, on whatever pretext they can invoke the majesty of the United States Government."

Let no one now be aroused to pity by the suspicion that Dillinger was unjustifiably slain; that the powerful Federal Government resorted to pretext to enforce the doctrine of shoot on sight and shoot to kill. He was an out-and-out bad man. The question to be considered is not whether there was a possible violation of the due-process clause of the Constitution, or a possible violation of the principle of State rights by agents of the Department of Justice, but, rather, what was gained or what was lost by shooting Dillinger on sight.

II

Dillinger's record may be divided into two periods: The period when no order to shoot him on sight had been given out, and the later period when such an order was widely in effect. The first period finds him credited with five hold-ups between September 1924 and September 1933. But no killings were involved in these crimes. Moreover, these crimes were never proved against him. They were merely credited to him by peace officers, and there is a vast difference between crimes credited to a man by the police and crimes proved in a court of law. Frequently police officers credit a man with crime which cannot be proved in court.

In September 1933 Dillinger was captured and held in jail in Lima, Ohio, and escaped when confederates of his killed the sheriff. Though he was the cause of this killing, Dillinger was not credited with it and others were jailed and tried for the murder. Thus in the early part of his criminal career Dillinger was not credited with killings.

During the period from October 1933 to December 13, 1933, he was credited with five hold-ups, two of which were raids upon police stations for the sole purpose of procuring guns and ammunition. Although policemen were in the station houses when the raids were made, supposedly by Dillinger and his gang, no policemen were shot. On December 13, 1933, according to the record of crimes credited to Dillinger, he and his gang robbed a Chicago bank, but shot no one.

Up to this time Dillinger had given scant attention to Chicago banks. This may have been because Chicago was the domain of crime overlords who had deadly ways of eliminating competition by outside bandits. At any rate, immediately after the Chicago bank robbery the police of that city publicly announced their determination to kill Dillinger and his allies on sight.

In view of the history of crime in Chicago, this order to shoot on sight and shoot to kill was rather unusual. So far as we know, Dillinger had not committed murder; and during all the time that Alphonse Capone was in power in Chicago and no less than 127 murders were credited to him, no such order had ever been given the police to kill Capone on sight.

On the night that the order to kill Dillinger and members of his gang on sight was published they descended upon a roadhouse near Chicago, held it up, and shot and wounded two highway policemen. A day or so later John Hamilton, a Dillinger henchman, was cornered by the Chicago police, but shot his way out of the trap and killed Police Sgt. William T. Shanley. Six days later Edward Shouse, another Dillinger aide, shot and killed an Indiana State policeman. These killings of police officers were undoubtedly the answer of Dillinger and his men to the order to shoot them on sight; for although on two previous occasions they had raided police stations and officers were present, there had been no casualties among the officers.

Then, on the night of January 15, 1934, Patrolman William P. O'Malley was talking with a friend near the First National Bank in East Chicago when he was shot and instantly killed. O'Malley was utterly unaware that the bank was being robbed, but such was the fact. The robbery and murder were again credited to Dillinger and his men. It should be quite obvious why O'Malley was shot. Although he was not aware of the robbery, he was a minion of the law, and thus to Dillinger and his aides was a man who at any moment might fire at them.

One begins to discern the cost in lives of the doctrine of shoot to kill. Two officers wounded and three killed within a few weeks after the order went out, and none of Dillinger's crew either shot or killed!

Immediately after the killing of O'Malley the shoot-to-kill cry was raised in States adjacent to Illinois. In Cleveland, Ohio, the police rigged up a target in a basement and, as a daily routine, indulged in pistol and rifle practice. The target was a life-size photograph of Dillinger's face. Dillinger probably knew about this, for a photograph of the officers shooting at his face was widely published.

However, in distant Tucson, Ariz., no order to kill Dillinger and his men had gone forth. Yet in that small city the police rounded up Dillinger, his men, and their women, without the firing of a shot! As a matter of fact the desperadoes had left their guns behind in their hotel apartment. No order to kill them on sight had been broadcast in Arizona. Dillinger was rather chagrined about having been picked up by a bunch of "hick" cops.

Taken back to his home State, Indiana, Dillinger was confined in the Crown Point county jail. It is interesting to note the observations about his credited record which Dillinger made in confinement.

"Let them prove I'm guilty", he said. "Don't the law consider a guy innocent until he's proven guilty? Well, I'm innocent, but it looks like I'll get the "works" though. They got me charged with everything from strangling goldfish to stealing the socks off a blind man. Why, they've even got me tagged with bank jobs I couldn't have committed. Two and three bank jobs in different States at about the same hour on the same day when I couldn't have been in all the places at the same hour."

This, of course, was the sort of display of bravado usually made by criminals when captured, or at least so it was regarded; but the fact remains that almost every important robbery committed in the Middle West had been credited to Dillinger and some of them it would have been impossible for him to commit.

Dillinger was asked to elucidate his statement that it looked as if he would "get the works." He explained that he meant that the order was out to shoot and kill him.

On March 3, 1934, Dillinger made a sensational escape from Crown Point jail, taking with him as hostages a fellow prisoner, a deputy sheriff, and a garage attendant. Dillinger effected his escape by using a wooden pistol which he had fashioned from a washboard and had blackened with stove or shoe polish. It is said, however, that Dillinger's confederates on the outside paid $20,000 to aid him in getting away. It was this escape which led to the publication of a photograph showing Dillinger with his arm over the shoulder of the county prosecutor and the prosecutor's arm round Dillinger's shoulder, while the lady sheriff in charge of the jail looked on, smiling blandly. It is worthy of mention that when the lady sheriff found that her dangerous prisoner had fled she announced that if she ever laid eyes on him she would shoot him down.

The shoot-to-kill order still stood against Dillinger and all who had been associated with him. A few days after the break from Crown Point the negro convict who had escaped with Dillinger was killed in Michigan, but an under sheriff also was killed—the fourth officer to lose his life since the shoot-to-kill command had been broadcast. About this time the Federal Department of Justice became interested in Dillinger. At sometime during his travels he had crossed State lines in a stolen car, and that was a Federal offense. On the front pages of newspapers there were many references to the great activity of the Department's agents at target practice.

The first appearance of these agents in the Dillinger chase was in St. Paul, when they appeared at an apartment and were greeted by the deadly rattle of machine guns. They returned the fire. Dillinger was wounded and his companion, Eugene Green, was fatally wounded, but both escaped. A few days later, Dillinger appeared in a surgeon's office, leveled his gun at him, and forced the surgeon and a nurse to give him medical treatment.

In the meantime, agents of the Department of Justice were being massed for the hunt. In spite of the fact that the Federal Government was now after him, Dillinger appeared in his home town in Indiana, and visited his father. Next, Dillinger was heard of in a summer resort in northern Wisconsin, where it was reported he had gathered with his gang and a notorious Middlewest desperado, Lester M. Gillis, alias George "Babyface" Nelson. Federal agents surrounded his hiding place, and there was a fierce battle in which Agent W. Carter Baum and a C. C. C. worker were killed, and two civilians, a constable, and a Federal agent were wounded. The gang escaped.

There was criticism of the strategy of the Justice agents for not having taken into their confidence the local police who were familiar with the section; for failing to watch the back door of the inn, through which the desperadoes escaped; and for failing to erect a barrier against escape at a bridge (which it was said the local police might have helped them to do).

Dillinger was not credited with the killing of Agent Baum. Nelson was singled out as the man who had committed the murder. The score of dead now stood: five peace officers killed since the shoot-to-kill order, and one civilian also killed, making six dead in all. And Dillinger and his chief lieutenants were still at large.

Incensed over the slaying of one of its agents and the wounding of another, the Department of Justice threw additional men into the search and offered a substantial reward for Dillinger dead or alive; and Assistant Attorney General Keenan, who no doubt had ample provocation for feeling as he did about it, made the statement that he hoped Dillinger would be taken in such a way that the Government would be spared the cost of a trial.

The search for Dillinger came to an end outside the little neighborhood motion-picture theater in North Chicago on the night of July 22, 1934, when Chief Agent Purvis gave the signal to his 12 or 15 men to drop him.

The hunt for "Babyface" Nelson continued. In December 1934 the Department of Justice got a tip that Nelson was heading for a house near Barrington, Ill. Among the agents who went after him were Samuel Cowley and Herman Hollis. Cowley and Hollis both had been present at the execution of Dillinger. Hollis, it is said, had fired the shot which dropped Dillinger. Both men were young law-school graduates. They displayed no lack of courage when they went up to the house near Barrington where Nelson was believed to be hiding. But this brave act cost both agents their lives, for Nelson met their approach with gunfire. Nelson himself was wounded and his body was later found wrapped in a blanket. Cowley and Hollis had been told to give Nelson no quarter, and he likewise gave them no quarter, knowing that his pursuers were out not to capture him but to kill him.

III

Dillinger and Nelson were dead—but what of the cost in lives of peace officers? It was war, of course, but what shall we say of a strategy of war based upon the principle of giving three lives for one of the enemy's? No criticism of the acts of Agents Baum, Cowley, and Hollis is intended. They were acting not only under orders to get Nelson dead or alive but also in defense of their own lives. It is the shoot-to-kill doctrine which I am questioning.

And here arises another question. Were the processes of justice aided either by the death of Nelson or the death of Dillinger? It should be borne in mind that both desperadoes were credited with long lists of crimes. It is said they were linked with vast underworld machines, that they were aided and abetted by crooked politicians, and that each of them possessed intimate and exact knowledge of the extensive ramifications of underworld systems responsible for the many robberies and kidnapings and much political corruption in the Middle West. Many of these crimes remain unsolved or only partially solved. As soon as Nelson and Dillinger were killed all the crimes with which they were credited were presumably cleared up and closed. Some 25 crimes credited to Dillinger were disposed of by his death, and many more were disposed of by Nelson's death.

It is a common practice among the police automatically to consider crimes closed when the man credited with them is killed or dies by his own hand. Thus when Legs Diamond was shot by enemies the crimes with which Diamond had been credited were automatically wiped off the slate. Only the other day a young gunman was arrested for a murder, and when he was found hanged in his cell the police announced that he had been credited with no less than a hundred murders, though none had been proved against him.

A few years ago a former Texas ranger ended with a machine gun the careers of two desperate Southwest characters—Clyde Barrow and his "moll", Bonnie Parker. "They were responsible for no less than 19 murders", he announced. Those murders had not been proved against them; any associates they may have had were still at large; yet it was considered that the majority of those credited murders were cleared up and the cases closed. It is true that the Department of Justice did an excellent job of sending away a ring of conspirators who had aided Barrow and the girl in their escapes, but it had to do so without the aid of the two principals who might have been forced to divulge much more information regarding murders and robberies and underworld alliances. Likewise it is true that the Department of Justice did splendid work rounding up some of Dillinger's confederates. But it by no means uncovered all the valuable information it might have presented in court if Dillinger and Nelson, the principals in the crimes, had been brought to trial.

It would have been highly valuable, as an aid to the study of modern crime and as a guide for future police action in dealing with criminals and their rings, to have been able to force from Dillinger or Nelson statements about their careers, their methods, and the means by which they were able to hide so long. With both of them dead the possibility of such an exploration was eliminated.

There is yet another aspect of the practice of disposing of criminals by the shoot-to-kill method. Suppose you were a criminal who had actually committed one or more of the crimes credited to a dead criminal, would you rejoice and feel emboldened to continue in crime when you found that the crimes you had committed were credited to a dead man and that his death meant that the police would drop their investigations of those crimes? To this query there is the suggestion of an answer in the fact that bank robberies in the very belt where Dillinger and Nelson operated were not halted by their deaths. As many, if not more, crimes of robbery have been committed in that belt since then. Committed perhaps by imitators of the dead bandits? If this be so then the extermination of Dillinger and Nelson did not prove a deterrent.

IV

Now, you may ask, what should I do? It is all very well for me to sit pounding at my typewriter at a safe distance. What should I do—have officers risk their lives to capture, alive, known killers who might very likely be set free by weak-kneed juries won over by slick lawyers? To this I frankly reply that I wouldn't for the world want to be in the shoes of any peace officer, or civilian for that matter, who is after a criminal over whose head hangs an order to shoot to kill. The mortality rate is too high.

Or I might point, with considerable assurance, to the Department of Justice's fine job of disposing of the live robber and kidnaper known as Machine-Gun Kelly. Not a shot was fired to take this notorious criminal whose skill with a machine gun was so great that he frequently shot his initials in barns with his gun. Kelly was taken alive, and what probably amounts to the most thorough clean-up of a big criminal gang was accomplished by the Department of Justice when it sent to prison not only Kelly and his gang but all the conspirators, some 20 in all, even those who merely had touched the ransom money. This happened in 1933 and the Government prosecutor who did the splendid job, in court, was none other than Joseph B. Keenan, the Assistant Attorney General, who later was to broadcast the not unfulfilled hope that Dillinger would be taken in a way that would save the Government the expense of a trial.

Kelly, who had robbed banks right and left, was wanted by Oklahoma authorities as a ringleader in the kidnaping of Charles F. Urschel, from whose relatives was extorted, under threats of death, a ransom of $250,000. In Memphis, Tenn., the local police were advised that Kelly and his wife were living in a bungalow in that city. Police detectives and Department of Justice agents kept the house under observation all night. On a dining-room table at which Kelly sat was an automatic pistol; on the floor were several sawed-off machine guns, his favorite weapon. At 6 in the morning Detective Sgt. W. J. Raney slipped into the house. The bedroom door opened, and there stood Kelly, a gun in his hand, ready. The detective, who had been trained to look at a quarry's hands and not at his face, made one move. He shoved his shotgun barrel into Kelly's stomach and said, "Drop that gun." And Kelly dropped it.

"I've been waiting all night for you," said Kelly grinning.

"Well," said Raney, "here we are."

So far as I have been able to discover, no order to shoot on sight and shoot to kill hung over Kelly's head, though he was supposed to be a cop killer; and when the trial took place Kelly and his coconspirators were present for the jury to look at and witnesses to identify, and eventually a score of persons were sent away to expiate the crime, although many of them had played only minor roles. It is not at all singular that after this clean-up the kidnaping rate in that part of the country suffered a healthy decline.

But would it have been possible for Agent Purvis and his 12 or 15 men to take Dillinger alive? There may be differences of opinion as to this. At any rate, Mr. Purvis' account of what happened is available for consideration.

"When Dillinger left the show (the motion-picture theater)", Mr. Purvis told reporters, "he started south and again passed my car without noticing me. As soon as he had gotten a step past my car I thrust my right arm out of the car, dropped my hand and closed it, the prearranged signal for closing in. Instantly my men appeared from all sides. * * * As he (Dillinger) ran he drew an automatic pistol from his pocket. Several shots were fired by my men before he could fire. He dropped mortally wounded. I had hoped to take him alive, but I was afraid that he would resist to the last."

Did Dillinger appear suddenly out of the theater, and were the armed agents surprised to see him? Here is another part of Mr. Purvis' statement (the italics are mine): "It was late yesterday afternoon when I received undercover information that Dillinger would attend the movie. * * * I hurriedly made arrangements to surround the theater with picked men from among my investigators. They were armed only with pistols. I wished no general firing that might endanger passers-by.

"I stationed myself in my own automobile, parked two doors south of the theater. My men were stationed in doorways about the theater. It was shortly before 9 o'clock when I first noticed Dillinger.

"As he bought a ticket * * * I knew I was not mistaken. Those two hours that he spent in the theater were the longest I ever spent. By the time he left the show our plans were complete * * * my men were covering the neighborhood so thoroughly that a cat couldn't have gotten through."

And presently Mr. Purvis and the Department of Justice had on their hands a dead man who could tell no tales.

Why, during those 2 hours while they were waiting and Dillinger was in the theater, didn't Mr. Purvis and his men close in upon Dillinger in the theater? There he was, sitting absorbed in the film upon the screen, his mind probably far from thoughts of pursuit and pursuers. Mightn't the agents have gone into the theater and, while Dillinger's back was to them, his eyes on the screen, have taken seats behind him, watched him for a moment, his arms particularly, and then seized his arms, an arm to an agent, and overpowered him without the firing of a shot—with other agents running up to lend their help in his complete subjugation? Mr. Purvis explained that he wished no "general firing that might endanger passers-by." Yet when shots were fired by his agents on the sidewalk two women passers-by were wounded; the wait of 2 hours did not prevent what he wished to avoid.

Here the point is sure to be raised that shooting in a theater, or the moves necessary to capture Dillinger in the theater, might have led to a panic or to the wounding of persons. On this point there is this to say, and it is based upon my own experience as a reporter observer of the police. Time and again skilled detectives have successfully closed in upon dangerous criminals while they were seated in crowded theaters, trains, lobbies, and other places of public assembly, and without firing a shot. As a matter of fact, this method has been so successful, especially if the wanted man's attention is absorbed in something, that it is commonly accepted as the best and safest way to take a desperate man. It is known in police circles as the "close-in."

Perhaps Mr. Purvis may not have thought of it in the 2 hours he sat there, knowing his man was inside. Anyhow, Mr. Purvis very probably was doing, in his judgment, what he thought proper, and it is not for one who was not there to say that he would have done otherwise than Mr. Purvis did. It should also be borne in mind that Mr. Purvis from the moment he saw Dillinger enter the theater was under no compulsion to take him alive. From authorities higher than himself came the license to shoot Dillinger on sight and shoot to kill.

But it is interesting to speculate as to what would have happened to Dillinger if 12 or 15 United States Secret Service operatives of the Treasury Department, or the same number of post-office inspectors, had been after him, had observed him go into the theater. Would they have taken him alive? The answer to this is that these older detective branches of the Government always prefer to catch their quarry alive and to let the courts deal with him. So it was with Guiteau, who assassinated President Garfield in 1881; with Czolgosz, who killed President McKinley in 1901; and with Giuseppi Zangara, who shot at President Franklin D. Roosevelt and killed Mayor Anton Cermak, of Chicago. These armed men were captured, disarmed, tried, and executed in orderly fashion.

The Secret Service's principal job is to protect the Nation's currency against counterfeiting. It moves quietly and swiftly and is the least publicized of the many Federal detective services. And in dealing with counterfeiters it pits its wits against criminals of the most desperate types, many of them outcast Sicilian criminals to whom murder is not only a fine art but a much practiced art. But there is no evidence that in dealing with them (the same is true of Post Office inspectors) the Secret Service follows a policy of shooting on sight, even when dealing with armed assassins of Presidents.

To those familiar with the work of the Secret Service it is no secret that its operatives are unusually well posted on the haunts, habits, technics, and specialties of counterfeiters. They know the type of men who take up counterfeiting and all the tricks of the trade, and once assigned to a counterfeiting operation, they proceed with full knowledge of what they may expect to find. And how do they come into posession of this helpful knowledge? The answer is quite simple. They take their quarry alive, usually with his plants and all his confederates. Live counterfeiters, brought face to face with an orderly trial and stern justice, invariably make certain overtures looking toward leniency, and presently the Secret Service is in possession of all the latest data on counterfeiting as well as valuable information concerning other counterfeiters, new technics, and so forth. Dead counterfeiters could not supply this information. Shoot on sight and shoot to kill is not, therefore, a profitable doctrine for the Secret Service.

Criminals have a great respect for the Secret Service, and not because its operatives carry guns. Guns are available to the underworld as well as to the Secret Service, but it is difficult for the underworld to match a superior set of brains. There also is this pleasant fact about the Secret Service. The mortality rate among its members is low. Secret Service men are rarely shot. This is not because the operatives do not face guns in their work. Rather it is because the quarry is aware that his nemesis is after live specimens and not dead ones. Into the mind of the armed counterfeiter comes the happy thought not to reach for his gun, for he knows that the Secret Service man who confronts him is not out to shoot on sight and shoot to kill.

UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. R. 11302, to authorize the Secretary of War to lend to the Reunion Committee of the United Confederate Veterans 3,000 blankets, olive drab, no. 4; 1,500 canvas cots, to be used at their annual encampment to be held at Shreveport, La., in June 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to lend, at his discretion, to the reunion committee of the United Confederate Veterans, for use at the United Confederate Veterans' Encampment, to be held at Shreveport, La., June 9, 10, 11, and 12, 1936, 2 hospital ward tents, with all pegs, poles, and equipment necessary for their erection; 1 storage tent complete with all equipment; 1 large wall tent complete with all equipment; 6 small wall tents complete with all equipment; 10 pyramidal tents complete with all equipment; 50 14-quart G. I. buckets; 3,000 blankets, olive drab, wool; 1,500 canvas folding cots; 1,500 comforters; 1,500 cotton-felted pillows complete with cotton pillowcases; 3,000 cotton bedsheets: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of said property; the same to be delivered from the nearest quartermaster depot at such time prior to the holding of said encampment as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the Confederate reunion committee: Provided further, That the Secretary of War, before delivery of such property, shall take from said reunion committee of the United Confederate Veterans a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BARBARA BACKSTROM

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following concurrent resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 36

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Vice President and of the Speaker of the House of Representatives in signing the enrolled bill (H. R. 4387) entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Barbara Blackstrom", be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of said bill the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed to insert the name of "Backstrom" in lieu of the name "Blackstrom" where it appears in section 1 of the amendment of the Senate to the text of said bill and in the amended title.

The Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OMNIBUS PRIVATE CLAIMS BILLS

The SPEAKER. Under the special order, the Clerk will report the first omnibus claims bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 8524. For the relief of sundry claimants, and for other purposes.

SOUTHERN OVERALL CO.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title VI—(H. R. 4408. A bill for the relief of the Southern Overall Co.)

That the claim of the Southern Overall Co., growing out of proxy-signed contract of November 28, 1917, with the Quartermaster Corps for delivery of jumpers and trousers to the Quartermaster Corps during the World War, is hereby referred to the United States Court of Claims with jurisdiction to hear the same to judgment and with instructions to adjudicate the same upon the basis of the fair and reasonable value at the time of delivery of the jumpers and trousers delivered thereunder.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 7, beginning in line 13, strike out all of title 6.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall try to be brief.

Mr. Speaker, the question for the House to decide in this case is whether it wants to send to the Court of Claims the claim of a company that made a contract with the Government. The Government kept its part of the contract, paid the company for the overalls it made, and assessed a penalty against the company for the overalls it failed to deliver on time. The company filed a claim under the Dent Act, which was denied by the War Department. The case was denied by the Comptroller. The company had the right at that time to go into the Court of Claims, but did not take the case to the Court of Claims. This bill is to set aside the statute of limitation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

ERNST NUSSBAUM

The Clerk read as follows:

Title VII—(H. R. 2989. A bill for the relief of Ernst Nussbaum.)

That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Alien Property Custodian is authorized and directed to transfer all money and other property held by him or by the Treasurer of the United States as the property of Ernst Nussbaum, of San Francisco, Calif., to the said Ernst Nussbaum, who is now a citizen of the United States.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 8, line 1, strike out all of title VII.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the bill contained in this title provides for the return to the claimant, Ernst Nussbaum, of property taken by the Alien Property Custodian during the period of the World War under the provisions of the Winslow Act. Following the World War the property of aliens was returned to them up to the sum of $10,000. Subsequently, 80 percent of the remaining property was returned to them. The remaining 20 percent of the property was retained by the Alien Property Custodian to be used as an offset for awards to American citizens from damage sustained by the loss of their property in Germany.

As you know, these awards to American citizens were never paid by Germany, and the entire 20 percent of alien property thus retained was utilized for this purpose; that is, to reimburse American citizens who had lost property in Germany.

The pending bill would provide that 20 percent of the property belonging to Ernst Nussbaum should be returned to him, although he is in no different situation from many other aliens who likewise had 20 percent of their property retained and used for this purpose. I, therefore, feel this bill should not be passed and should be stricken out of the omnibus bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title VIII—(S. 281. An act for the relief of the Fred G. Clark Co.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Fred G. Clark Co. the sum of $7,586.61, being the amount agreed upon in accordance with the decision of the Board of Contract Adjustment, War Department, in full settlement for losses suffered by reason of forced compliance by said company with orders of the War Industries Board preventing said company from disposing of its stock of wool grease during the late war with Germany: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Beginning on page 8, line 9, strike out all of title VIII.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the War Industries Board was required during the period of the war to issue orders to concerns all over the United States to withhold from sale certain of their products. This was necessary from the standpoint of prosecuting the war successfully. It affected thousands of corporations all over the United States. Here is picked one corporation in the entire country for relief. We are setting a precedent, if we pass this measure, that is bound to come back to plague us. If we are going to settle with every corporation in the United States that was affected by orders of the War Industries Board, there will not be enough money in the Treasury of the United States to pay the bills, no matter how much the taxes may be raised.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that following the decision to which the gentleman referred this matter was sent to the Court of Claims and tried there? The court held the claimant was not entitled to recover and dismissed its petition.

Mr. COCHRAN. I intended to mention that fact, but the gentleman from New York saved me the trouble. This bill seeks to pay this particular corporation $7,586.61.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title IX—(H. R. 3075. A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co.)

That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, notwithstanding the lapse of time, prior consideration, or any statute of limitation, to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co. against the United States for just compensation for the taking and use, and the damages and waste inflicted by the taking and use of certain real property owned by the Mack Copper Co. and situated in San Diego County, State of California, which real property was taken, used, and occupied by the United States as an Army cantonment, training camp, or for other military purposes during the period from on or about May 15, 1917, to on or about June 1, 1922, not heretofore paid by the United States to the Mack Copper Co.

SEC. 2. That the Court of Claims of the United States, in the hearing and determination of any suit prosecuted under the authority of this act, is authorized, in its discretion, to use and consider as evidence in such suit, together with any other evidence which may be taken therein, the testimony and other evidence filed by Mack Copper Co. and the United States, respectively, in case no. D-134 on the docket of that court entitled "Mack Copper Co. against United States", wherein the court rendered a judgment on the 6th day of June 1927.

SEC. 3. From any decision or judgment rendered in any suit presented under the authority of this act a writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States may be applied for by either party thereto, as is provided by law in other cases.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order against this title.

Mr. Speaker, in the last session of Congress a Senate bill similar to this House bill was passed which would have sent this case to the Court of Claims. That bill suffered a pocket veto. A motion was made in August 1935 to lay this identical bill on the table, and I refer to H. R. 3075.

Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the committee had no right or authority to include this bill in an omnibus bill, because it has already been tabled and was not rereferred to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair has been furnished with a history of the proceedings with reference to this particular bill. The bill (H. R. 3075) was introduced on January 3, 1935, and referred to the Committee on War Claims. It was reported without amendment from the Committee on War Claims, Report No. 515, on March 28, 1935, and referred to the Private Calendar.

When the bill was reached on the Private Calendar, June 4, 1935, it was objected to and recommitted to the War Claims Committee under the rule. It was then included in omnibus bill no. 8524, which was reported from the War Claims Committee on June 17, 1935. This omnibus bill is on the calendar and now under consideration.

On August 23, 1935, the gentleman from California [Mr. BURNHAM] asked and obtained unanimous consent that the Committee on War Claims be discharged from the further consideration of S. 1878, a similar Senate bill, which had been referred to that committee, and this Senate bill was passed and, by unanimous consent, H. R. 3075, the bill in question, was laid on the table. H. R. 3075 is still being carried in omnibus bill H. R. 8524, notwithstanding the fact that it was laid on the table, because H. R. 8524 was printed prior to tabling the bill.

The Journal shows that the President, subsequent to that date and the expiration of the session, pocket vetoed the bill S. 1878 as of September 7, 1935.

The Chair holds that this bill, having been laid on the table by action of the House, is not a proper bill to be included in the pending omnibus bill. The only way to get it up would be by submitting a unanimous-consent request to take it from the table and consider it.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title X—(H. R. 2213. A bill for the relief of Charles P. Shipley Saddlery & Mercantile Co.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $11,902.15 in full settlement of all claims of the Charles P. Shipley Saddlery & Mercantile Co. arising out of the cancelation of its lease, entered into with Second Lt. James W. Bell, Quartermaster Corps, National Army contracting officer at Camp Funston, acting for and on behalf of the United States as lessor, dated October 19, 1917, for a site on the zone of camp activities and amusements at Camp Funston, Kans., under which said Charles P. Shipley Saddlery & Mercantile Co. had made expenditures for facilities and equipment and had paid its proportionate share of the cost of the central heating plant and waterworks installed under the authority of the War Department.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 10, beginning with line 16, strike out all of title X.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill was originally for $17,000. The case was heard by the War Department. The War Department, I understand, settled with the claimants for $3,579. This, however, is disputed in a letter I have from the claimants.

This bill does not ask you to send this case to the Court of Claims, but asks you to pay the money directly out of the Treasury in opposition to the views of the Government agency that has considered the case and has held that the corporation received all the money to which it was entitled.

Surely if you are going to give further consideration to the corporation, instead of Congress saying, "Mr. Treasurer, pay the money", the matter should at least go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As I understood the gentleman's statement, a settlement was made for a specified sum, and they accepted this as a settlement.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is my understanding, although the claimant denies a settlement.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. COSTELLO. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that this company, in an effort to make this claim of theirs appear plausible, charged against the Camp Funston store some $10,000 of expenses that were incurred in the operation of their Kansas City store?

Mr. COCHRAN. Salaries of officials.

Mr. COSTELLO. The salary of an official who went out as a purchasing agent at $200 a month for a period of 2 years.

Mr. COCHRAN. The War Department went into all that; disallowed the claims.

The report does show—see the letter of Assistant Secretary of War Payne—no actual loss was sustained, but, on the contrary, a profit was shown. That is in the third to last paragraph of the report of the Secretary of War.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of every man in this House. This saddlery company and Charles Shipley never got one dime from the Government, and I read from the hearings as shown in the report, Mr. KERR asking these questions:

Mr. KERR. We want to know what would be the reaction up there in the War Department if we were to allow him [Shipley] the cost of the conduct of that business up there. Do you think that would be the right thing to do?

Major KEITH. As I said a moment ago, that is a matter for you gentlemen.

Mr. KERR. You absolutely cut him out of every cent of cost incidental to the conduct of that business there?

Major KEITH. Yes.

Mr. KERR. You were willing to take the profit he made and set it off against the construction of his building, but you were not willing up there at the War Department to give him anything at all for the actual cost of the conduct of that business? That is what the committee has before it.

Major KEITH. I feel sure that any action your committee takes would not be objected to by the War Department.

Now, this Shipley Saddlery Co. is Charles Shipley, one of the best men I ever knew. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON] were here, he would be talking in my place. We all appreciate Mr. COCHRAN's efforts to save the Government money, but often he does individuals a great injustice by inducing the House to act adversely on many of these bills.

At times the Government of the United States is a generous and prodigal dispenser of largess often when there is no logical reason for it. At other times it is an ungrateful and niggardly miser. It pours out the coin of the realm to those it does not owe but refuses for years to pay its honest debts. It digs into the Treasury and dishes out its currency to those who are perpetual shirks and refuses to compensate those who in time of national stress and dire need came to the rescue of the Government with a voluntary generosity. One day a prodigal spendthrift, the next a flinty-hearted skinflint with its helpless creditors.

This Government never played the latter role with more glaring injustice, more brazen effrontery than in this case of the Charles Shipley Saddlery Co. That company is simply Charles Shipley.

The Government, through its agents in the Army, induced this good and decent citizen as a patriotic duty to open a store at Camp Funston, Kans., to sell leather goods and other necessities to the soldiers at this camp. They made an estimate of a building for this purpose, which Shipley was to build, which they estimated would cost $5,000. When Shipley got through it had cost him over $14,000, part of which was his pro-rata share of the cost of a waterworks and heating system. He had hardly got started properly when the Government canceled his contract, confiscated his building, used the waterworks and heating system he helped to build, and to this day has not paid him a thin dime.

That is a brief story of this shameful treatment of one of the best men I ever knew. Nothing would induce this man to accept a penny that did not belong to him. At one time when lawyers who were settling all these matters at Camp Funston wanted most of it for fees, he almost dropped it with the idea that he would let the Government have it rather than pay a large proportion of it to lawyers who were handling an immense amount of these claims in a group. So the Government and the lawyers cut his claim out, while they paid to one claimant, who had a relative in Congress, $43,000 for an old movie house as junk after the war was over. The Government junked Shipley's building, sold the remains as junk, and dishonestly retains that money to this day.

Shipley is not a constituent of mine, though we live in the same city, which is located in two States. I have only the interest of a bystander who does not like to see his Government oppress one of its best citizens. Shipley is an outstanding citizen of high ideals and lofty civic attainments, and is particularly interested in those organizations which look after the welfare of the unfortunate of his city. He has long been active in and now heads the Good Will Industries in Kansas City, which employs hundreds of otherwise unemployed people in renovating and repairing clothing which is contributed, and then this clothing is sold to those who cannot afford to buy new clothing. Under this system a whole outfit, including overcoat, hat, shoes, and suit, are sold for $6. This yields Mr. Shipley nothing except the consciousness that he has helped the needy. In fact, it costs him much of his own money and time.

The Shipley Saddlery Co. has been one of the finest leather-goods houses of this country. Shipley is an artist in his line and he employs men who are experts in that line. They are a part of his family, as it were. In the old days before the horse was extinct, his saddles and other leather goods were worn from the Rio Grande to the Yukon. His customers ordered these superlative products without asking the price. They knew Shipley would give them an honest man's price. The men he had employed for many years were loyal to him and worked at low wages in these hard years, and Shipley kept them at work the best he could.

Shipley borrowed the money to build at Camp Funston, and is still paying interest on the principal. This interest, of course, is not included in this bill, but I refer to it to emphasize the injustice of still withholding from him the original cost of the store.

The hard years came. The demand for his goods failed. He comes now, asking his Government, which has done him this injustice, to pay a part of what it owes him in order that he may save his home and his building down at the stockyards, where for so many years he has labored with his men. Mr. SHANNON, if his health were better, would say everything I have for this man. His case is now in your hands. You are the great Government which has for so long withheld from this good citizen the property that does not belong to it. You can right this wrong.

I think it would be a shame for this Congress to burden this man further with the injustice he has suffered ever since the war, and I hope every man here who believes in justice and in square dealing will pay this man not what he is out but the amount at which the committee put it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does not the gentleman think it would be fair to the Government, in view of the fact this matter has never been to the Court of Claims, that before you ask the taxpayers of this country to pay this bill the case should go to the Court of Claims rather than have the Treasury Department pay the claim direct?

Mr. GUYER. I do not think it should go to the Court of Claims because the Committee on War Claims unanimously reported it. They tried the case, gave long hearings, and why keep this man waiting and put to all the trouble of coming up here to try his case before the Court of Claims? As I say, the Committee on War Claims reported it unanimously.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is the gentleman going to condone everything that the War Claims Committee does?

Mr. GUYER. I do not think this needs condonation.

Mr. EKWALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUYER. I yield.

Mr. EKWALL. Is it not a fact that if the claimant was defeated in the Court of Claims he has no appeal?

Mr. GUYER. That is true, and there is no need of going to the Court of Claims. We are the court, we can try the case.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COSTELLO) there were 18 ayes and 45 noes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 63, nays 238, answered "present" 2, not voting 125, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DAVID A. WRIGHT

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 713) granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear the case of David A. Wright, which is identical with the bill H. R. 2713 in the bill just passed under title IV.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims be, and hereby is, given jurisdiction to reinstate, reopen, and rehear the case of David A. Wright, of Winona, Mo., against the United States, no. 261–A in said court, and upon the pleadings, evidence, and other proceedings in that cause, and such other proceedings, if any, as the court may deem necessary or proper, to readjudicate the same and determine the amount of costs or expenditures, if any, which the said David A. Wright may have expended or incurred in 1918 in the rehabilitation of a manufacturing plant (commonly called the Allis-Chalmers plant), at 1150 Washtenaw Avenue, Chicago, Ill., and in the beginning of production of heavy-duty lathes, to meet the needs, or the then-anticipated needs, of the Ordnance Department for any gun-relining or gun-manufacturing project initiated and under way in the Ordnance Department of the United States Army, in reliance in good faith upon any promise or assurance given him by Maj. Charles D. Westcott, Ordnance Department, United States Army, or Howard Abbott, an engineer in the plant section of the production division of the Ordnance Department, that the said David A. Wright would receive a contract, or contracts, for the manufacture of heavy-duty lathes that would absorb such costs or expenditures, notwithstanding such Ordnance Department projects may have been contingent upon the continuance of the war and may have been abandoned because of the signing of the armistice of November 11, 1918, and notwithstanding section 3744 of the Revised Statutes: Provided, That the Court of Claims shall be of opinion that the said David A. Wright made or incurred such expenditures in reliance in good faith upon the belief that Major Westcott or Mr. Abbott possessed the authority to make such promise or assurance on behalf of the Ordnance Department and that he was justified in doing so under the circumstances.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings of the House by which H. R. 2713 was passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings of the House whereby H. R. 2713 was passed and to lay that bill on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COPIES OF REVENUE ACT, 1936

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 491

Resolved, That 4,000 copies of the bill H. R. 12395, the Revenue Act of 1936, be printed for the use of the House document room.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to; and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

FALSE PROPAGANDA OF POLITICAL HYPOCRITES AGAIN ANSWERED

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein some correspondence I have had with my constituents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, in my remarks of January 21, 1935, I referred to malicious misstatements of fact that had been made against me in both of my previous campaigns for election to Congress in 1932 and 1934. Because of the malicious falsehoods circulated in both of these campaigns concerning the alleged organization of a "Hoover Club" in my office in 1928 and an alleged failure to support Al Smith in that campaign caused me to print and circulate more than 40,000 copies of this speech of January 21, 1935, in my district, more than 1,000 of which were distributed in Graham.

Mr. J. R. Ramsey was then postmaster at Graham under his brother-in-law, Wesley Johnson, at Graham, so the statement he now makes that this speech "has just been called to my attention" is in keeping with the rest of his statement issued April 18, 1936, all of which statement of his is wholly and totally false, and trumped up by him and the utilities for a third time to try to mislead the people and to raise false issues, which have previously been twice settled by the people of the Thirteenth District by an overwhelming majority in each election.

These false rumors regarding the organization of a Hoover Club in my office and my failure to distribute Al Smith literature were first raised during the run-off campaign of 1932. In answering same at that time I printed and distributed 50,000 circulars containing a news item in the Graham Leader of October 4, 1928, and affidavits of Mr. Z. A. Hudson and Mr. J. W. Seddon, both recognized leaders of the Hoover campaign in Young County in 1928, which statements fully showed the falsity of such charges.

Of course, the Al Smith we knew in 1928 championed the rights of the common people and was against the Power Trust special-privilege crowd; however, now we find him an active member of the so-called plutocratic American Liberty League and he has completely changed his position on many important questions. He is now one of their spokesmen and is advocating practically everything he opposed in 1928.

Upon receipt of Mr. Johnson's statement, April 20, I immediately wrote him, as follows:

APRIL 20, 1936.

Hon. C. W. JOHNSON, JR.,
Graham, Tex.

DEAR MR. JOHNSON: I have just received a copy of your letter to the press of April 18 in regard to a statement contained in my remarks of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 21, 1935.

In order that you may know the truth and your memory be refreshed, let me again refer you to my remarks of January 21, 1935, concerning you, every word of which you know to be the truth.

I have a statement prepared as per the enclosed copy that I expect to release immediately should you fail to correct your false statement of April 18 to the press of the Thirteenth District. You know there isn't a word of truth in the statement you have made. The truth just isn't in you, it seems.

I await prompt reply from your before releasing the enclosed statement.

Very truly, W. D. McFARLANE.

Having received no reply, and his statement having been published only in the Wichita Daily Times, Wichita Falls Record News, and the Electra News, all recognized as favorable toward the Power Trust and all having bitterly opposed the construction of a home-owned municipal light plant, and since these Power Trust papers refuse to publish my reply, which they knew or could easily have known were the facts before they publish this malicious libel, I submit the following reply to his letter handed the press:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 20, 1936.

To the CITIZENS OF THE THIRTEENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT:

REPLY TO C. WESLEY JOHNSON, JR.'S, LETTER OF APRIL 18, 1936

I have just received a copy of Mr. Johnson's letter, dated April 18, which states that he has given it to the press of the Thirteenth District, in regard to a statement contained in my remarks of January 21, 1935.

In order that the people may know the truth, let me quote from that statement of January 21, 1935:

"The post office at Graham is located in a building belonging to Republican Johnson, and naturally he wants to keep the post office in his building as long as possible. This same Republican, Wesley Johnson, succeeded in having himself appointed United States district attorney under President Hoover and retained this position almost a year before he was asked to resign on account of inefficiency, which resignation was filed promptly when requested.

"This same Republican, Wesley Johnson, made false statements against me in my last race and in my preceding campaign, which statements he knew and which the political hypocrites who used them knew were wholly and totally false. Such campaign tactics have been overwhelmingly repudiated by the voters of my congressional district in the last two campaigns. I was reelected last year carrying 13 out of 15 counties in the district, and my majority in my home county exceeded the combined majority of my opponent in the two counties I lost, and I carried my opponent's home town, Burkburnett."

Now, almost 4 years after this question of a so-called Hoover Club being organized in my office was raised, we find Mr. Johnson pretending innocent that he had ever spread such campaign falsehoods and intimates that he refused to give such information while people all over the thirteenth district know that certain gentlemen from Vernon and elsewhere spread this Hoover Club propaganda throughout the district not only in the campaign in 1932 but throughout the campaign of 1934, and gave him as their authority for such statement. This information was first used in circular form in the closing days of the run-off campaign of 1932 through a circular issued by attorneys for the private utilities.

In reply to such malicious falsehoods then issued, I at that time, in August 1932, issued a circular citing the following news item published in the Graham Leader of October 4, 1928:

"DEMOCRATIC RALLY HELD AT GRAHAM

"A Democratic rally was held Saturday evening at 8 o'clock, September 29, at the bandstand in the courthouse yard. The meeting was called to order by Senator W. D. McFARLANE, chairman of the Young County Democratic Club. A good crowd was present and considerable interest shown by the applause given the different speakers. Senator McFARLANE spoke first and urged all Democrats to support the ticket from top to bottom.

"Mr. Graham Stewart spoke last and urged everyone to support the national Democratic ticket.

"At the close of the meeting Mr. G. B. Johnson was elected secretary-treasurer, and the chairman announced the appointment of the following committees:

"Publicity committee: J. E. Kelly, E. L. Gibson, Price Beach, Ralph Shuffler, and Gasper Neal.

"Committee to arrange for speakers: G. B. Johnson, R. D. Owens, W. D. Spivey, Charlie Richardson, and B. W. King."

In regard to the distribution of literature in the Al Smith campaign and the other statements contained therein, all of which are wholly and totally false, when all these questions were raised in the run-off campaign of 1932, in answer to such charges that a "Hoover club" was organized in my office, I secured the sworn affidavit of the two recognized leaders of the Hoover forces in Young County, Mr. Z. A. Hudson, superintendent of the Presbyterian Sunday School in Graham for more than 25 years, and Mr. J. W. Seddon, a former county agent and long-time resident of Young County, which affidavit is as follows:

"THE HOOVER CLUB IN GRAHAM, TEX., IN 1928

"We want to make this statement in regard to the organization of the Hoover Club in Graham, Tex., in 1928.

"To go back, Senator W. D. MCFARLANE and his father were strong drys. In the precinct and county conventions they aided in securing a direction or instruction to our delegate to the State convention at Beaumont to vote for a platform plank—a dry candidate and a dry platform. Senator W. D. MCFARLANE, Mr. M. K. Graham, and Mr. Ford were the delegates to the State convention so instructed.

"After Al Smith was nominated we organized a Hoover-for-President Club. It was not organized in Senator MCFARLANE'S office, and Senator MCFARLANE nor his father were not members of it. Senator W. D. MCFARLANE made it plain to us that, while he was a friend to the dry cause, he was going to support the Democratic ticket, and made a speech in its behalf in the courthouse yard. He never varied from that position and, insofar as we know and believe, he voted the straight Democratic ticket in November 1928. He so stated at all times to us, who worked and voted for Hoover.

"Z. A. HUDSON.
"J. W. SEDDON.

"Z. A. Hudson and J. W. Seddon, being sworn, say the facts stated in the above statement are true.

"J. W. SEDDON.
"Z. A. HUDSON.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of August, A. D. 1932.

[SEAL] "GRACE LESLIE,
"Notary Public, Young County, Tex."

Mr. Johnson knew when he handed his letter of April 18 to the newspapers that his statement was wholly and totally false, as shown by the above news item and affidavit of two of the best citizens of Young County who were the recognized leaders of the Hoover forces in 1928.

You will note these good men in their sworn statement say that they organized a "Hoover for President Club", and that "It was not organized in Senator MCFARLANE'S office, and Senator MCFARLANE nor his father were not members of it. Senator W. D. MCFARLANE made it plain to us that while he was a friend to the dry cause he was going to support the Democratic ticket, and made a speech in its behalf in the courthouse yard. He never varied from that position, and insofar as we know and believe he voted the straight Democratic ticket in November 1928. He so stated at all times to us who worked and voted for Hoover."

And further, any citizens of Young County who called for Al Smith literature will bear witness to the fact that they secured same, and statements are in my possession at Graham, Tex., to this effect; and further, it is well known that I was the only lawyer in Young County who spoke for Al Smith during that campaign.

I know it must be hard for a former Republican post-office distributor to not only have his brother-in-law, J. R. Ramsey, let out of office but also all his other appointees, as well as himself let out, and on top of that the new post-office building at Graham, constructed under this administration, is ready for occupancy and the post office will soon be moved from his building to this beautiful, new post-office building on the public square. Losing this rent, his patronage, and his job no doubt causes Republican Johnson to feel very bitter toward the Democratic administration and those who have helped bring the country back from chaos to prosperity.

Very truly,

W. D. MCFARLANE.

ACT FOR THE RELIEF OF CERTAIN OFFICERS

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next omnibus bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

(S. 267. An act for the relief of certain officers and employees of the Foreign Service of the United States who, while in the course of their respective duties, suffered losses of personal property by reason of catastrophes of nature)

That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Matthew E. Hanna, American minister to Nicaragua, the sum of $25,368.58, of which the sum of $25,215.50 represents the value of reasonable and necessary personal property lost as a result of the earthquake at Managua, Nicaragua, March 31, 1931, and the sum of $153.08 represents the amount of money and vouchers destroyed when the contents of the safe in the legation were burned.

To Willard L. Beaulac, secretary of the American Legation at Managua, Nicaragua, the sum of $1,006.82, such sum representing the value of reasonable and necessary personal property lost as a result of the earthquake at Managua, Nicaragua, March 31, 1931.

To Marion P. Hoover, clerk in legation at Managua, Nicaragua, the sum of $80, such sum representing the value of reasonable and necessary personal property lost as a result of the earthquake at Managua, Nicaragua, March 31, 1931: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent of any claim thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with any such claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated for any claim in this act in excess of 10 percent of such claim on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000. The aforestated amounts shall be considered in full settlement of the aforesaid claims. (Passed the Senate Jan. 21, 1935.)

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 11, strike out "$25,368.58" and insert "$16,122.08"; page 2, line 1, strike out "$25,215.50" and insert "$15,969"; page 2, line 8, strike out "$1,006.82" and insert "$821.92."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 1, line 3, strike out all of Senate bill 267.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish the Members of the House would pay particular attention to this bill. We just passed a bill and included in that bill was a measure which sent a case to the Court of Claims not for the first time, not for the second time, but for the third time. Where is the lawyer who would permit a case that he has won to be reopened three times, or where is the individual?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not until I state my case. I admit that has nothing to do with this bill. I am going to talk on this bill. This is a question of policy entirely. This bill provides for the payment of some $17,000 to representatives of this Government in the Foreign Service because of losses sustained as the result of an earthquake in Nicaragua. The question involved is, Does the Congress of the United States want to pay damages, the result of an act of God? I might add that the party who receives the sum of $16,000 on this claim will likewise receive in a few days from this House 1 year's salary because her husband died while in the Foreign Service. That is not included in this bill. This is a different item for property which belonged to them that was lost as the result of the earthquake. If you are going to pay Government employees and the members of the Army and Navy and Marine Corps damages because of floods, earthquakes, fires, and so forth, then you are adopting a very dangerous policy which you will regret.

The Government would have furnished this Legation as it furnishes all legations, but in this instance they wanted to use their own furniture. By so doing they were saving storage charges. I cannot see where the Government should be held responsible for losses due to any earthquake.

Mr. COLDEN. If we pay this, why not pay the losses of the California earthquakes?

Mr. COCHRAN. The people who suffered there were not employees of the Government, and there is that difference; but if you pay this, then you should pay every man at Langley Field, at Portsmouth Navy Yard, and at Fortress Monroe who lost belongings in the terrible flood there in 1933.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is endeavoring to explain this particular case. This case is not the same as the explanation made by the gentleman from Missouri at all.

In reply to the gentleman from Missouri, permit me to state that at the time Mr. Hanna was appointed American Minister to Nicaragua the Legation premises there, which were leased by the Government and only partially furnished, were badly in need of repair and renovation, and were almost destitute of appropriate furniture and furnishings for the residence portion.

This being the situation, Mr. Hanna was confronted with the task of choosing between an appropriate and an inappropriate representation for the American Government in that capital. He chose the former, because it was believed that it would elicit an appreciative response from the community there, would greatly add to the influence and prestige of the Nation, and would play a very useful role in dealing with the Nicaraguan Government and people. Subsequent events justified the correctness of this view.

To furnish the premises, Minister Hanna collected at Managua his furniture and furnishings from his last previous post and from storage. The character and quantity of the articles thus collected were determined largely by the character of the premises to be furnished. These claims have received the most careful consideration of the Department's claim board, and the amount recommended to be appropriated is considered by the Department to be reasonable. In this connection it should be pointed out that only a portion of the losses suffered by the individuals involved are included in this bill. Minister Hanna, for example, lost additional personal belongings of great value, for which no claim is submitted, because they might be classed as luxury possessions. They were of great value to him, nevertheless, and to this Government likewise, since they were utilized to make the Government-rented Legation more representative.

While it is the almost universal practice of governments to supply furnishings for legations and embassies, the Government of the United States has done this only in a limited number of cases. Managua, at the time of the earthquake, was not one of those. It would seem unjust that, as against legations and embassies that are Government furnished, Minister Hanna, in addition to donating to the Government the use of his personal belongings, should be impelled to assume a risk against which he was unable to protect himself.

It has been stated that no showing has been made that these officers and employees could not have insured their personal belongings against such hazards.

In this connection it should be understood, first of all, that fire insurance did not protect against losses caused by the earthquake or by the fire which resulted therefrom. No fire-insurance company indemnified a single policyholder for his losses from the fire which followed the earthquake, since it was uniformly held that the fire was a direct result of the earthquake, and the policies of all companies contained a saving clause exempting the companies from liability in such a contingency.

Only earthquake insurance would have given protection against such losses, and that was prohibitive in cost. In support of this statement, it is reported that in the entire city of Managua, containing from sixty to seventy thousand inhabitants, only three property owners possessed earthquake insurance, and one of these was a bank of large resources. The cost of earthquake insurance was out of reach of the other property owners, as it was of the Foreign Service officers and employees involved in this bill.

At this point it should be stated that certain naval officers on duty at Managua at the time of the earthquake also suffered losses, which have been compensated for under Priate Act No. 373, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved January 21, 1936. No reason is seen, therefore, for discrimination against members of the Foreign Service who suffered losses under the same circumstances.

In addition to the above it might also be pointed out that under the Army regulations the military personnel is compensated for private property lost or damaged in the military service, and an appropriation is available from which such losses are paid without their being submitted to Congress. The War Department regulations are similar to those contained in the State Department order governing the determination of losses of Foreign Service officers and employees, except that in the determination made by the Department of State as to the amount of the losses legislative authority and an appropriation are necessary before such claims can be paid, whereas Congress has already given the War Department the authority and means to pay such losses as it shall determine reasonable and proper.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Please tell the House whether the other two claimants in the bill also furnished a legation.

Mr. BLOOM. I am talking about this Hanna claim.

Mr. COCHRAN. But there are two other claims in the bill which the committee has recognized.

Mr. BLOOM. I do not think it is fair to confuse the other bill with this. I shall be glad to talk about that at the proper time.

Mr. COCHRAN. They are in this item.

Mr. BLOOM. I refuse to yield further.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. I yield.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. There is nothing included in this bill except necessaries which the minister had to have at that time?

Mr. BLOOM. Absolutely.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. And it was customary for the Government to furnish its own building, but in this case the minister had to furnish the building?

Mr. BLOOM. That is right. The chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee has explained to you the Government furnishes the building at their embassies and legations. If the Government would have paid for the furniture in this legation, the Government would have been out this much money. The records show that the least amount of money that is expended in any legation is about $25,000.

At this time permit me to give to you the history of the life and service of Mr. Hanna.

Matthew Elting Hanna, deceased husband of Gustava Hanna, was born in Londonderry, Ohio, March 9, 1873; graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1897; United States Army 1897–1913, captain; Cuban service, 1898; aide to military government of Cuba, 1898–1902; commander of public schools of Cuba, 1900–1902; military attaché at Habana, 1902–1904; special agent of the United States in Panama, 1909; special representative of the United States at German Army maneuvers, 1911; chemical manufacturing business, 1912–17; inspector general, Massachusetts Militia, 1912–14; appointed assistant in American Embassy at Mexico City February 1917; appointed after examination secretary of embassy or legation of class 4, August 23, 1917, and assigned to Mexico City; secretary of class 3, March 14, 1919; class 2, August 24, 1921; assigned to the Department as acting chief, Division of Mexican Affairs, September 20, 1921; chief, December 20, 1921; assigned to Berlin, March 10, 1924; Foreign Service officer, class 4, July 1, 1924, class 3, August 8, 1924; member of Board of Review, Foreign Service Personnel, 1926; Foreign Service inspector, November 6, 1925; class 2, June 30, 1927; assigned to Lima, November 11, 1927; counselor of embassy, November 25, 1927; secretary to American delegation Sixth International Conference of American States, Habana, 1928; assigned to Managua March 22, 1929; Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Nicaragua, December 16, 1929; to Guatemala July 17, 1933; died February 19, 1936, while in the Service as Minister to Guatemala.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] has expired.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman for that purpose under the rule.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were—ayes 18 and noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLOOM: Page 1, line 9, after the word "to", insert "Gustava Hanna, widow of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

(H. R. 3365. A bill for the relief of Lily M. Miller)

That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the relief of Lily M. Miller, widow of Ransford S. Miller, American consul general, the sum of $9,000, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while in the Foreign Service.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to strike the last section for the reason that that has already become the law. A private bill was passed at the last session covering this.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McREYNOLDS: Strike out all of H. R. 3365, a bill for the relief of Lily M. Miller.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Clerk called the next omnibus bill, H. R. 8750, for the relief of sundry claimants, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title I—(H. R. 796. For the relief of A. E. Clark.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to A. E. Clark, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $566.09 in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of money expended by him between March 1, 1930, and July 10, 1930, while employed by the Government as an assistant supervisor of census in the State of Washington.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "Washington", insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. I offer an amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 1, line 3, strike out all of title I.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this is another bill that involves solely a question of policy. It is a very small sum, but it applies to a Government employee. He made application for a per-diem allowance. He was employed by the Census Bureau. The standardized Government travel regulations did not admit him to receive and he was not entitled to receive the money, so he comes down to Congress and he wants you to set aside the Government regulations and have the Government pick him out as one out of hundreds of thousands of Government employees and give him pay that other employees are denied.

That is all there is to this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I wish to appeal to the membership to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], as I am conversant with the facts in regard to this bill, and I am very glad to assume full responsibility for it, although I inherited it from my predecessor, Albert Johnson, who served in this House for 20 years.

I regret to have to say that the facts are not at all as stated by the gentleman from Missouri in the brief statement he has just made to the House. The facts in the case are these: Mr. Clark, the claimant, was engaged as assistant district supervisor of the Census in 1930. Before he entered upon the performance of his duties he inquired of the district supervisor whether he would be paid travel allowance in view of the fact that he resided at Camas, some 50 miles from the city of Longview, where his headquarters were to be in that district. The supervisor informed him, and this is conclusively set forth in the committee report by letters, affidavits, and the report of the proper department of the Government, the Bureau of the Census, that he would be paid such travel allowance.

The supervisor also referred him to the Congressman responsible for his appointment, former Congressman Johnson. Mr. Johnson communicated with the Director of the Census here in Washington and was informed by Dr. Hill, Assistant Director of the Census, that the travel allowance would be paid to Mr. Clark, the claimant. Mr. Clark was so notified by Mr. Johnson and thereupon entered upon the performance of his duties. The report shows that those duties were faithfully, efficiently, and well performed, and that in due course he submitted his claim.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that involved in this bill is the question whether the Government of the United States is honorable and lives up to its contracts and performs them with citizens of this country. Here is a man of very ordinary means. I know him personally. He is a very fine citizen, a veteran of the Spanish-American War, and he was assured that he would receive this travel allowance. He informed the district supervisor that if he was not to be paid this amount he could not afford to accept the position because he lived 50 miles from his headquarters and could not afford to pay hotel bills, travel expenses, gasoline, and other sundry expenses out of the meager per diem pay he was to receive. He relied upon that promise and agreement, expressly made, and performed the services required of him.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if a just bill was ever submitted to the House, this is such a bill. Only $560 is involved, but every red penny of it ought to be paid. Otherwise this Government will be convicted of perpetrating a fraud upon one of its citizens, and I, therefore, appeal to the House to reject the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

E. G. BRISENO

The Clerk read as follows:

Title II—(H. R. 1365. For the relief of E. G. Briseno)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to E. G. Briseno, of El Paso, Tex., the sum of $5,000 for painful, severe, and permanent injury to his minor son, Hector Briseno, caused by the explosion of a shell picked up on private property, which shell had been dropped and left there by troops of the United States Army engaged in target practice.

SEC. 2. There is further appropriated the sum of $1,225.35 to E. G. Briseno, being expense incurred by him in medical and nursing care of the said Hector Briseno as the result of this injury.

Committee amendments:

Page 2, line 20, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$5,225.35 in full settlement of all claims against the United States."

Page 3, line 2, after the word "practice", insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Page 3, line 15, strike out section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. Of the said $5,225.35 herein appropriated, the sum of $4,000 shall be held in trust by the said E. G. Briseno, for use in maintenance of his minor son, and the sum of $1,225.35 shall be paid to him as reimbursement for medical expenses incurred by him as the result of the injury to said Hector Briseno."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 2, line 16, strike out all of title II.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the payment of $5,225.35 for medical expenses and injuries received by the claimant. It appears that the claimant, a minor, came into possession of an unexploded Army shell and was injured as a result of the explosion of that shell, which took place in the home of the claimant. It appears that several boys down in the State of Texas went upon an Army reservation. The reservation was not fenced. As I understand, it is not the custom in Texas to fence in these reservations. So when the committee report tries to make a point of the fact the reservation was not fenced I feel they are raising an immaterial question because that is not the custom in that section of the country.

A lengthy statement was put in the record by a notary public regarding the situation in Texas trying to prove the merits of this claim. The notary was not a witness and is no more conversant with the facts than any individual here in this House might be.

Mr. Speaker, I feel there is no liability whatsoever on the part of the Government. The Government cannot be responsible when some private citizen comes upon a Government reservation, takes the property of the Government off the reservation, and subsequently is injured because the property he removed happens to be of an explosive character. I feel we cannot hold the Federal Government responsible under such circumstances, and for this reason I oppose the passage of this bill.

It is true the claimant is a minor, and while we may have a great deal of sympathy for him because of the injuries he sustained, I do not feel there is any direct or real responsibility on the part of the Government.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. How old was the boy?

Mr. COSTELLO. I believe he is 9 years old.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The bill states the injury was caused by the explosion of a shell picked up on private property.

Mr. COSTELLO. It is my understanding that the shell was picked up on the Government firing range used in connection with the camp and belonging to the Federal Government.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman states that this shell was on the range?

Mr. COSTELLO. It was on the range and the boys had gone out with a group of people and were picnicking on the range. Some of the boys picked up an unfired shell.

Mr. TERRY. Does the gentleman feel the Government should have left an unfired shell on the range?

Mr. COSTELLO. There may be some negligence on the part of the soldier for leaving an unfired shell on the range, but I do not think we can attribute this negligence to the Government to the extent that where some private citizen goes upon Government property and removes an unfired shell he can recover any more than if he went to a storage magazine and removed an unfired shell. There was some negligence on the part of the soldier in leaving it there, but I submit the proposition that the negligence does not extend to the Government.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Was there any fence or obstruction around this ground or any sign to keep off?

Mr. COSTELLO. I stated that the range was not fenced. The only time it was placarded was when the soldiers were actually firing.

Further, it is not the custom in Texas to enclose ranges and things of that kind, and even where there are fences it is the custom down in Texas to climb over the fences. The communal custom in Texas tolerates trespass even where fences exist.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I have considerable personal knowledge of this claim. In my judgment it is very meritorious, and I know it is one of the most pitiful cases I know anything about. I want to tell you something about the inexcusable negligence in this case, and also something about this nice little boy.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. May I say that from my knowledge of civil actions, if a suit had been brought under circumstances such as narrated by the gentleman from California against a private individual, the private individual would have been liable, even as against a trespassor.

Mr. THOMASON. Absolutely. Let me state, just briefly, the facts because my time is limited.

Fort Bliss is at the edge of the city of El Paso. Just back of Fort Bliss is a great, big, wide-open country. There is some question as to whether this particular target range was owned by the Government or was private property. The statement of the witnesses in the record would indicate it was private property. However, the Government had it under a lease of some sort, because it was using this property as a target range. There were no fences around it. There were no signs whatever, and there was no warning of any kind on the property. The only thing that the War Department and the officers at Fort Bliss ever claimed was that they inserted a notice in the advertising section of the local paper as to when there would be firing on the range.

Mr. Speaker, the father of this little boy is an illiterate Mexican. Several children went out to the poppy field, which is on or near the target range, for a picnic. There they found this peculiar-looking shell that they did not know anything about and the ignorant father knew nothing about. All were ignorant of firearms. They took the shell home. It had been left there admittedly by the War Department through its soldiers and officers. As I previously stated, these little children took the shell home and played with it day after day for some time. One day while playing with it the shell exploded.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. Tell us about the nature of the injury.

Mr. THOMASON. The injuries are just too pitiful, and my poor ability at description will not permit me to begin to tell the extent of the injuries.

Mr. PITTENGER. The child is a hopeless cripple?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes. One arm is gone. An eye is damaged I think. He has cuts, bruises, and powder marks all over him. He is a cripple in his right leg. The report shows all his injuries and there is a statement from the attending physician.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I see that the award, if this bill is passed, goes to the father. Is there a guardianship set up here?

Mr. THOMASON. No. Four thousand dollars of this money is to be placed in trust for the boy, and a guardian will have to be appointed for the boy. However, the father spent every penny of money he had, something like $1,200, to save the life of this little child and patch him up as best he could. This boy came to my office when I was home last year. He is a hopeless cripple for life and I say it was the worst kind of negligence on the part of the Government.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. What is the age of the child?

Mr. THOMASON. He is about 9 years old. Of course, this money will be placed in trust until he is 21 years old. The committee awarded the father the money he had expended for doctor and hospital bills.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. According to the statement of the gentleman from California, the soldiers were guilty of negligence, and these soldiers were the agents of the Government?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes. There is not a sign of a fence there. There is no warning whatever. There is no guard and no notice or anything. It is just a great big wide open country, and these children went out there and picked up this unexploded shell. I say it is the worst kind of negligence, and I beg of you, as a matter of justice to an innocent illiterate Mexican boy, to give him this award.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I had a somewhat similar bill, and it was passed by the House.

Mr. THOMASON. Yes; and I hope the House will pass this one. This bill comes in here with a unanimous report of the committee. It is a most deserving case, and I hope and believe you will vote down the amendment and then pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title III—(H. R. 1485. To pay to the Printz-Biederman Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, the sum of $741.40, money paid as duty on merchandise imported under sec. 308 of the tariff act)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Printz-Biederman Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, the sum of $741.40 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for money paid as duty upon certain merchandise imported under section 308 of the Tariff Act of Sepetmber 21, 1922: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Title IV—(H. R. 2087. For the relief of the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co.)

That the claim of the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co., of Leesburg, N. J., against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused to its marine railway by the United States Coast Guard boat CG–227 on the morning of November 6, 1931, may be determined in a suit to be brought by said claimant against the United States in the District Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey: Provided, That notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and upon such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That such suit shall be begun within 4 months of the date of the approval of this act.

Title V—(H. R. 2163. For the relief of William Sulem)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William Sulem, of the township of Franklin, county of Somerset, and State of New Jersey, the sum of $1,482, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for injuries received by and damages to property of the said William Sulem while operating his automobile on the public highway in New Brunswick, N. J., by the negligent operation of a United States Government mail truck, no. 9920, on said highway in said city while said truck was in the care and custody of and being driven by an operative of the United States Post Office Department under the orders of the postmaster in the United States Postal Service at New Brunswick, N. J.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Title VI—(H. R. 2183. For the relief of the estate of Milton L. Baxter)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Milton L. Baxter the sum of $2,000 as compensation for the death of the said Milton L. Baxter, who was killed October 13, 1929, when the automobile which he was driving went off the bridge over the Cape Cod Canal at Bourne, Mass., and into the waters of the canal by reason of a defect in said bridge, which was owned by, and under the jurisdiction and maintenance of, the United States Government.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 7, line 1, strike out "as compensation" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

At the end of page 7, after line 9, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: On page 6, strike out all of title VI.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, the basis for this claim is that a bridge owned and operated by the Government over the Cape Cod Canal is alleged to have been unsafe and in defective condition. There were no eyewitnesses to the accident. All we know is that the gentleman in question drove a car over the bridge about 7:30 at night, ran through the railing, and was drowned in the Cape Cod Canal.

The question is whether or not the bridge was properly constructed. There is no dispute about the fact there was a warning sign in large letters warning the drivers of automobiles to proceed carefully and fixing a limit of 15 miles an hour. On both sides of the bridge there were guard rails 4 feet high and constructed of 2-inch pipe and wire netting. On one side was a safety sill 8 inches high and no sidewalk. On the other side there was a sidewalk 6 inches above the level of the roadway of the bridge, which was in effect a safety sill.

This bridge had been operated by the Government since 1928 and this was the first serious accident. Several million people had driven over this bridge. On the day Baxter was killed 3,649 cars crossed without trouble. If you are going to allow this claim you have got to do it purely on imagination, because there is not a scrap of evidence to show any wrongdoing or any lack of care on the part of anybody. The man, obviously, simply ran across the bridge too fast, lost control of his car, and the car jumped through the railing.

There is no basis for this claim whatever.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title VII—(H. R. 2259. For the relief of Addie I. Tryon and Lorin H. Tryon)

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the District Court of the United States in and for the Southern Division of the Northern District of California to hear, examine, determine, adjudicate, and render judgment upon the claim of Addie I. Tryon and/or Lorin H. Tryon, of San Francisco, Calif., whether as individuals in their, or either of their, own rights or as successors in interest to, and/or distributees of the estate, or personal representatives of, E. H. Tryon, deceased, for the recovery and repayment of the sum of $23,149.63, paid by said parties or either of them to the United States on or about April 24, 1923, as excess wool profits for, and realized and made by, said E. H. Tryon during the year 1918 and that said court shall hear, examine, determine, adjudicate, and render judgment upon said claim notwithstanding the bar prescribed by any statute of limitations or by laches or delay, which said bar is hereby removed, and that said claim may be sued for by said Addie I. Tryon and Lorin H. Tryon in said District Court of the United States in and for the Southern Division of the Northern District of California, acting under the rules governing such court. And said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such excess profits which may have been so paid, if the same or any part thereof shall be found to be due, together with interest thereon at the rate of 6 percent per annum from April 24, 1923, against the United States in favor of said Addie I. Tryon and/or Lorin H. Tryon, as their interests may appear: Provided, That such notice of suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States Attorney in such district to appear and to defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within 6 months from the final passage of this act: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 8, line 13, after the word "bar", strike out the remainder of line 13, all of line 14, and the word "removed" in line 15, and insert "or defense that payment of such excess wool profits was voluntarily made, or of laches, lapse of time, any alleged settlement heretofore made, res judicata, or any statute of limitations, which said bars are hereby removed."

Page 9, line 1, after the word "due", strike out the remainder of line 1, and all of line 2, and "April 24, 1923" in line 3.

Page 9, line 12, beginning with the word "Provided", strike out the remainder of the bill and insert "And provided further, That an appeal directly from the decision of said district court shall lie to the Supreme Court of the United States in manner as now provided for other direct appeals from the district courts of the United States to the said Supreme Court."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: On page 7, line 22, strike out of all of title VII.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, this claim arises out of the action of the War Industries Board during the late World War, whereby the Board authorized control over the clip of wool which was to be purchased in the country.

The claimant here was a central dealer, grading the wool and selling it directly to the Quartermaster of the Army. The Quartermaster paid a commission of 3 or 4 percent depending upon the territory from which the wool was procured.

When Tryon, the claimant herein, completed his transactions with respect to the wool of the domestic clip of 1918, his books were examined and the audit of the Department of Agriculture found he had made excess profits in the sum of $25,275 and the administrators of his estate paid the Department the sum which is claimed in this bill.

The Department opposes the passage of the bill because the contracts upon which the claim is based were voluntarily entered into and they were subject to the regulations of the War Industries Board and they found that Tryon received large benefits from the Government as a result of these contracts, and now it is desired to free him from suffering any penalties that may have been occasioned because of having entered into these contracts.

As a result, I feel that the passage of this bill would simply be throwing open the doors to numerous claimants who are in a similar position where money has been obtained by the collection of excess profits that have already been expended, and this money that the Government has obtained would now have to be taken out of the general Treasury. I feel that the claimant is not entitled to relief, and I ask that the House vote down the bill by approving the amendment which I have offered.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, this bill simply authorizes the heirs of E. H. Tryon to go into the United States District Court of California and prosecute their claims for the taxes which were paid into the Treasury as excess-profit taxes.

The circumstances are very much complicated by the Government's regulations for handling the wool clip of 1918 and by the decisions of various courts, including the Supreme Court of the United States, whose decisions are so terrifically in conflict that they could not get into court until after the statute of limitations had run. The entire nature of the controversy is such that it cannot be determined except by the courts. All they are asking is permission to go into the district court of California and prosecute their suit and have the statute of limitations waived, because on account of the various conflicts arising from these complicated regulations they have not been able to seek redress in the courts. I sincerely hope that the amendment of the gentleman from California will be voted down.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the lady yield?

Mrs. KAHN. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not a fact that this is in conformity with the suggestion of the Department of Agriculture?

Mrs. KAHN. It is; and when the matter was explained to the committee, the committee unanimously voted to put it into the omnibus bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLOOM). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title VIII—(H. R. 2674. For the relief of G. Elias & Bro., Inc.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to G. Elias & Bro., Inc., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $30,859.28 in full settlement for losses suffered by the said G. Elias & Bro., Inc., by reason of changes in the specifications and extra work from which the Government received the benefit but for which no pay whatever has been paid to the said G. Elias & Bro., Inc., under contracts W 535 AC–602 and W 535 AC–628, dated December 14, 1926, and January 28, 1927, with the Air Corps for furnishing certain airship parts and equipment to the United States Army Air Corps.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 10, line 9, strike out the figures "$30,859.28" and insert "$24,139.28."

Page 10, line 10, after the word "settlement", insert "of all claims against the United States."

Page 10, line 19, after the word "Corps", insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, strike out all of title VIII.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I have not only secured the report from the Department on this bill and on other bills, but I have a report from the Comptroller General of the United States.

This bill proposes to pay out of the Treasury—it does not send the case to the Court of Claims—but takes the money out of the Treasury—$24,139 for alleged losses in connection with the changing of plans and specifications for airplane parts furnished under contract with the War Department in 1926 and 1927. Here is what the Comptroller General says:

This bill proposes to pay the claimant $24,139.28 for alleged losses in connection with changes in plans and specifications for airplane parts furnished under contracts with the War Department in 1926 and 1927.

The contracts provided for such changes in plans and specifications and required the contractor to "submit evidence to the contracting officer of the amount involved by such change or changes", and that for any change increasing the cost of performance "an equitable adjustment will be made at the time such change or changes are made." Instead of the contractor submitting evidence of increased cost at the time the changes were made, the contractor accepted the changes with the statements thereon that "Contract price and terms of delivery not affected."

Does Congress wish to allow extra compensation for losses alleged to have been sustained over 9 years ago, when no claim therefor was requested or made at the time the changes were agreed upon? Is it not a condition precedent to the payment of increased costs under a contract that claim therefor, supported by proper evidence, be filed at the time changes are made? (Plumley v. United States, 43 Ct. Cls. 266, 226 U. S. 545.) Are the terms of the contracts and the principles of contract law to be disregarded entirely?

Surely, if you are going to act on this claim, it should go to the Court of Claims and give the Government a chance in court to protect the taxpayers' money.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am not only familiar with the claim, I am familiar with the factory, and I am familiar with the claimant. This claim is based on an order for airplane parts issued by the Government in 1926 and 1927.

Upon the acceptance of that particular bid the manufacturer was called upon to build a great many jigs, tools, and other forms upon which to construct the airplane parts. Upon the completion of the construction of the airplane parts it was discovered that the parts would not fit. They were constructed according to plans and specifications, and the claimant was called upon to employ engineering service to check the plans and to discard many of the jigs and tools and forms and to make new airplane parts in fulfillment of the order. In addition to that he was called upon to deliver these parts f. o. b. at his own factory, but, lo and behold! the Government inspectors then found that an ordinary railroad boxcar would not take them to their destination, and because he was called upon to crate them, he was then forced to build a special boxcar large enough to hold certain of the parts which were included in the order. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] said no evidence was given that this claimant incurred additional expense. I ask any man or woman in the House to read the report on the bill. The report is filled with abundant evidence of changes ordered by the Government and the acceptance of those changes by the claimant and, of course, the inference that it would cost additional money. Remember this in passing judgment on this claim: The aviation industry was in its youth. Chaos and confusion were in evidence in the War Department in connection with its aviation-construction program at this time. Changes in nearly every order and factory all over the country were commonplace. The fact that this man completed his work at a great loss to himself, and that the Senate was convinced he had an equity when it passed the bill and the House committee was convinced there was an equity when it passed the bill, is the answer to the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri that there was no evidence of added cost.

The evidence is in the report. There you will find numerous requests upon the part of the War Department asking this claimant to change certain parts, and asking him to complete his work, because if he did not deliver the order within the time specified he would be subject to penalty. He tried his level best to meet the requests and counter-requests of the Department, and he did a good job in doing it.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. Since when did the Comptroller General get authorization to tell Congress what to do, either through the chairman of the committee or any Member of this House?

Mr. MEAD. I realize that the gentleman from Missouri made the statement that the Comptroller had decided against payment as suggested in the bill, but I am with the gentleman from Minnesota, who is a member of the committee. He studied this bill, and I maintain it is the duty and prerogative of Congress to legislate on matters of this kind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title IX—(H. R. 3155. To authorize the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to refund to The Bankers Reserve Life Co. of Omaha, Nebr., and the Wisconsin National Life Insurance Co. of Oshkosh, Wis., income taxes illegally paid to the United States Treasury.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to The Bankers Reserve Life Co. of Omaha, Nebr., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $19,474.58, together with interest, and the additional sum of $27,727.71, together with interest, in full settlement of all claims against the United States, on account of said sums being illegally and through error, paid into the Treasury of the United States by The Bankers Reserve Life Co. of Omaha, Nebr., as income taxes for the years 1923 and 1924, respectively, said sums having been paid pursuant to the provisions of section 245 (a) (2) of the Revenue Acts of 1921 and 1924, which section, by decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, was held to be unconstitutional in the case of the National Life Insurance Co. v. United States (277 U. S. 503).

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the Wisconsin National Life Insurance Co. of Oshkosh, Wis., the sum of $6,042.91, together with interest, and also the additional sum of $5,979.18, together with interest, in full settlement of all claims against the United States, on account of said sums being illegally and through error, paid into the Treasury of the United States by the Wisconsin National Life Insurance Co. of Oshkosh, Wis., as income taxes for the years 1924 and 1925, respectively, said sums having been paid pursuant to the provisions of section 245 (a) (2) of the Revenue Acts of 1921 and 1924, which section, by decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, was held to be unconstitutional in the case of National Life Insurance Co. v. United States (277 U. S. 508).

SEC. 3. No part of the amount appropriated in this act, in excess of 10 percent thereof, shall be paid or delivered to, or received by, any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claims. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 11, beginning in line 13, strike out the remainder of the bill and insert: "That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the Bankers Reserve Life Co. of Omaha, Nebr., and the Wisconsin National Life Insurance Co. of Oshkosh, Wis., for a refund of income taxes paid by said companies for the years 1923, 1924, and 1925 in excess of the amount due and pursuant to the provisions of section 245 (a) (2), Revenue Acts of 1921 and 1924, which section was subsequently held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of National Life Insurance Co. v. United States (277 U. S. 508), notwithstanding the bars or defense of any alleged settlement heretofore made or of res judicata, lapse of time, laches, or any statute of limitations. Suit hereunder may be instituted at any time within 4 months from the approval of this act, and proceedings in any suit brought in the Court of Claims under this act, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment therein shall be had as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The committee amendment was concurred in.

The title was amended to read as follows: "To confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the Bankers Reserve Life Co. of Omaha, Nebr., and the Wisconsin National Life Insurance Co. of Oshkosh, Wis."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title X—(H. R. 3218. For the relief of Fred Herrick.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Fred Herrick, of Spokane, Wash., the sum of $50,000 in recognition of work done by the said Fred Herrick in making more accessible the timber resources of the Malheur National Forest by railroad construction: Provided, That the said Fred Herrick shall disclaim and waive all right or claim to any money paid by him and covered into the Treasury in connection with that certain contract for the purchase of timber on the Malheur National Forest, Oreg., dated June 15, 1923.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 14, line 4, after the word "Washington", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

Page 14, line 13, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "And provided further, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, a similar bill, S. 491, became Private Act No. 335 in the Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 27, 1935, after this title was included in the omnibus bill. At that time this bill was laid on the table. I make the point of order that this bill is not properly in the omnibus bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk will report the next title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XI—(H. R. 3286. For the relief of Albert W. Wright.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Albert W. Wright, of Richland, N. Y., the sum of $304.33. Such sum represents payment to the Post Office Department by Albert W. Wright in the year 1921 to make up a deficit at the Richland (N. Y.) post office caused by theft, the recovery of which is barred by the statute of limitations.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 15, line 12, after the figures "$304.33", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

Page 15, line 17, after the word "theft", strike out "the recovery of which is barred by the statute of limitations", and strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XII—(H. R. 3348. For the relief of Nathan A. Buck.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Nathan A. Buck, of Chatham, Mass., the sum of $300 in full compensation for damage caused to his oyster beds in Oyster Pond River, in said Chatham, in the fall of 1931 by a boat belonging to the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 16, line 11, strike out the word "compensation" and insert "settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States"; line 16, after the word "Commerce", insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XIII—(H. R. 3737. For the relief of George L. Stone.)

That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to George L. Stone, a former employee in the Post Office Department, Division of Rural Mail Service, the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, compensation hereunder to commence from and after the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of George L. Stone, who is alleged to have sustained disability while an employee in the Post Office Department, Division of Rural Mail Service, between December 16, 1907, and July 31, 1918: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act: Provided further, That said George L. Stone shall file notice of injury and claim for compensation therefor not later than 60 days from the enactment of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out all of title XIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: Page 17, beginning in line 4, strike out all of title XIII.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment in order to keep my record consistent. We have frequently had bills introduced in recent years to extend the benefit of the Federal Employees' Compensation Act to employees whose disabilities arose prior to the passage of the present act in 1916. When they have come to my attention I have objected to them. I think there must be a time limit beyond which we shall not go.

The claimant in this case was a rural mail carrier whose disabilities, according to his own statement, commenced in 1910. He resigned in 1918. In 1929 he first filed a claim for compensation. His claim is that he acquired rheumatism, heart trouble, and kidney trouble by reason of the fact that he had to ride a horse to deliver his mail. I think that riding a horse is one of the most beneficial exercises a man can indulge in. It seems to me he led a good, healthy, wholesome life and that his present disabilities are unconnected with his Government service. His claim is so preposterous and arises so far back in ancient history that I think the House should follow the course which it has pursued in the past few years and that the amendment should be passed and the claim rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland) there were ayes 6 and noes 8.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLOOM). The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 85, nays 198, not voting 145, as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA SCHOOLS AS I KNOW THEM

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD a radio address made by myself.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me over the radio on April 20:

I have been invited by the Columbia network to address you tonight in reply to a serious charge of communism in the schools of Washington which was broadcast over this network on Friday evening. I suggested that the proper person to reply was the superintendent of schools who was named in the indictment, but the permission of the Board of Education was necessary and as their meeting does not take place until April 22 this permission could not be received in time. It is my hope that this permission will be granted and that the Columbia network will invite Dr. Ballou to present the case for the schools in the near future. Tonight, in the short time I have, I shall try to tell you of the schools as I know them.

Before doing so I must correct a misapprehension that perhaps exists in the minds of those of you who heard the attack of Mr. BLANTON on the Ellenbogen rent bill on Friday night. I shall quote: "The House today killed the communistic Ellenbogen bill by a vote of 85 to 196." As chairman of the committee reporting the bill to the House I want you to know that is the most ridiculous charge ever made about any bill. An almost identical bill has been introduced in the Senate by Senator CAPPER, the distinguished Senator from Kansas, and certainly no one would accuse him of communism. My colleagues in the House are about as able and fair a group as can be found anywhere in these United States. I acknowledge a great debt of gratitude to them for their fine cooperation and loyalty to me at all times. Their judgment in defeating the Ellenbogen bill I do not criticize. It was based on the fact that many thought it to be unconstitutional. Since I am not a lawyer and we have about 300 lawyers in the House, and since even the esteemed and able nine members of the United States Supreme Court rarely render a unanimous verdict, it would seem absurd to question the difference of opinion expressed by my colleagues, and I may assure you that I have not done so. But as a woman whose whole life has been built upon faith in God and in religion, I must emphatically protest against any man insulting my intelligence and yours by charging that a bill I presented in the House was communistic. I have heard many unfair charges hurled in the House in the heat of debate but there is no excuse for such injustice in the calm atmosphere of a radio studio.

Surely nothing could give more satisfaction to the Communists than such misstatement of fact. If communism ever becomes dangerous in our beloved country—and I do not believe it will—the blame can be laid at the door of the "red baiters", people who insist in seeing red everywhere and in everything. I am not minimizing the bad influence of even the small minority of people in this country who believe in communism. What I am more fearful of than their influence is the influence of those who, in the name of patriotism, are constantly raising the question, when it would seem to be the better part of wisdom for us to break down communism by concerning ourselves with the things that foster its growth. If our children were trained in the home to love God, to honor and revere the things which we have acquired under the flag of liberty and justice, we would not need to worry so much about the schools of the Nation. The serious breakdown in religion and morale in the homes of America seems to be far greater than in the schools of the Nation, and because of this the responsibility has been very heavy for our teachers. I am one who believes that the majority of the teachers of the country are patriotic and are doing as good a job in the training of our youth as can be done considering the lack of cooperation they are receiving from the average home.

The charge that has been made regarding communism in the public schools of Washington has not been proved. So far as I have been able to learn upon investigation, I would say that it has been founded upon prejudice, not fact. The president of the Board of Education, Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, appeared before the House Committee on Education of the District of Columbia Committee, and presented testimony which proved conclusively that there never has been any evidence that communism was either taught or advocated in the schools of Washington.

The so-called "red rider" to the appropriation bill of 1936 is an insult to every patriotic school teacher in Washington. This rider was never given consideration by Congress prior to the presentation of the conference report on that act and was passed, as is usual with conference reports, without discussion. It never should have been attached to an appropriation bill. It was a legislative act. It serves no good purpose but rather is an unwarranted reflection on a great body of men and women of the District of Columbia. I, as a Member of Congress, and I may say every other Government official take an oath of office to support and defend the Constitution of the United States when we assume office. So does every school teacher in the system. Under the terms of this "red rider" every teacher and employee of the school system must renew this oath under the ruling of the Comptroller General, Mr. McCarl before receiving their pay check signing a statement that they have not taught nor advocated communism. This has brought about so much confusion with regard to the meaning of the words "teach" and "advocate" that it has resulted in a ridiculous situation. As one teacher explained it to me, "I am so fearful of the interpretation of the words that when I come to Russia I believe the best thing to do is skip it." What a ridiculous situation in a civilized community not to speak of the danger to the children for we all know that children are curious and determined to find out in their own way—very often a dangerous way—the explanation of knowledge which is denied. Therein lies one of the worst features of this legislation. If a teacher is allowed to use his or her good judgment in explaining the Russian Government I do not think it would present a picture that anyone would wish to accept.

At the present time communism is not discussed in the public schools—in fact, it is not even mentioned. The result is that the school child becomes intrigued by the thought of learning of this dread subject of communism, and the search for information concerning it brings him in touch with biased information on the subject. The opportunity for a trained person to present the invidious comparison between the communistic theories and ideals of American Government is lost. Would it not be far better to give the teacher the opportunity to dwell on our ideals of government? There is no stronger way to stress a point than by comparison, and no comparison is more telling than that between Americanism and communism.

As chairman on the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives, in which capacity I have had many opportunities to study the school system of the District of Columbia, I wish to say most emphatically that I have the utmost confidence in the Board of Education and the entire school system. I believe the school children of the District of Columbia are fortunate in having as instructors and guides in the formative years the type of man and woman connected with the schools.

I appeal to every father and mother who believes in fair play in the fundamental rights and principles of a free country to ask their Representatives in Congress to remain on the floor and listen to all the arguments presented on the Sisson bill. If they do this, I have no doubt that they will render a proper verdict when the bill is voted on. To those of you who are interested and unable to hear these arguments, I suggest that you write in for a copy of the hearings before the Education Subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia. While this bill is a local one and concerned only with the schools of Washington, it has a great significance, because Washington is the Capital of the Nation and our schools indirectly influence the schools of America. Therefore, this controversy has assumed national importance.

To give you a background as to why a committee of the House of Representatives should be particularly interested in a situation which has to do entirely with the District of Columbia perhaps it would be well for me to explain that the District of Columbia is by virtue of the Constitution a Federal city and it is controlled entirely by Congress. People of Washington do not have a vote and therefore their problems must be assumed by Representatives from all over the country who actually represent their own district and have but a nominal interest in the District of Columbia. The business of the House of Representatives is for the most part conducted by the membership of the House resolved into committees. Each bill introduced in the House of Representatives is immediately referred for consideration to the committee that has jurisdiction over that particular phase of legislation. It is easily seen that each Member of Congress is desirous of being placed on that committee which can be of service to his own district. The Committee on the District of Columbia receives all bills affecting the District of Columbia, one of which was the Sisson bill which provides for the repeal of the so-called "red rider." This committee is composed of 19 men and 2 women representing 20 States. The Committee on the District of Columbia is in no way connected with any problem that has to do with any Member's own district. It is concerned entirely with the municipal work of the city of Washington. Therefore, membership on this committee is of necessity a patriotic service. However, the control that Congress has over the District is merely legislative. Three Commissioners who are appointed by the President assume the same duties as the average city council without the power ordinarily given such a body. They do not even appoint the Board of Education as is usual in most cities. It is appointed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

The Commissioners do, however, have the power to recommend legislation to Congress. This is as far as their power extends, and oftentimes necessary and remedial measures recommended by the Commissioners fail to pass the House or the Senate, or both. Of course, any Member of Congress can introduce bills affecting the District of Columbia, and any citizen of Washington can request any Member of Congress to introduce a bill. Therefore it is easily seen that the District of Columbia is factually at the mercy of Congress, whose Members in many instances utterly disregard their duty to the District of Columbia.

I have gone into this matter at some length in order to give you a clear picture as to why the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia has come into this controversy. There is only one solution to the problem, and that is for the people of the District to have their own Representatives in Congress. I trust that this exposition of fact concerning the repeal of the "red rider" has helped to make the situation more clear to those of you interested in the problem.

I repeat again, during the long hearings held on the Sisson repeal bill not one bit of evidence produced could convince any fair-minded person that communism had ever been taught in the schools of Washington.

THE CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS BRINGS MARKED IMPROVEMENT IN PHYSICAL CONDITION TO ENROLLEES

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include correspondence between myself and Colonel Waldron, of West Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letters:

HEADQUARTERS, CHARLESTON DISTRICT, C. C. C.,
Charleston, W. Va., April 21, 1936.

Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH, M. C.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Have just run upon some figures which, knowing your high degree of interest in the C. C. C., I thought would be of particular interest to you. They relate to 207 enrollees who were sent to Camp P–55, Keith, W. Va., on July 22, 1935, and carry on to March 31, 1936, at which time 106 of the original personnel remained at that camp. Here they are:

1. Of the original 207 enrolled on July 22, 1935, 19 served 1 month each. Seventeen gained a total of 88 pounds, or an average of 4.42 pounds per man. The greatest individual gain was 14 pounds. Two lost weight, the maximum individual loss being 3 pounds.

2. Of the original 207 enrolled, 44 served 3 months each. Forty gained a total of 333 pounds, or an average of 7.57 pounds per man. The greatest individual gain was 21 pounds. Four lost weight, the maximum individual loss being 10 pounds.

3. Of the original 207 enrolled, 38 served 6 months each. Thirty-seven gained a total of 379 pounds, or an average of 9.97 pounds per man. The greatest individual gain was 28 pounds. One lost weight amounting to 2 pounds. He was a local experienced man past 50 years of age at enrollment.

4. Of the original 207 enrolled, 106 served 9 months each. One hundred and four gained a total of 1,499 pounds, or an average of 14.14 pounds per man. The greatest individual gain was 31 pounds. Two lost weight, the maximum individual loss being 17 pounds. Both of these were local experienced men past 50 years of age when enrolled, and one of them was 38 pounds overweight at date of enrollment.

To my way of thinking, the foregoing seems to justify the West Virginia maxim of "Feed 'em well; work 'em hard, and treat 'em fair."

With kindest personal regards, I am,
Cordially yours,

W. H. WALDRON,
Colonel, Infantry, Commanding.

APRIL 22, 1936.

Col. W. H. WALDRON,
Commanding Officer, Civilian Conservation Corps,
Charleston, W. Va.

MY DEAR COLONEL WALDRON: Replying to your informative and helpful letter of April 21, let me thank you sincerely for this information, disclosing as it does the splendid physical improvement made by the Civilian Conservation Corps' enrollees.

This worth-while program, in which the Army has played an important part and in which youth is given a helping hand, will continue, I feel sure, to merit general approval.

With deep appreciation for your fine aid and with kindest personal regards, I am

Most cordially yours,

JENNINGS RANDOLPH.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XIV—(H. R. 3866. For the relief of Emanuel Bratses)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Emanuel Bratses, a citizen of Philadelphia, Pa., the sum of $5,000. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages sustained by the said Emanuel Bratses on account of loss of left leg, above the knee, due to an accident sustained in the Brooklyn Navy Yard on May 27, 1933, while the said Emanuel Bratses was engaged as a painter for Pamfilis Contracting Co., a Maryland corporation of Baltimore, Md. Said accident was occasioned by the negligence of an employee of the United States Government who was operating a traveling crane, which ran over the leg (and body) of said Emanuel Bratses, necessitating the amputation of the left leg above the knee, as hereinbefore recited.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out, beginning with line 5, down to and including line 20, and insert the following: "That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Emanuel Bratses for injuries and damages sustained in an accident in which he lost his leg at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., on May 27, 1933: Provided, That proceedings in any suit brought in the Court of Claims under this act, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment therein shall be had as in the case of claims over which said court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The title was amended to read as follows: "To confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Emanuel Bratses."

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XV—(H. R. 3934. For the relief of Art Medal Construction Co. with respect to the maintenance of suit against the United States for the recovery of any income or profits taxes paid to the United States for the calendar year 1918 in excess of the amount of taxes lawfully due for such period)

That the time within which suits may be instituted by Art Metal Construction Co., a corporation organized under the laws of Massachusetts, having its principal place of business in Jamestown, N. Y., against the United States for the recovery of any income or profits taxes paid to the United States for the calendar year 1918 in excess of the amount of taxes lawfully due for said period be, and the same is hereby, extended to October 1, 1935, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, and it is hereby authorized and directed to hear and determine on the merits any suit commenced therein against the United States prior to October 1, 1935, for the recovery of any overpayment of such taxes, any finding, determination, judgment, rule of law, or statute to the contrary notwithstanding.

And if it shall be found in any such suit that such tax has been overpaid, the court shall render final judgment against the United States and in favor of said taxpayer for the amount of such overpayment with interest at 6 percent per annum from the date of payment, such judgment to be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 19, line 7, strike out all of title XV.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for a waiver of the statute of limitations in favor of the Art Metal Construction Co., in order that they may maintain a suit to recover taxes paid in the year 1918, which they allege are in excess of the amount lawfully due for that period. It appears that the claimant has filed suit for a refund in the district court of New York and an adverse ruling was made upon the case. It was then carried through the courts to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court again ruled against the claimant herein.

After denying a writ of certiorari in the case of this taxpayer the Supreme Court then granted such a writ to review other cases involving practically the same question—namely, whether or not a timely claim for refund in general terms could be amended to state a specific ground after the statute of limitations barred the filing of a new refund claim, but before the original claim was rejected by the Commission. After this decision of the Supreme Court the claimant herein filed an application to reopen this case which the Court did not grant; and the attempt here, then, is to allow this claimant, after many years, to present its case anew to the courts and obtain therefore a refund of this tax in the sum of $41,000. My amendment moves to strike out this bill.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has made just as fair a statement as he could make under the circumstances. The fact remains, however, that this corporation employing many men and carrying a large pay roll during this depression paid in income and profits taxes for the year 1918, $538,000; and in order to make sure they were paying enough they overpaid, according to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, $41,000. This company was so notified by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

There is not the slightest doubt that the Government now has $41,000 that rightfully belongs to this taxpayer who has performed really a signal service by furnishing men employment during this depression and doing it out of its capital rather than its earnings. All they ask is the right to come into the Court of Claims. It is nothing but a technicality on the part of the Government. This taxpayer did everything within the range of human possibility and legal acumen to comply with the regulations of the Treasury Department, but unfortunately they were unable to satisfy the Treasury, not as to the legality of the claim, but purely upon a technicality in the form in which they filed their claim. They then had to resort to the courts, and step by step they went up through the courts, just as the gentleman from California states. Subsequently the Supreme Court in two other cases involving precisely the same questions decided in favor of the taxpayers. In the meantime the Art Medal Construction Co. did ask for a writ of certiorari and the Court held simply that they had lost jurisdiction of the matter. The merits of the case remain precisely the same.

Mr. Speaker, we are sitting here not only as legislators but also as a party in interest and as judges. We are sitting as a court of equity, the last resort of the taxpayer to obtain that which rightfully belongs to him; and I hope this House, in view of the fact that the Government admits it is not rightfully holding this money but is standing upon just a mere thread of technicality, will say that the claimant may be permitted to go into the Court of Claims and establish his claim upon the merits of the case.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. The factory of this company is located in the western end of New York State. I am very familiar with the facts and the record, and I do not believe my colleague has exaggerated his statement one iota.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

JESSIE T. LAFFERTY

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XVI—(H. R. 4060. For the relief of Jessie T. Lafferty)

That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit the account of Jessie T. Lafferty, postmaster at Perth, Kans., in the sum of $330.53, due the United States on account of fixed credit funds, postage stamps, and postal funds which were lost as a result of a burglary August 22, 1931.

Title XVII—(H. R. 4079. For the relief of Garfield Arthur Ross)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Garfield Arthur Ross, of Chicago, Ill., the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of his claim against the Government for personal injuries sustained as a result of subjecting himself to the required antityphoid serum injections during the spring of the year 1931, such injections having been administered by a Government doctor as a prerequisite to his admission as a trainee in the citizens' military training camp at Fort Sheridan, Ill.

Committee amendment:

Page 21, line 9, after the word "Illinois", insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: Strike out title XVII.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, the young man for whose benefit this bill was introduced was a candidate for admission to one of the C. M. T. C. camps in 1931. As a prerequisite he was required to take antityphoid serum. He had two injections of this serum, and after the second injection the young man was taken violently ill, sent to a hospital, and there found to be suffering a severe case of spinal meningitis.

The medical testimony in the case is that spinal meningitis cannot and does not follow as a consequence of injecting serum to protect against typhoid fever. The medical testimony is to the effect that there is a period of incubation of 2 or 3 weeks during which spinal menigitis develops; and the conclusion is that this young man at the time he took the injections was suffering from the early stage, the incubation stage, of spinal meningitis, and that he would have had spinal meningitis with or without the injections; that the injections he received had no connection whatever with his disability.

It also appears from the evidence that a great many other young men received this same vaccine, or serum, without any ill consequences whatever.

The man who gave the injections was an experienced physician. He administered the same injection to a great number of other applicants at the same camp without any illness following.

Mr. Speaker, it was a very unfortunate thing that this young man should become afflicted with this very serious disease, but there is no evidence it was in any way caused by any act or misconduct on the part of an agent of the Government.

I think it should also be called to the attention of the Members that under the general law there is no liability on the part of the Government for injuries or disabilities suffered by men attending C. M. T. C. camps, other than the requirement that they receive hospital care if they are injured at camp or in going to and from the camp. Their families are also entitled to some reasonable allowance for funeral expenses in case they are killed while at camp. If we want to go further than that I think a general law should be enacted. Nearly 40,000 boys go to these camps every year and some of them are injured but, so far as I know, none have ever received benefits of this kind.

Mr. Speaker, I have objected to a great many of these bills for the same reason that I objected to this one. This opens up a new source of expense to the Government. If the Congress believes that claims of this kind should be paid the proper committee should bring in a general law on the subject for consideration. I am very sorry for this boy, but there is no liability on the part of the Government toward this young man nor any precedent for paying such a claim, so far as I can learn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XVIII—(H. R. 4942. For the relief of Patrick Henry Walsh)

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to Patrick Henry Walsh, of Cliffside Park, N. J., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000 in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for damages on account of injuries resulting from being struck by a United States mail truck at Jersey City, N. J., on December 19, 1924: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COSTELLO: On page 21, line 25, after "pay to" insert the words "the estate of" and amend the title to read "For the relief of the estate of Patrick Henry Walsh."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COSTELLO: On page 22, line 2, after the words "sum of" strike out "$3,000" and insert "$1,500."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE: Page 21, line 22, strike out all of title XVIII.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, this claim is made on account of alleged injuries to the claimant, Patrick Henry Walsh, who was struck by a mail truck while crossing a street at otherwise than a crossing intersection. The evidence shows that the mail truck which struck him was traveling at a rate of speed estimated to have been from 7 to 15 miles an hour. It was not traveling at an excessive rate of speed. It is shown further that the claimant was crossing in the middle of the block 28 feet from the regular crossing or intersection—in other words, jaywalking—and that he came out onto the street from behind a column or pillar so that he could not be observed by the driver of the truck in time to avoid the accident.

Mr. Speaker, I submit under these circumstances, with the contributary negligence of the claimant shown, there could not possibly create any liability against either the driver or the Government. Such a claim as this would not be asserted at all except against the Government of the United States. As a matter of fact, an action at law was brought by the claimant against the driver of the truck, but before the case came to trial it was dismissed by the claimant. He has chosen to pursue his remedy against the Government by having this bill introduced into the Congress. The claim is an old one. It has been pending in the Congress for a number of years. The accident dates back to 1924, some 12 years ago.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that under all the circumstances the Government of the United States should not be held liable in a claim of this kind.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, we had the experience just a few minutes ago of seeing a section stricken from the omnibus bill which concerned an individual. I would like to have heard the other side of that case. I am somewhat disturbed. I voted "no" because I did not know what the full facts were. The thought entered my mind whether or not the infection by the doctor was a contributing cause. What happened may not have been the cause medically, but it may have aggravated a preexisting condition, or it might have lit up a dormant condition and there would be a moral responsibility. However, that is water over the dam. Another section is presented here which affects an individual, now dead. This individual cannot speak for himself. The distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY], who introduced the bill, is unavoidably away from the floor on account of official business. I am speaking in his behalf. I am going to vote against the amendment. The amount has been reduced to $1,500, the committee having made a favorable report in the sum of $3,000. A moral obligation of the Government can only be paid through the medium of a private bill. There is no legal right to sue the Government. I can well understand why the case would be dismissed against the driver. The reason probably was because the driver had no money anyway. All of us who are lawyers have had cases of that kind at some time or other. Personally I never bring a case against a driver because he is a man who usually gets only a small salary. In the case of an employee of the city of Boston, I do not sue the man who drives the truck. What is the use? Of course, suit could be brought against him, but if I got a judgment what good would it be? What good would a judgment be in this case? The plaintiff should be commended for dismissing the case against the driver under the circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, the important fact is that the committee has reported this bill favorably, and as far as we are concerned the committee to which the bill is referred is the court, and I am going to accept the judgment of the committee.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. May I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he has read the committee's report?

There are three witnesses to this accident. One is the gentleman who was injured, and the other two, I will confess, are perhaps as interested as he since they are employees of the Federal Government. The one man says he was injured through the negligence of the employees of the Government, while the other two say he was jay walking 28 feet from the cross walk, stepped out from behind a pillar of the elevated railroad directly in the path of a slow-moving mail truck. How can the gentleman assume, as a matter of law, that the claimant is right and the Government employees are wrong, when the weight of the testimony is in favor of the Government?

Mr. McCORMACK. The committee is the one to weigh the facts.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. These are the facts.

Mr. McCORMACK. A majority of the members of the committee reported out this bill after the able presentation of the evidence by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY]. They heard the evidence, and we are sitting here now and cannot go into all the testimony, but there is a presumption in my mind that a report made by a committee is entitled to support unless I have controlling evidence to overturn such presumption.

Now, an amendment has been offered from the Democratic side reducing the amount from $3,000 to $1,500. The committee has reported the measure favorably, the committee heard the evidence and weighed all the facts. I recognize that some of us might receive the same facts, and they might impress us differently. However, whoever this gentleman is, he has gone into the great beyond. He cannot speak for himself. The committee received his evidence and they weighed the evidence and based upon the evidence of all the witnesses, the committee has reported out this bill in the sum of $3,000, which has now been reduced to $1,500.

I went along with the $1,500 amendment, but I am going to vote against the amendment to strike out the bill entirely from this omnibus measure.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XIX—(H. R. 6661. For the relief of Maj. Joseph H. Hickey)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Maj. Joseph H. Hickey, United States Army, retired, the sum of $3,880.28, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for a shortage in public funds due to irregularities in the accounts of a noncommissioned officer, now deceased, which officer was in charge of the commissary, New Orleans general depot, September 1920 to August 1921, and for which shortage Major Hickey has accounted to the United States Government: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, a similar bill (S. 2741) became Private Act No. 388 in the Seventy-fourth Congress and was approved February 11, 1936, which was after this title was included in the bill. I therefore move to strike out the title, as the bill is already a law.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable to the committee.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be stricken from the bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XX—(S. 753. To carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Wales Island Packing Co.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 to the Wales Island Packing Co. for the injury to the business and property of said company on Wales Island on account of the decision of the Alaska boundary tribunal, under which the possession of said island has passed from the United States to the Dominion of Canada, as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 61, Seventy-second Congress, first session: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 20 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, or other party or parties, on account of services rendered in any way in connection with the presentation, passage, or collection of said claim or any part thereof. It shall be unlawful for any such agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, or others as herein provided, to collect, receive, exact, or withhold a portion of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 20 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 24, line 2, after the word "company", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 24, lines 11 and 19, after the words "in excess of", strike out "20" and insert "10."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, this amendment simply changes the limitation on the attorneys' fees from 20 percent to 10 percent, which is the customary amount allowed.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, it is agreeable to the committee to accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XXI—(S. 788. For the relief of the International Mercantile Marine Co.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,400 to the International Mercantile Marine Co., to reimburse said company for penalties which were assessed and collected but not actually incurred under the immigration laws of the United States; and so found by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit on July 7, 1931 (51 Fed. (2d) 1053), the failure of said company to file suit within the statutory period of limitations for the recovery of said sum being hereby waived: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 25, line 6, after the word "company", strike out "to reimburse said company" and insert in lieu thereof "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XXII—(S. 790. For the relief of the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, to reimburse said company for penalties which were assessed and collected but not actually incurred under the immigration laws of the United States, and so found by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit on July 7, 1931 (51 Fed. (2) 1053), the failure of said company to file suit within the statutory period of limitation for the recovery of said sum being hereby waived: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 26, line 8, after the word "Transatlantique", strike out "to reimburse said company" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XXIII—(S. 921. For the relief of C. J. Mast)

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to C. J. Mast, of Charlo, Mont., the sum of $255 in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages on account of injury to his crops in the years 1924 to 1928, both inclusive, by reason of breaks in a lateral dike in connection with the Flathead irrigation project: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 4, strike out all of title XXIII.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the amount is so small in this bill that I dislike to take up the time of the House, but there is a principle involved. The claim is for crops damaged over a period of several years.

The outstanding question is, Is Congress going to approve of claims for damages resulting from ravages by muskrats when the Government was exercising due care trying to eliminate such pests? There was no negligence on the part of the Government on the irrigation project.

All along the Mississippi River and in the Mississippi Valley people are demanding money from the Government because the improvements made in connection with flood-control projects, and so forth, have damaged property. They do not think of the benefits that accrue as a result of this work.

If you are going to approve of a bill of this kind, you are adopting a policy that might be very harmful in the future.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Is the gentleman aware that the Secretary of the Interior approves of this bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; but, with all due respect to the Department of the Interior, the Department approves nearly all the bills reported from the gentleman's committee.

Getting back to my argument, I have on my desk at the present time a bill where a man in southeast Missouri wants about $25,000 because of flood-control work. I have told him I am opposed to such legislation.

It is a very dangerous policy for Congress to adopt one that says the Government is going to pay damages on irrigation and flood-control projects.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. The gentleman's statement that the Department of the Interior approves most of the bills sent to the Claims Committee I do not think is warranted. It disapproves many bills.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Interior Department has approved most of the bills before the Committee on Indian Affairs, bills of which it has no records. Why, they recommended two bills—Indian bills—and I brought the statutes before the House showing that Congress passed bills and paid the very claims years ago.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. But we are dealing with claims before the Claims Committee, and not before the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCHRAN. I realize that; but where they make mistakes before one committee, they will make others. I doubt if the Department considered the point I am making. If it did, I cannot agree. No doubt there was some little damage, but the Government certainly should not be held responsible for what the rats did when the Government was spending money trying to exterminate them. I repeat, the amount is very small, but others will point to this bill in asking that their claims be considered if the measure is agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It has been stated that the Secretary of the Interior approves this bill. In that connection I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Comptroller General very strongly disapproves of it, and states his reason in conclusive legal language.

Mr. COCHRAN. I intended to call the attention of the House to the Comptroller's views. I think we will be adopting a policy that we will regret in the future if you pass this bill. That is the only reason that I call it to the attention of the House, because it involves only $255. The bill should be defeated. If it is not defeated, you practically say to thousands of others that you will approve bills for damages resulting from irrigation and flood-control projects.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XXIV—(S. 998. To carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of George Lawley & Son Corporation, of Boston, Mass.)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $92,781 to the George Lawley & Son Corporation, of Boston, Mass., being the difference between the actual cost of the construction of two torpedo boats and the amount paid under the contract entered into for the building of said boats, as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 135, Seventy-third Congress, second session: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 28, line 8, strike out the word "being" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for"; page 28, line 15, strike out the figures "10" and insert "20"; page 28, line 21, strike out the figures "10" and insert "20."

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the committee amendments because of the fact that the second and third amendments, if agreed to, would increase the attorney's fees from 10 to 20 percent, which is contrary to our custom.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the second amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, with reference to that, this bill affects a constituent of mine. I think the position of the gentleman from California is correct. Personally I would much prefer to see 10 percent rather than 20 percent.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the second committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE: Page 28, line 1, strike out all of title XXIV.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, this bill purports to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of George Lawley & Son Corporation, of Boston, Mass. One would get the impression from that that the Court of Claims in this particular case had found in favor of this corporation. As a matter of fact, the Court of Claims found in favor of the Government, and the conclusion of law made by the Court of Claims reads as follows:

Upon the foregoing special findings of fact, which are made part of the judgment herein, the court decides as a conclusion of law that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover and its petition is dismissed. Judgment is rendered against the plaintiff for the cost of printing the record herein, the amount to be ascertained by the clerk and collected by him according to law.

That conclusion of law is certainly justified by the findings of fact. In this case claimant entered into a contract with the Government for the construction of two torpedo boats, and this claim is for the excess between the contract price and the actual cost of the boats. It turns out that the company was not able to construct the boats for the contract price, but there is nothing in the record anywhere to show that this was in any way the fault of the Government of the United States or that it occurred by reason of any facts which was not within the knowledge or reasonable contemplation of the claimant at the time the contract was entered into. I do not know of any reason why those who contract with the Government of the United States should not be held to their contracts just the same as they would be held in the case of a contract between individuals. In this particular case the difference in the amount of the contract price and the excess cost is very largely accounted for by the fact that there were increases in the cost of materials, and that the claimant company had some labor trouble in its plant, and, although not required to do so by its contract, the Government did all it could to help that situation by extending the time in which the company could complete the boats, instead of claiming whatever forfeitures might have accrued to the Government by reason of the delay.

The findings of the court disclose that the Government in every possible way assisted the claimant company in ironing out its difficulties, and there is no evidence here that the Government failed to do that which it should have done, but it lived up to its contract, and whatever difference there was in the case is due entirely to causes which, if not within the control of the claimant company, should and could have been foreseen by it when it entered into the contract. Under these circumstances I do not believe that we should go back to a contract made in 1898 and pass a bill which has been buffeted back and forth in Congress between the House and the Senate and in and out of committees through all that long period of time and render a judgment for almost $100,000 against the Government of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who has just spoken read only a portion of the complete report of the Court of Claims. He read what came under the heading of "Conclusion of law", but he failed to read the opinion upon which the conclusion of law was based.

The gentleman's statement of what the court said with reference to the conclusion of law is correct. Of course, we know they have no legal or equitable right, but they have a moral right. In the opinion, which is a part of the record, it was stated, "Plaintiff's claim for relief is therefore solely a matter for Congress."

Of course, it is a matter for Congress; but the Court of Claims investigated the facts and the Court of Claims found that the amount stated in this bill was the extra expenses incurred in connection with the building of the vessels. This extra amount was incurred as a result of the Government's own action in the main. The Government changed the specifications from time to time while these vessels were under construction.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Does not the report show that the claimant was compensated for those changes under the terms of the contract?

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, no.

Mr. HOPE. I call the gentleman's attention to the report, on page 123.

Mr. McCORMACK. The Court of Claims went into this matter thoroughly.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. Pardon me now. I only have 5 minutes.

This is the situation: The findings of the Court of Claims refer only to a legal right of recovery as plaintiff in a lawsuit. The only significance of the judgment of the court is that the claimant could not bring a suit for recovery. The congressional reference to the Court of Claims recognized that the company had no legal right of action to recover the amount of these losses. The Court of Claims was asked by Congress to find the facts, including the amount of the loss. It did so, and found it amounted to $92,781. The court points out in its opinion that plaintiff's claim for relief is a matter for Congress.

That claimant should have relief from its loss has been, on several occasions, recommended by the Secretaries of the Navy, beginning with Secretary Long. These recommendations are based on report of the board of naval officers, known as the Ramsay Board, and upon the circumstances under which the claimant incurred this loss.

The same recommendations were made with reference to all of the companies building these boats, and in the case of the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., where similar findings were made by the Court of Claims in Congressional No. 15006, said findings were carried out by Congress by the passage of a bill similar to the Lawley bill, and the money appropriated thereunder has been paid to said Fore River Co.

Vessels of this design were new in our Navy at the time and the Navy Department, due to lack of technical knowledge of this type of vessel, made requirements as to displacement, design, and speed which could not be carried out without extensive changes in the original plans and specifications. These changes were made as the work progressed and several of them necessitated changes in materials used in the design of other portions of the vessels. The original plans of the contractor as to the method of attaching the engine to the hull had been rejected by the Navy Department which had insisted on the use of its own designs. After the vessels were partially completed these plans were abandoned, and the original suggestions of the contractor were adopted, adding to the cost.

As result of the changes and experimentation with the plans the claimant was required to have 24 preliminary trials on the Blakely and 16 preliminary trials on the DeLong which are much in excess of the usual number. After these trials were made the engine foundations on both vessels were required to be changed by the Navy Department.

The cost of construction of the vessels, due to the reasons given above, greatly exceeded what was anticipated by either of the contracting parties. The Court of Claims has found that the claimant did nothing to unnecessarily increase the cost. As the loss resulting from the increased cost from which the claimant seeks relief was in no instance due to any fault or miscalculation of the claimant, it should not be required to continue to bear this loss, which it has done with great difficulty for a number of years.

The United States received the benefit of the improved design and better materials of the completed vessels which weighed nearly 35 tons more than originally contracted for. The United States also received the benefit of the experimental work done with the vessels which has been of great value in subsequent constructions, as pointed out by the Secretary of the Navy.

This matter has been before the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims has found that this sum was expended by the claimant. It is a moral obligation. The Congress has paid other companies on similar claims in the past; other companies separate and distinct from this company. Congress has found in the past that this is a just claim. A legal technicality is now advanced. The court has properly said that it had no right as a matter of law to make a finding; that that was a matter for the Congress, because there was a moral obligation involved. That was just the same as the case to which I referred a moment ago of the party who died. He has no legal case against the Government, but he had a moral case. There is a moral obligation on the part of the Government, and a private bill had to be filed. The Court of Claims has found that the amount stated in this bill was spent through no fault of the claimant. The only way it can be paid is through the filing and the passage of a private bill. The passage of this bill is necessary for the Government to meet a just moral obligation.

I hope the amendment will be rejected.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division there were ayes 27 and noes 32.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 117, nays 150, answered "present" 1, not voting 160, as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XXV—(S. 1036. Authorizing adjustment of the claim of Dr. George W. Ritchey)

That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claim of Dr. George W. Ritchey in the amount of $8,283.39 as loss sustained through the spalling and splitting of the original 40-inch mirror which was intended for installation under contract NOd-297, dated June 5, 1931, in a telescope at the United States Naval Observatory, and to allow not to exceed $8,283.39 in full and final settlement of said claim. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,283.39, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for payment of the claim.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this identical bill became Private Act No. 153 in the Seventy-fourth Congress, approved July 22, 1935. If the pending bill is enacted, it would authorize the payment of a claim already satisfied in full. I therefore ask to strike out title XXV.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, the committee has no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, title XXV will be stricken from the bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XXVI—(S. 1062. For the relief of James R. Young)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to James R. Young, successor to the Union Trust Co., of Raleigh, N. C., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $226.25 in full satisfaction of all claims for payment of premiums on policies of fire insurance written in 1918 by such Union Trust Co., covering certain goods of the value of $245,000, more or less, while in the process of being laundered for the United States Army by the Model Laundry, of Raleigh, N. C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Title XXVII—(S. 1110. For the relief of A. Randolph Holladay)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to A. Randolph Holladay, the sum of $11,172.15, with all interest due thereon, as a refund on income tax paid by A. Randolph Holladay, and which cannot be returned because of an agreement made between A. Randolph Holladay and the Treasury Department, on form no. 866: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Committee amendment:

Page 30, lines 19 and 20, strike out "with all interest due thereon, as" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States for."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Title XXVIII—(S. 1846. For the relief of the estate of Anton W. Fischer)

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Anton W. Fischer, late of Owatonna, Minn., the sum of $275.98, under existing rules and regulations, said amount having been illegally collected from said estate, as stated by letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue dated February 7, 1923: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill (H. R. 8750) for the relief of sundry claimants, and for other purposes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ART METAL CONSTRUCTION CO.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1138) for the relief of Art Metal Construction Co. with respect to the maintenance of suit against the United States for the recovery of any income or profits taxes paid to the United States for the calendar year 1918 in excess of the amount of taxes lawfully due for such period, a companion bill to H. R. 3934, which was passed earlier in the day.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time within which suits may be instituted by Art Metal Construction Co., a corporation organized under the laws of Massachusetts, having its principal place of business in Jamestown, N. Y., against the United States for the recovery of any income or profits taxes paid to the United States for the calendar year 1918 in excess of the amount of taxes lawfully due for said period be, and the same is hereby, extended to October 1, 1935, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, and it is hereby authorized and directed to hear and determine on the merits any suit commenced therein against the United States prior to October 1, 1935, for the recovery of any overpayment of such taxes, any finding, determination, judgment, rule of law, or statute to the contrary notwithstanding.

And if it shall be found in any such suit that such tax has been overpaid, the court shall render final judgment against the United States and in favor of said taxpayer for the amount of such overpayment, such judgment to be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States as in other cases.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REED of New York: Page 2, line 1, strike out "1935" and insert "1936."

Page 2, line 5, strike out "1935" and insert "1936."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the amendment?

Mr. REED of New York. When I introduced the bill I provided that suit could be brought not later than October of 1935.

Mr. BLANTON. This just changes the time?

Mr. REED of New York. That is all.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings by which the similar House bill (H. R. 3834) for the relief of Art Metal Construction Co. was passed be vacated and that the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

HILLSBORO AND WITHLACOOCHEE RIVERS, FLA.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9213) to provide a preliminary examination of the Hillsborough and Withlacoochee Rivers and their tributaries, in the State of Florida, with a view to the control of their flood waters.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, to ask the gentleman a question, as I understand, this is one of the routine matters they are taking up all over the country at the present time and it really entails no additional expense.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. That is correct. It is purely a survey bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Hillsborough and Withlacoochee Rivers and their tributaries, in the State of Florida, with a view to control of their floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE TOBACCO COMPACT BILL

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12037) relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced providing for the control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such States, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 16, after "act", insert: ": Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to grant the consent of Congress to negotiate any compact for regulating or controlling the production of, or commerce in, tobacco for the purpose of fixing the price thereof, or to create or perpetuate monopoly, or to promote regimentation, but such consent shall be limited to compacts for the regulation and control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in order thereby to enable growers to receive a fair price for such tobacco"; page 6, line 3, after "Wisconsin", insert "Massachusetts, Florida"; page 7, lines 9 and 10, strike out "the crop years 1933, 1934, and 1935" and insert "any 3 normal crop years during the last 10 years"; page 7, lines 16 and 17, strike out "the crop years 1933, 1934, and 1935" and insert "such crop years"; page 7, line 19, strike out "the crop years 1933, 1934, and 1935" and insert "such crop years."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina to concur in the Senate amendments?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from North Carolina inform us the effect of the Senate amendments on the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. COOLEY. The House bill provided certain years to guide the Department in the allotment of a quota to Puerto Rico. In 1932 they had a hurricane in Puerto Rico that completely destroyed the tobacco crop and that was one of the years mentioned in the House bill. One of the Senate amendments strikes out this particular 3-year period and provides that any 3 normal years during the last 10 years may be used as a guide to enable the Department of Agriculture to fix the quota.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Does the amendment, then, permit Puerto Rico to enter into compacts with other States?

Mr. COOLEY. I understand it does permit Puerto Rico to enter into compacts with other States producing the same type of tobacco produced in Puerto Rico, that is the cigar-filler type of tobacco.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Does it give the Secretary of Agriculture the right to determine the allocations of production of tobacco in Puerto Rico?

Mr. COOLEY. It is my understanding that provision is left just as it passed the House.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman explain to the House the effect of the provision inserted by the Senate relating to monopolies created by compacts?

Mr. COOLEY. I suppose the proponent of the amendment had in mind the possibility of the compacts controlling tobacco to the extent it might result in a monopoly.

This provision will prevent that. It also seeks to prevent the unreasonable exercise of the powers which are to be exercised by the compact States and limits the consent of Congress to the compact States to control and regulate the production of tobacco only to the extent it may enable the growers to receive a fair price for the tobacco they produce. I understand further there is a Senate amendment which adds the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman anticipate this compact will be in effect for more than 1 year?

Mr. COOLEY. That will depend, of course, upon the experience this year. It is not definitely certain it will be in existence this year. The States of North and South Carolina will have to pass acts similar to the act passed by the General Assembly of Virginia, and whether or not these States will act I am not in position to say at this time. However, I do hope they will act immediately so that the 1936 crop of tobacco may be controlled.

Mr. ANDRESEN. They will have to act pretty quickly.

Mr. COOLEY. Yes; that is the reason we are anxious to have this bill passed as soon as possible.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand from the explanation that has been made, there are only slight changes in terms and there is nothing that materially changes the effect and purposes of the bill?

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SOUTH DAKOTA DEMOCRATIC CLUB

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a short address which I made before the members of the South Dakota Democratic Club of Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent I insert in the RECORD a speech I delivered before the South Dakota Democratic Club of Washington, Monday evening, April 20, 1936.

Mr. President and members of the South Dakota Democratic Club of Washington, I want to congratulate you on the excellent organization you have effected of South Dakota Democrats living in the National Capital. I hope that it will increase in membership, and gain in strength and influence. In addition to comprising Democrats from our home State who are employed by the Government, I trust that it will expand so as to include South Dakota Democrats otherwise employed here.

In this connection, a thought occurs to me that I believe deserves emphasis. It concerns this much used and sometimes misunderstood word, "patronage." There has been so much humor—as well, at times, so much criticism—regarding patronage, that it is worth while to make sure that the word is better understood and explained. It is a serious mistake to look upon those who come to Washington from other parts of the country and receive Government appointments as being beneficiaries of favoritism and wirepulling. Their positions must not be considered "snaps." On the contrary, occupants of these appointments must possess ability, sincerity, loyalty, and honesty. The pay is generally substantial, but consistent work is required; and it cannot truthfully be said that any of the positions are "snaps." Most or all of you who hear me will agree that you have to render fair service in your various places.

An important phase of Federal appointments here is that they enable the appointees to take advantage of opportunities for education and research that they could not enjoy in any other city of the United States, except perhaps a few of the larger municipalities such as New York, Chicago, San Francisco, or Detroit. In some respects Washington is entirely unique. The Library of Congress has no equal the world over in the number of its books and the range of subjects they cover, except perhaps the library of the British Museum in London. The Washington Public Library and its numerous branches are also splendidly equipped.

The art galleries, scientific centers, and other institutions of culture and learning here are as a rule unexcelled. Many are the Government employees who utilize their spare hours after the workday in studies and research in these libraries, museums, and other institutions, or in the city's splendid schools and colleges. They are able to earn comfortable livings, to have pleasant quarters, and at the same time to gain educations that would be beyond their reach in almost any other city. A large percentage of them make full use of these fine opportunities. Those of you who hear me tonight can confirm my assertion. As an interesting example I may call attention to the number of elevator operators and Capitol policemen who in odd moments may be found poring over law books and other textbooks. Many times I have seen them deep in studies that would tax the minds of older persons. And often I felt proud of the part I had in enabling them to have such opportunities. I was glad to have been able to render such a service—to have helped place them where they might not only have good incomes and live well but acquire the priceless possession of broad knowledge.

In addressing Democrats it is not necessary to stress the grandeur and nobility of the philosophy of Democracy. It is because we recognize this that we are Democrats. We belong to the great party of Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, William Jennings Bryan, and Franklin D. Roosevelt because it embodies the hopes, aspirations, and ideals of humanity—because it is devoted to human rights and liberties as distinguished from the greed and selfishness of exploiters and profiteers. While we look with pride on the record of our party, we must at the same time recognize our deep responsibility and duty—the duty of keeping the party true to its principles and preventing what President Roosevelt characterizes the "forces of entrenched greed" from gaining control of it. Only rarely has the party drifted away from these principles. But the corrupt and insidious elements that thrive on legalized robbery and corruption are always active. They dominate the Republican Party and have done so almost from the moment of the death of Abraham Lincoln. They would dominate the Democratic Party also if they could—and in a few unfortunate instances they have succeeded. Happily in these days they have no prospect of success, although all of us know how bitterly and savagely they have assailed the President and other champions of Democracy that is really liberal, human, and progressive.

A week ago today was the anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson. Let us take new inspiration from the glorious example of the founder of our party, and pledge ourselves to adhere at all times to the immortal doctrines he wrote in the Declaration of Independence and practiced throughout his life.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement setting forth the procedure in the selection of postmasters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire what it is the gentleman wishes to insert in the RECORD? Procedure by whom?

Mr. CASEY. By the Civil Service Commission. I have submitted this to the Civil Service Commission and they have given their approval. Instead of answering these inquiries by a long letter, I am going to send a copy of what I insert in the RECORD.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman wishes to insert the procedure in reference to the selection of postmasters, he should, of course, include the procedure after the eligible list has been sent to the Post Office Department.

Mr. CASEY. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. This statement explains fully the persons contacted by the Department after the list of three has been submitted by the Civil Service Commission and before the recommendation is made to the President?

Mr. CASEY. It states it as fully as I know the procedure.

Mr. MICHENER. From whom did the gentleman get the information?

Mr. CASEY. From the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MICHENER. The Civil Service Commission does not have the information, I take it, in reference to the action taken after the list reaches the Post Office Department. I shall not object, and, on the contrary, be very glad to have the gentleman insert the procedure, but I will object unless he inserts the procedure followed by the Post Office Department after the list of three eligibles is submitted.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman from Michigan feel he should tell the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts what he should insert in the RECORD in connection with a matter of this kind?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I do. If any of the procedure is given, all should be given.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the objection comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think so. The gentleman from Michigan reserved the right to object.

Mr. KENNEY. I understood the request was granted when the gentleman from Michigan rose in the rear of the Chamber and started asking some questions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, perhaps, technically the gentleman may be correct, but the Chair does not wish to be too technical in the matter. The point of order is overruled.

SERGEANT BOIKO, THE REAL HERO

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, yesterday there was buried in Arlington National Cemetery one of the greatest heroes of the late war, Sgt. Michael Boiko. He was not so well known as some others perhaps, but was surpassed by none in bravery and devotion to duty.

Born in Russia, Sergeant Boiko came to this country as a youth and enlisted in our National Guard before he had finally qualified for citizenship. He served on the Mexican border in 1916 with the Connecticut National Guard and went to France with his unit, then part of the Twenty-sixth Division, in September 1917.

Through all the major engagements up to the armistice the division fought and through it all the bravery of Sergeant Boiko stands out. In one advance he volunteered to attempt to silence a machine-gun nest which was holding up the advance of his company, and, crawling forward alone, under heavy fire, he put the nest out of action, although armed only with his pistol.

On another occasion in an advance, after all his officers were killed or disabled, he took command of his company and continued to advance until there were left alive only 19 men of the 150 he started with. On different occasions he was gassed, his eyesight damaged by shell fragments, and his side pierced by machine-gun fire.

Our own and allied Governments decorated him with various citations and medals, including the Distinguished Service Cross, the Croix de Guerre, the Purple Heart, and the Silver Star. I quote from the citations which accompanied his decorations:

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE CROSS CITATION

Michael Boiko, former sergeant, One hundred and Second Infantry, Twenty-sixth Division: For exceptional heroism in action at Marcheville, September 26, 1918. When the advance of his company was temporarily halted by machine-gun fire, Sergeant Boiko volunteered to flank the nest and put the guns out of action. Although under intense fire, Sergeant Boiko, utterly disregarging his own personal danger, crawled out from the lines and worked his way to a favorable position where enfilade fire could be delivered and with his pistol silenced the guns, capturing them and a portion of the enemy gun crews, thus enabling his company to make further advance.

THE SILVER STAR CITATION

For gallantry in action near Bois de Ormont, north of Verdun, October 23 and 29, 1918.

THE PURPLE HEART CITATION

For wound in action July 22, 1918.

FRENCH CROIX DE GUERRE WITH PALM

He always displayed the greatest bravery. On October 25, 1918, in the Reine Wood, Verdun, having taken command of the company when the officer was wounded, he continued to lead the attack until all his men were either killed or disabled.

But, after the war, Sergeant Boiko found himself in a world which no longer wanted him. Partly disabled, not enough to receive compensation sufficient to support himself, his wife, and child, but disabled enough to prevent his obtaining employment in these hard years, he could see but one way out. His death would at least give his wife and child the benefit of his small amount of insurance.

The coroner's verdict was suicide.

The Veterans' Administration considers suicide misconduct and refuses pension to the widow of the veteran in such cases.

Mr. Speaker, the service of this Nation, the defense of his adopted country, caused the death of Sergeant Boiko just as surely as though it had occurred on one of the many battlefields where he fought so bravely. If the interpretation of the present law will not allow the payment of pension to his dependents, the law or its interpretation must be changed so that relief will be granted in these cases.

A WEST POINT FOR THE CIVIL SERVANT

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer as an extension of my own remarks an article by me appearing in the Christian Science magazine section on April 8 entitled "A West Point for the Civil Servant":

Feudalism, dueling, witchcraft, human slavery have gone by the board. We thought our way out of them. A few of our superstitions, too! It is inconceivable that we may, and inevitable that we must, think our way out of bigotry, hatred, war, and depression. Even the cynics would concede that the effort to do so is worth while—that there is glory even in trying.

The battle plan is not necessarily one of armies, navies, or air forces; mental and moral cooperation for a better world order is the prime requisite. From principle has flowed the world's mental progress, and from principle it will still proceed.

All over the land the cry has gone up for better service. Training for public service! For the Nation and the world! How noble and comprehensive it sounds! How can we apply it with wisdom and patience to the daily needs of people and nations? What practical suggestions offer to breast the opposition to things new and out of the regular channel?

The doctor, the lawyer, or the engineer is expected to undergo a long period of training before he practices his profession. The plumber, the carpenter, the bricklayer is expected to serve an apprenticeship before he is master of his trade. In this age of specialization the craftsman or the professional man, to be respected in his line, must qualify by training and experience. Before he can regularly engage in his occupation he must undergo intensive preparation. Complexity requires such skilled training, and all concede its desirability and its necessity.

But, through some strange and unaccountable quirk of the public mind, such reasoning does not apply to those engaged in public service. All sorts of obstacles stand in the way of the development of the profession of civil servant. The slow and expensive school of hit-and-miss experience has trained (or not trained) too many public officials. We have used the trial-and-error method—trial while one administration has been in office and error of the individual's being swept out later by the spoils system. For instance, local elections often turn on the supposed convictions of the candidates with regard to, say, war debts, the tariff, the League of Nations, prohibition, and other matters unrelated to the proper selection of the elective or appointive officer. Fitness is often forgotten.

The Army has its West Point and the Navy its Annapolis for the training and education of two of the most highly respected and efficient personnels to be found anywhere in the world. It is economic good sense to have similar and comparable training and education for those who administer our domestic affairs and treat the diplomatic issues abroad.

No system of training is found in our governmental scheme of things for the diplomatic and administrative career service comparable to the specialization for force on land and sea, exemplified by West Point and Annapolis. Incredible! But it is not enough to inquire why, but to point out how the lapse may be rectified.

I have proposed a national academy of public affairs to be located at Washington, the nerve center of the Government of the Nation.

West Point and Annapolis are world-wide in their implications and acceptance. The military leaders on either side of our only Civil War were graduates of West Point. In the World War a West Pointer commanded the Army, and Annapolis produced the admirals. The academy of public affairs, had it been established a few generations ago, conceivably would have produced the diplomatic brains for our part in the World War.

By the terms of the bill introduced by the writer (H. R. 11225) there would be established in Washington, where the Father of his Country visualized a great American university, a national academy of public affairs. Its function would be the education of young Americans in diplomatic and administrative career service—specialized civil servants. The school would be free of charge, coeducational, nonsectarian, and nonpartisan, operated by a board composed of certain Cabinet members; namely, the Secretaries of State, Treasury, Interior, Commerce, Agriculture, and Labor.

The Cabinet members, while politically selected, have almost uniformly in the last half century been appointed by reason of their attainments in various walks of life. Without exception, the Presidents of both political parties have sought to rise above party politics in the selection of their intimate advisers in the Cabinet. So the board of supervisors for the academy would be composed of outstanding American citizens with a broad comprehension of the needs of the Nation. This board would select the faculty, officers, would prescribe the course of study, entrance requirements, and regulate the conduct of the academy. It would also determine whether the school should be a postgraduate institution, and fix the term required for graduation.

The general idea is to create an institution for metaphysical purposes, comparable in plan, form, and intendment to Annapolis and West Point, which are so high in public esteem in America and the world. Young America clamors for the honor and recognition of appointments to these two academies. Young America's parents are proud to have the honor conferred upon their sons. Visualize expectant American youth eager to enter the national academy of public affairs, an institution not of force but of mental defense.

The courses of study would, of course, be developed as the institution grew in public opinion and experience. It would be logical to anticipate that the curriculum would include language, history, and Government. Economic history, sociology, international law, the structure and functions of Government, both domestic and foreign, would naturally have a place. Political history, the study of political parties, statistics, the principles of public administration, and finance, also, social and economic planning, Government accounting, public-welfare administration, diplomatic study of public opinion, and world trends of civilization, modern, medieval, and ancient, would properly come within the range of study prescribed for students at the academy.

The selection of the students by the President, Senators, and Congressmen is provided. It cannot properly be said there is any political taint in that system. It has been in vogue for generations in the selection of candidates to West Point and Annapolis, and has been uniformly successful, producing a high order of scholarship. It guarantees a broad cross-section of the whole population of the States better than any other plan would or could. This tested means of selection has general public approval—it would not seem wise to deviate from such a plan. It has a historic background of national acceptance.

Why spend the public money in this manner? Why are not the endowed colleges and State universities doing or capable of doing the same training contemplated by the academy? There is a quick answer—we have many military academies in America—yet none of them approach the standing of West Point. The R. O. T. C. units in the college can never hope to compete with the Military Academy. West Point and Annapolis represent "the Government." National and world opinion would favorably receive an official institution and its graduates; it has been slow to accept the private or State institution and its product for the particular capacity under discussion. Training for "the Government" should be training by "the Government." The civil servant who would graduate from the academy would receive recognition the world over, because of the very fact that his training came under the direction of the Nation itself. In 150 years of national life, no college, no matter how popular it may have become along other lines, has achieved any considerable or outstanding reputation for the training of the civil servant.

The location of an academy of public affairs in Washington would assure the student ample contact with the realities of government and administration, and prevent overemphasis of the theoretic and academic. It would open up a large and highly important field to able young people. Thousands would dedicate their lives to the ideals which the institution would represent. Changing social conditions require new means of attacking new problems; changing world conditions justify another look in the direction for the public service. From the broad cross section of American life, from which it would be selected, the student body would represent imagination and foresight coupled with native ability, broad training and discipline in judgment, initiative, decision, foresight, and expression which would give the academy and its graduates a high place in thoughtful public opinion in America and in the world.

It should be one more nail in the coffin of the spoils system. The realist as well as the idealist should approve. Each administration has its "brain trusters" whose work is crippled by the political shafts aimed at them. Conceivably, we might by this movement, amongst others, develop an administrative personnel that would obviate the need to draft dollar-a-year men or "brain trusters" when serious emergencies arise.

Our Diplomatic Service is remarkably lacking in career-service personnel. To say the least, graduates of the academy of public affairs would have special training to fit them for the diplomatic service, and from that should grow outstanding examples of trained and poised American diplomacy. It has been said that America never lost a war nor won a conference. The day must come when she must attain success in the field of diplomacy as she has in war and in business.

Graduates of the institution would not necessarily remain in the service of the Federal Government. All graduates of the Naval and Military Academies do not. Many of them would likely enlist in the rank of municipal and State governmental service. Their training would make them desirable. There are foreign fields to which they might attain. We might even elect some of them to Congress or to governorships.

Fifteen hundred scholars run the British Government. The British civil service, impervious to politics, and by law forbidden to participate therein, has attained such a high standing that it is an insult to assert its integrity. Britain has arrived at this stage by slow and painful progress, when we think of the parliamentary corruption of, say, the time of the Pitts. America will, of course, come into her own in that regard, but the outstanding reputation of the academy would bring us to that stage decades sooner than otherwise, because in a few years it would be so entrenched in the hearts and minds of the American people that its atmosphere and its graduates would be accepted not only in America but the world over. It would soon couple the practical with the sentimental.

We are evidently undergoing a renaissance of political thought in America. One achievement of this renaissance might conceivably be the establishment of the national academy of public affairs. The end sought is not the education of human robots but leadership in the inevitable new world order.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SHANNON, indefinitely, to attend funeral of a friend.

To Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. LARRABEE (at the request of Mr. GRISWOLD), indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. ELLENBOGEN, for 3 days, on account of illness in family.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CASEY. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I withhold the motion so that the gentleman may submit a request.

PROCEDURE IN THE APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTERS

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement setting forth the procedure in the selection of postmasters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement of his own relative to the appointment of postmasters. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I objected a moment ago because I asked the gentleman making the request whether or not he set forth the complete procedure followed by the Post Office Department after a list of three eligibles is submitted to the Post Office Department. He now states that the complete procedure is included, and the gentleman has shown me the statement which he desires to insert. It would appear that the procedure following the examination and after the names have been submitted to the Post Office Department is stated in full; therefore, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following facts which applicants and others who are interested in the appointment of postmasters should know:

CLASSES OF POST OFFICES

Post offices are divided into four classes: First, second, third, and fourth.

The fourth class are those offices where the business does not warrant a salary of $1,100 a year and where the postmasters are paid compensation dependent upon the stamp cancelation in the office.

The third class are those offices where the salary paid is $1,100 to $2,300 per year, inclusive.

The second class are those offices where the salary is $2,400 to $3,100 per year, inclusive.

The first class are those offices where the salary is $3,200 per year and above.

All appointments of postmasters of the first, second, and third classes are made by the President and are subject to confirmation of the Senate.

EXAMINATION OF APPLICANTS

The method of selecting these postmasters has been set forth in an Executive order issued by the President, dated July 12, 1933.

Briefly stated, this Executive order provides that post-office appointments shall be made in the following manner: When a vacancy occurs, notice of an examination in published and all applicants must file, on or before a given date, an application with the United States Civil Service Commission. An examination and investigation is then conducted by the United States Civil Service Commission. Thereafter the United States Civil Service Commission certifies to the Post Office Department not more than three eligibles, which means the three applicants who receive the highest ratings in the examination conducted by the Civil Service Commission.

No applicant, however, can be considered eligible unless he has received a passing mark of 70 percent. If only one or two applicants have received a passing mark of 70 percent, then it may be possible for only one or two eligibles to be found in a given examination. The rule for certifying three eligibles applies where three or more have passed the examination, and in such a case the three highest are the eligibles submitted by the United States Civil Service Commission.

These examinations and investigations are conducted impartially without personal or political influence of any character.

In the case of postmasters for the first- and second-class offices, the Civil Service Commission, in addition to the requirement that each applicant file a comprehensive questionnaire, conducts a careful inquiry through the leading patrons of the post office as to the standing, as a representative citizen, of each applicant. This examination consists of obtaining information as to the extent of his acquaintanceship with the community, its problems, and its citizens, his influence and activities in the community, and the opinions of business men as to his character and ability—in a word, to learn the representative character of his citizenship.

In addition the questionnaire inquires carefully into the extent the applicant has had experience of an administrative character. It is the view of the United States Civil Service Commission that postmasters for first- and second-class offices should be not only representative citizens of the community but should have established a reputation for personal integrity, financial stability, and have had actual experience in an administrative capacity. Therefore, inquiries are made as to whether or not and how many persons have been employed by the applicant, what kind of business he has conducted, his experience in managing employees in order to protect the public against infractions of the discipline provided for postal employees, his knowledge of keeping bank accounts and records, and of the preparation of statements—financial, statistical, and so forth. After a survey of all these factors is made, each applicant is given a rating, and the three highest eligibles are certified to the Post Office Department.

As to postmasters of the third class, a somewhat different examination is conducted. In the third class it is assumed that the postmaster must be his own clerk, distributor of the mail, and perform the general duties within the post office. Therefore a written examination is conducted to test the training and clerical ability of each applicant for the purpose of finding out his mental capacity to perform the clerical and supervisory duties of the office. A third-class office may have no employees except the postmaster and a clerk, and therefore the postmaster must keep the records and perform practically all the other duties. It is not necessary to have more than a good general education in order to qualify. If one receives less than a passing mark in this class, it is a determination that he has not the capacity to perform efficiently the duties of the office, although he may or may not have received a majority of favorable reports as to his reputation and standing from those in the community where the post office is located.

FOURTH-CLASS OFFICES

Fourth-class postmasters come within the competitive classified civil service. On October 15, 1912, the President issued an order classifying under the Civil Service Act and rules fourth-class postmasters not theretofore so classified. That order was amended by the President on May 7, 1913 and again on June 3, 1921. The order, as amended, requires that all appointments (except those in Alaska, Canal Zone, Guam, Hawaii, Philippines, Puerto Rico, and Samoa) at fourth-class offices where the compensation is $500 a year or more shall be made from certification after examination by the Civil Service Commission; provided, that in the event there are fewer than three applicants the Commission may, in its discretion, authorize selection in the same manner as provided for offices with annual compensation of less than $500. Where the compensation is less than $500, all appointments shall be made on the recommendation of post-office inspectors after personal investigation, subject to prescribed regulations.

PROCEDURE FOLLOWING EXAMINATION

After the eligibles are certified by the Civil Service Commission to the Post Office Department, that Department is then ready to receive recommendations before making its nomination to the President. Usually recommendations from the Congressmen and Senators of the same political faith as the administration are invited. In turn Senators and Congressmen usually ask for recommendations from local committees, organizations, and citizens.

It should be borne in mind that no amount of personal or political influence is of any avail to a candidate until after the civil-service examination is reported, and even then no amount of personal or political influence will aid any candidate unless he is one of the three highest eligibles. The President has stated through his Executive order that he will appoint one of these three eligibles, someone from the classified civil service or the present postmaster. If the present postmaster is reappointed no further examination is necessary. If a person in the classified service is selected, such person must first be found eligible in a noncompetitive examination given by the Civil Service Commission.

The civil-service examinations give applicants an opportunity to meet the standards and requirements which the President has fixed for the guidance of the Civil Service Commission and as preliminary to receiving an appointment. These civil-service rules and regulations are a part of the Presidential order. While there have been some slight changes in them, in substance they are the same rules and regulations that have guided the appointments of postmasters since the latter part of the Wilson administration. Previous to that time the appointments of postmasters were made without any civil-service examination being required, the appointments being chiefly upon political recommendations.

AGE AND RESIDENCE QUALIFICATIONS

No one over 66 years of age and no one who has not been an actual resident patron of the post office—not necessarily a citizen of the township where several post offices are located—for 1 year before filing application, is eligible to compete in examinations.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A concurrent resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. Con. Res. 35. Concurrent resolution to provide for the printing of the revised edition of the Constitution of the United States of America (annotated); to the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 4387. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Michigan to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Barbara Backstrom.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 3258. An act to amend section 304 of the Revised Statutes, as amended.

S. 3395. An act to authorize the acquisition of the railroad tracks, trestle, and right-of-way of the Gulf Power Co. at the naval air station, Pensacola, Fla.;

S. 3413. An act to give effect to the convention between the United States and certain other countries for the regulation of whaling, concluded at Geneva, September 24, 1931, signed on the part of the United States, March 31, 1932, and for other purposes;

S. 3669. An act providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States;

S. 3720. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States the bequest of the late Henry H. Rogers, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 233. Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition to be held in the State of Ohio during the year 1936, and authorizing the President to invite the Dominion of Canada to participate therein, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, April 23, 1936, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

802. A letter from the chief examiner of the United States Civil Service Commission, transmitting a schedule of useless papers in the files of the Commission in Washington and in certain field offices which are not needed in the transaction of public business and which are of no permanent value or historic interest, with the request that appropriate action be taken to enable the Commission to destroy the papers described; to the Committee on Disposition of Executive Papers.

803. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting for the consideration of Congress supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year 1936, $71,000, and for the fiscal year 1937, $265,000,000, amounting in all to $265,071,000, together with a draft of a proposed provision pertaining to an existing appropriation (H. SENATE

THURSDAY, APRIL 23, 1936

(Legislative day of Monday, Feb. 24, 1936)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, April 22, 1936, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chavez	Holt	O'Mahoney
Ashurst	Clark	Johnson	Overton
Austin	Connally	Keyes	Pittman
Bachman	Coolidge	King	Pope
Bailey	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Barbour	Couzens	Logan	Reynolds
Barkley	Davis	Lonergan	Robinson
Benson	Dickinson	Long	Russell
Bilbo	Dieterich	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Black	Donahey	McGill	Sheppard
Bone	Duffy	McKellar	Shipstead
Borah	Fletcher	McNary	Steiwer
Brown	Frazier	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	George	Metcalf	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Gerry	Minton	Townsend
Burke	Gibson	Moore	Truman
Byrd	Glass	Murphy	Tydings
Byrnes	Hale	Murray	Vandenberg
Capper	Harrison	Neely	Wagner
Carraway	Hatch	Norris	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	Nye	White

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are absent because of illness, and that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

CORRECTION

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I wish to correct an assumption made yesterday and appearing in the RECORD at page 5875. At that point I asked the Senator from New York the following question:

> Is not the Senator from New York aware that the Commissioner testified that approximately 90 percent of those cases contained in the number 2,860 were free from any crime at all; and if that is so, does not the Senator admit that, with the amendment adopted, all of those who have no crime attached to their records would come within the clemency granted by section 3?

I wish to correct that percentage. What I had in vague memory was a statement which appeared in the letter from the Secretary of Labor, Miss Perkins, on page 6, which was considered by the committee, as follows:

> Ninety-eight percent of the 2,862 cases which have been stayed involve cruel family separations, the punishment of innocent American citizens, and the imposition on our States and communities of the burden of caring for a new group of dependents.
> So far as our records and investigations show, these aliens are of good moral character. None have been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude. None are anarchists or Communists. None are persons of the so-called immoral classes, such as procurers or prostitutes. The Kerr bill in the most explicit terms provides that such discretionary power as may be granted shall not apply to any of these groups.

That is what I referred to or intended to refer to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the Pittsburgh, Pa., Central Labor Union, favoring the enactment of legislation creating a court of appeals for civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the International Society of Master Painters and Decorators, at Chicago, Ill., favoring the utilization by the Federal Government of private channels of construction rather than Federal construction agencies, and so forth, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Starke (Fla.) Townsend Club, No. 1, favoring the adoption of the so-called Townsend old-age revolving pension plan, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Victory Lodge, No. 1233, Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees, of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the enactment of the bill (S. 4174) to foster and protect interstate commerce by authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve or disapprove of the consolidation or abandonment of carrier facilities of public service, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Rev. Harry C. Goodman, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 2969) to authorize the deportation of criminals, to guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the noncriminal classes, to provide for legalizing the residence in the United States of certain classes of aliens, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from Hugh R. Carter, of Little Rock, Ark., praying for the making of an adequate appropriation for the Public Works Administration, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WALSH presented letters in the nature of petitions from Local Union No. 2446, of Millbury, and Local Union No. 2260, of East Douglas, both of the United Textile Workers of America, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of House bill 11770, the so-called Ellenbogen national textile bill, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petitions of Edith Daby, of Houghton, and Townsend Club No. 1, of Baldwinville, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the adoption of the so-called Townsend old-age revolving pension plan, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Home City Lodge No. 793, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of Springfield, Mass., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 4174) to foster and protect interstate commerce by authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to approve or disapprove of the consolidation or abandonment of carrier facilities of public service, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

POLLUTION OF WATERS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce a letter which I received from the Commissioner of Public Health of Massachusetts, dealing with Senate bill 3958.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH,
Boston, March 5, 1936.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: If Senate bill 3958 were enacted, the National Resources Board of the Federal Government would have the power to—

(1) "SEC. 6. (a) * * * divide the area of the continental United States into * * * sanitary water districts.

"(b) * * * fix standards of purity for the waters of each such district; shall establish minimum requirements as to the treatment of polluting material before it is discharged into * * * waters * * *; promulgate regulations governing the discharge of any matter or materials into * * * waters."

(2) Establish district boards in each water district, which will have the power—

"SEC. 7. (b) (1) To prevent the pollution of waters within the district by voluntary methods so far as practicable."

(3) "To institute proceedings for the prevention and abatement of water pollution in * * * districts."

In addition, under this act Congress would declare the discharge or deposit of any waste or other substance, whether in a solid, gaseous, or liquid state, into any of the navigable waters of the United States or "into any stream from which the same may float or be washed into any of such navigable waters, in violation of regulations promulgated by the committee, if such waste or other substance is or may be injurious to public health, domestic animals or poultry, fish or shellfish, or other aquatic life, migratory waterfowl, or other wild game, or impairs in any manner the utility of such waters for navigation purposes, to be against the public policy of the United States and to be a public and common nuisance. An action to prevent or abate any such nuisance may be brought in the name of the United States by any United States attorney, and it shall be the duty of such attorneys to bring such an action when requested to do so by the national resources committee or the district board of a sanitary water district. Such action shall be brought as an action in equity and may be brought in any court of the United States having jurisdiction to hear and determine equity cases."

At a meeting of the health officers of the New England States the following resolution was unanimously passed, and it was voted that copies be sent to each member of the New England congressional delegation:

"Resolved, That the Members of the United States Congress from New England be advised that the State health officers of New England are heartily in favor of steps to promote the betterment of New England streams and shore waters by antipollution measures and feel that the adoption by the New England States of interstate compacts to abate water pollution is the most satisfactory method of accomplishing that purpose. It is further the opinion of these State health officers that no extension of Federal control over streams is desirable, that the activities of the Federal Government should be restricted in the field of stream pollution to fact finding and coordination and stimulation of State and interstate programs and to directing the promotion of interstate compacts, with the cooperation of the interested States. The establishment of standards of water purity in particular areas and the enforcement of antipollution measures should be delegated to the States, as provided for in compact agreements."

Very truly yours,

HENRY D. CHADWICK, M. D.,
Commissioner of Public Health.

LOW-COST HOUSING

Mr. WAGNER presented a resolution of the Tampa (Fla.) Municipal Housing Board, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution of Tampa (Fla.) Municipal Housing Board unanimously adopted April 20, 1936, Tampa, Fla.

Whereas it has been proven that bad housing is detrimental to the health of the people in a community and that slums constitute an economic waste; and

Whereas it is an acknowledged fact that good housing for persons of low income cannot be provided through the ordinary channels of private enterprise; and

Whereas city, State, and National Governments have accepted the principles and acknowledged the obligation of governmental responsibility for the housing of persons who cannot be reached through private enterprise; and

Whereas it is necessary for the Government to bear a certain portion of the burden of financing the clearance of slums and the construction of low-rent housing: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Tampa Municipal Housing Board endorses a bill introduced in the Senate by the Honorable ROBERT F. WAGNER, United States Senator from New York, and in the House of Representatives by the Honorable HENRY ELLENBOGEN, Congressman from Pennsylvania, which reads as follows:

"A bill to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the development of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes."

Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER, Senator from New York, and Hon. HENRY ELLENBOGEN, Congressman from Pennsylvania, and the following Senators and Representatives: Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, Senator PARK TRAMMELL, Hon. J. HARDIN PETERSON, Hon. R. A. GREEN, Hon. MILLARD CALDWELL, Hon. MARK WILCOX, Hon. W. J. SEARS.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution of the Council of the City of Pittsburgh, endorsing the Wagner-Ellenbogen Housing Act of 1936. In view of the need for low-cost housing, coordination of government activities for that purpose, and protection from crime and disease which emanate from wretched tenement areas, I regard this resolution as a matter of importance to the Nation generally.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas it is the sense of the Council of the City of Pittsburgh that there is urgent need for the construction of low-cost housing for the working people of our city; and

Whereas there exists in the city of Pittsburgh an acute shortage of houses which are within the means of our working people; and

Whereas this situation has been greatly increased due to the recent flood, which inundated approximately 13,000 houses in the lower sections of the city, of which about 1,000 will never again be fit for occupancy; and

Whereas during the past year and a half more than 1,500 houses have been demolished by our public safety department, due to their dangerous and insanitary condition; and

Whereas the private building interests of our city have been unable to cope with the situation in the construction of houses that may be rented at a reasonable rental within the reach of our working people: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the council endorse the Housing Act of 1936, now under consideration in Congress and known as the Wagner-Ellenbogen bill, which provides for the financing and construction under Government supervision of low-cost housing projects; and be it further

Resolved, That the city clerk be requested to send a copy of this resolution to Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States; Secretary Harold L. Ickes; Senator Wagner, of New York; and to each United States Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Pennsylvania.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

S. J. Res. 233. Joint resolution providing for the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition to be held in the State of Ohio during the year 1936, and authorizing the President to invite the Dominion of Canada to participate therein, and for other purposes.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4521) to provide annuities for certain widows of employees and retired employees of the United States and the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. MOORE and Mr. BARBOUR:

A bill (S. 4522) to lease an unused portion, useless for military purposes, of the Fort Hancock Military Reservation to the State of New Jersey for a public aquatic park and pleasure ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BACHMAN:

A bill (S. 4523) for the relief of Cecil E. Phipps; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GIBSON (by request):

A bill (S. 4524) to provide a permanent government for the Virgin Islands of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. NYE:

A bill (S. 4525) for the relief of Mrs. John Olson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. O'MAHONEY:

A bill (S. 4526) to amend section 5, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes", approved July 10, 1890; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

(Mr. McADOO introduced Senate bill 4527, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. TYDINGS introduced Senate bills Nos. 4528 and 4529, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, and appear under a separate heading.)

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 4530) to amend the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926 by adding a new section to provide that section 259 of the Judicial Code providing for traveling expenses of circuit justices, circuit and district judges actually incurred, and maintenance expenses in an amount not to exceed $10 per day, shall not be construed to be modified or repealed in any respect by any section of the Subsistence Expense Act of 1936; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PROPOSED INDEPENDENCE OF PUERTO RICO

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall send to the desk shortly a bill proposing to give the people of Puerto Rico the option of becoming independent as a result of a national referendum in the island on the question whether they would rather continue under the American flag or have independence. The bill will be introduced with the support of the administration. The reasons for introducing it are many, and time does not now permit a long review of them.

One reason why the option is proposed to be given to the people of Puerto Rico is that it is in line with present-day American policy, pan-American policy, the repeal of the Platt amendment, Filipino independence, and a wider measure of cooperation and democracy to the people who are associated with us and those who are under our flag as well.

There are other reasons, however, which impel the introduction of the measure at this time. First of all, the chief of police was recently assassinated in Puerto Rico. The conduct of trials in Puerto Rico has been the subject of some criticism not only outside of the island but in the island as well.

Then the election machinery in the island is not complimentary to the island at all, because the recent registration of voters in Puerto Rico shows that out of 852,832 persons over 21 years of age in the island, 852,904 of them are registered voters. In other words, there are about 100 more people registered in Puerto Rico and qualified to vote than there are people of both sexes over 21 years of age in the island.

It has always been the policy of this Government not to interfere in the local and internal affairs of any of the people who happen to be under our flag, but certainly so flagrant a case as this, which apparently is receiving no remedy in that island, makes us question the worth of American institutions as being adapted to the people of Puerto Rico and to the conditions under which they live.

I want to read a few of the election registration returns in a little detail. In Aguadilla there are 18,291 persons registered. There are in the Province only 15,583 over 21 years of age. In other words, 117 percent of the population is registered for voting purposes.

In Anasco there are 8,871 registered out of a population of 8,044, or 101 percent.

In Arecibo there are 30,939 registered out of a population of 31,716.

In Arroyo there are 4,878 registered out of a population of 4,864, just 100 percent.

In Bayamon there are 17,000 registered and only 15,000 in the province, 110 percent.

In Carolina there are 10,000 registered out of a population of 9,400, or 106 percent.

In Catano there are 5,339 registered out of a population of 5,173, or 103 percent.

I might read on, but let me merely call attention to one or two very flagrant examples. In Coamo there are 14,000 registered out of a population of 9,975, a registration of 144 percent of the population. I shall place the entire record of registration and population of Puerto Rico in the RECORD.

The elections in Puerto Rico are disgraceful, corrupt, and fraudulent. The registration is the most flagrant example of open fraud that has ever come to my attention, since it is scattered more or less over the island in rural sections and in cities and is not confined to any one locality.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does the registration bear any relation at all to the people who live in the districts?

Mr. TYDINGS. Apparently there are either some people in the district registering more than once and under different names, or people who do not live in the district are brought in simply for registration and voting purposes.

Each of the three political parties in Puerto Rico blames this condition on the others. One is charged with having padded the election polls, and then it says it was not at fault, but the other two parties are the culprits in the case. The fact remains, however, that Puerto Rico, which has its own legislature, has not set about investigating the fraud or taken any substantial step to correct it. It is perfectly apparent that the election to be held this year is going to reek with fraud and will not be worthy of the name of an election, because in province after province, in division after division, more people who are over 21 years of age are registered than actually live in the precinct or division or district.

Facts such as those to which I have just called the attention of the Senate must lead us strongly to believe that the American system is not functioning adequately in Puerto Rico. There is an independent party in Puerto Rico which favors independence under certain conditions. What the bill would do would be to give the people of Puerto Rico a chance to say whether they want independence or whether they want to continue under the American flag.

Perhaps this measure would not be thought of now if, in addition to the frauds apparent in election registration, the American chief of police had not been shortly since assassinated. So far as I can learn, it is very difficult to convict anybody in Puerto Rico before a jury on the charge of murder. The courts in many instances have not lived up to the name of "court" insofar as the jury return is concerned. There have been several murder cases there in which convictions have not been obtained, and as to which a great mass of the people of Puerto Rico think there has been a miscarriage of justice.

America has been very generous to these islands—the Philippines, Puerto Rico, and some other islands. We acquired them as a result of our War with Spain. We have given to the Filipinos the right to say whether they shall continue under the American flag or be independent, and they have voted to become independent. It is the purpose of the proposed legislation which I am now introducing to confer the same right upon the people of Puerto Rico.

Since we have had the islands, and particularly in recent years, many, many million dollars have been poured into Puerto Rico from the Federal Treasury in all sorts of social campaigns, housing campaigns, W. P. A. and P. W. A. programs; and it seems as if the more we do the worse conditions become in the island. Although this is Federal money, there is a continual quarrel about how the Federal Government shall spend, not the money of the people of Puerto Rico but the money of the people of the United States of America.

Mr. President, this bill is not perfect. Undoubtedly it will have to be amended in many respects. It does, however, furnish the outline and the conditions of an independence act, if the people of Puerto Rico desire it. More safeguards will have to be thrown around the election to be held. Obviously, we do not wish to have a military election, where the marines supervise the voting. On the other hand, we must not have a Puerto Rican election, reeking as it does with fraud and corruption, as is demonstrated by the present registration lists of the island in comparison to the population there. So perhaps some system will have to be worked out whereby, under some sort of Federal supervision, an honest election can be held if the people of Puerto Rico themselves are not in a position to purge the legislative and registration lists.

Accompanying the bill for independence, which the people of Puerto Rico may adopt or reject, is another bill which has for its purpose the accomplishment of fair elections in the island. Many of the finest people in Puerto Rico, both rich and poor, are anxious for fair elections; but the parties down there have not seemed able, under the present Federal act, to safeguard the elections so that they shall be honest, and really reflect the will of the people. Therefore, accompanying the proposed independence bill, which has the support of the administration, is a bill for fair and honest elections in Puerto Rico. It is hoped that at the present session of Congress time may be found for consideration of each of these measures by the committee, and such action upon them by the Congress as may be desired and appropriate when they are reported.

I ask leave, out of order, to introduce the two measures to which I have referred, and to have printed in connection with my remarks a letter from the Director of the Division of Territories and Island Possessions and a table showing the municipalities, the total of registered voters, the inhabitants over 21 years of age, and the percentage of registered voters. This table shows that in many of the municipalities many thousands of persons are registered more than the number of persons actually living in them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bills will be received and appropriately referred, and the letter and table referred to by the Senator from Maryland will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 4528) to regulate the conduct of elections in Puerto Rico; and

The bill (S. 4529) to provide for a referendum in Puerto Rico on the question of independence, to provide for carrying it into effect, and for other purposes, were read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

The letter and table presented by Mr. TYDINGS are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
DIVISION OF TERRITORIES AND ISLAND POSSESSIONS,
Washington, March 9, 1936.

Hon. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: The result of the recent registration of voters in Puerto Rico for the election of November 1936 reveals a very large proportion of fraudulent voters on the lists. Unless this is corrected, it is feared that the election campaign will develop to an increasing accompaniment of violence and bloodshed. The man selected for chief of police by the Governor after the Riggs assassination—Col. Luis Raul Esteves, West Point graduate and colonel of the Puerto Rican National Guard—stated as a sine qua non condition for successful police administration, the enactment of fair-election legislation.

The leaders of all the political parties on the island admit the existence of the fraud and accuse each other of being responsible for it. Leaders of all parties are on record urging the desirability of correcting the fraud.

The legislative situation in Puerto Rico is such, however, that it is not to be hoped that the legislature itself will correct the situation. The leaders of the different parties will no doubt make gestures indicating their desire to correct the situation, but at the same time will be jockeying for special advantage. The desirability of a clean and trustworthy election in Puerto Rico is not open to question. Under present conditions it is believed that only Congress can provide adequate guarantees of a clean and trustworthy election.

Enclosed is a list comparing the number of registered voters in large towns with the number of persons over 21, according to the 1930 census corrected as of 1935. (All citizens over 21 years of age have the right to vote in Puerto Rico.) The correction has been made by including all persons who were from 15 years to 19 years old in 1930. Mortality, however, has not been discounted, so the figures are extremely conservative.

From this enclosed tabulation, it appears that in 28 out of the 80 districts which compose the island, there are more registered voters than there are persons over 21. In Aguadilla, for instance, the percentage of registered voters to persons over 21 is 117 percent; in Bayamon 110 percent; in Coamo 144 percent; in Culebra 124 percent; in the second Ponce district 119 percent; in Toa Alta 127 percent; and so forth. In the city of San Juan, comprising almost one-tenth of the population, the voting lists contain 73,000 names, while persons over 21 (without discounting mortality since 1930) number 75,000.

For the whole island the census shows that there are 852,832 persons over 21 and 852,904 voters on the lists, without subtracting noncitizens and mortality.

Senator Rafael Martinez Nadal, president of the Republican Party, has this to say in El Mundo of February 13, 1936:

"We are opposed to fraud (election fraud), and we fight it for two reasons: First, as a matter of principle; and, second, because our majority is so great that we do not need to appeal to other resources than our legitimate strength."

Senator Bolivar Pagan, acting president of the Socialist Party, and coleader of the coalition with Senator Martinez Nadal, has this to say in El Pais of February 6, 1936:

"There is no foundation in the charge that the election law is the cause of the scandalous fraud that, in truth, has taken place in the registrations that have just ended."

Senator Antonio R. Barcelo, president of the Liberal Party, has publicly complained of the fraud. Many minor leaders of all the above-mentioned parties have published statements recognizing the obvious fraud with which the election lists are vitiated and condemning it.

In seeking to correct this evil, it is thought that it would be desirable to apply a double check: First, by providing an honest list of voters; second, by providing the method of carrying out the actual election which shall eliminate all possibility of repeating and all impersonation of voters by nonvoters. The Federal Government has just finished taking the census of Puerto Rico. This census was begun last October in order to obtain reliable data on which to base economic policy. It has been taken under the supervision of the Federal Bureau of the Census and under the direct management of Mr. Starke M. Grogan, sent to Puerto Rico for this purpose. At no time has the idea of the census been connected in anyone's mind with the election; therefore it is the most reliable enumeration of the population that we have. It is suggested that this census be made the basis for the right to vote this year. The field work was completed a week ago, and all the data are now in the San Juan office of the census. Tabulation work is now beginning.

In order to guarantee the election process itself, it has been suggested by the commissioner of labor, Prudencio Rivera Martinez (who is also a prominent leader of the coalition), that all voters be gathered in the places where they are to vote before the voting begins; that at a given hour no more persons be allowed to enter said places; and that the voting then proceed in the usual manner by secret ballot. This will eliminate all possibilities of repeating, and it would practically eliminate all possibilities of nonvoters impersonating voters. This suggestion has been embodied in the enclosed proposed draft of a bill.

Mr. Rivera Martinez made public the following statement in El Mundo of February 14:

"I believe that it is a disgrace for the fraudulent vote to destroy the purposes and the intentions of the legal vote at the ballot box. I firmly believe in any effective measure to prevent and punish this fraud. Among the measures that have been proposed, I do not believe in that which proposes long lines of voters, but I do believe in the measure disposing the creation of as many polling places as may be necessary, to which the voters can come until a stated hour, each one being given a number according to priority of arrival. Then the voting can begin as per the order of arrival. I think that the best measure would be to destroy all election lists and make a new registration, but perhaps there would be insufficient time to do this. I do not see that there would be any difficulty in finding or preparing the number of places sufficient for 100 to 150 voters, men and women, concentrated in the form I have suggested."

Many responsible citizens of Puerto Rico have for a long time believed that certain minimum election guaranties should have been embodied in the organic act to end continuous partisan tampering with election legislation designed to give undue advantage to the party which at the moment happens to be in majority. Therefore the action now contemplated will not only be of great importance in averting violence and disorder this year but also in providing certain permanent minimum guaranties for all future elections.

Sincerely yours,

ERNEST GRUENING, Director.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE INAUGURATION OF THE PRESIDENT-ELECT

Mr. NEELY submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 38), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee consisting of three Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, is authorized to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States on the 20th day of January next.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL AID HIGHWAY ACT

Mr. GEORGE and Mr. RUSSELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them jointly to the bill (H. R. 11687) to amend the Federal Aid Highway Act, approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO BUILDING-PURCHASE BILL

Mr. HATCH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2103) to authorize the purchase of existing buildings for governmental use, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN CRIMINALS—AMENDMENT

Mr. AUSTIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4011) to further reduce immigration, to authorize the exclusion of any alien whose entry into the United States is inimical to the public interest, to prohibit the separation of families through the entry of aliens leaving dependents abroad, and to provide for the prompt deportation of habitual criminals and all other undesirable aliens, and to provide for the registration of all aliens now in the United States or who shall hereafter be admitted, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

IMMIGRATION POLICY—ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES J. DAVIS IN 1923

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address on the subject of an immigration policy for the United States delivered October 15, 1923, by Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS, then Secretary of Labor, before the American Legion convention at San Francisco, Calif.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We are faced in America with the necessity of determining upon an immigration policy. At present our immigration from all countries except those whose natives are barred from our shores, and except those in the Western Hemisphere is controlled under the 3-percent quota law. This law will expire on the last day of next June, and unless we write a new immigration law before that time, on July 1, 1924, we will have immigration without restriction.

The quota law is purely a numerical restriction, which limits the number of immigrants that may come to the United States in any 1 year from any nation to 3 percent of the number of aliens of that nationality in the United States in 1910. You of the American Legion in the consideration of this matter have proposed an absolute bar on all immigration over a period of 5 years. I am of the opinion that restriction should be placed not only as a matter of quantity, but also, and primarily as a matter of quality. I favor a selective system of immigration; and if we cannot have selected immigration, I would have none. I would admit to America only the alien who is able and willing to accept American customs, American ideals, American institutions, and who can contribute something to the advancement of our civilization. I would absolutely bar the alien who under our laws cannot win to citizenship, or who by mental, moral, or physical defect would lower the standards of America. I would take this stand now, and would adhere to it forever, no matter what numerical limitation might at any time be placed upon the immigrants to be accepted.

I favor an immigration program based on these points:

First. The examination of every prospective immigrant before he leaves his native land. By this means we would make sure that the applicant was eligible for admission to the United States before he started on a 3,000-mile ocean voyage. Thus we would end the sorrow and distress incident to the rejection of inadmissible aliens at our immigration stations. This matter could be attended to by the governments abroad, who would thus protect their departing nationals from embarrassment and distress. If these governments would issue passports only to their nationals who come within our laws, we would end the constant criticism of our immigration administration.

Second. The granting of power to United States consuls abroad to refuse to visa the passports of prospective immigrants when it is clear to the consuls that the individual is ineligible for admission.

Third. I would enroll every alien upon his arrival here, and would provide for an annual census of all aliens over a period of 5 years, during which period the alien would be subject to deportation if he was found to be in America illegally or for an unlawful purpose.

This program is simple, clear, and enforceable. It would provide better aliens for America and would make for a better America for both aliens and native born. Under this plan I would give preference to certain classes. For, so long as the youth of America declines to work with its hands and insists upon white-collar jobs, we must have aliens to perform our common labor. Last year we accepted some 70,000 Mexicans—for there is no quota limitation on immigration from countries of the Western Hemisphere. Would we not be better off with 70,000 sturdy, upstanding men from western Europe?

I am for an immigration that can be assimilated into our American national life. First, I would provide for the admission of the families of aliens already in the United States. Second, I would admit skilled labor, where labor of a like character cannot be found unemployed in the United States. Finally, I would admit the men who will come here to do our common labor. But I would subject every immigrant to the strict mental, moral, and physical tests which must be maintained if we are to keep up our American standard of health, intelligence, and living.

In order to appreciate the magnitude of the problem of the alien in America, both as it affects the alien and as it affects America, let us look at the results of our last census. We have a total white population of 94,820,915, of which number 58,421,957 are of native-born parentage. Of the remainder, 15,694,539 are of foreign-born parentage; that is, both parents were born abroad; 6,991,665 are of mixed parentage; that is, one parent was born abroad, and 13,712,754 are foreign born. This means that we have 36,298,598 individuals in the United States who in the present or the last generation are or have been linked with a foreign allegiance. The figures are even more striking when we consider our urban or city population. There are 24,556,729 native-born of native parents in our cities. But there are 26,063,355 of foreign birth or foreign stock in these centers, and of these 10,356,983 are foreign born.

Of our nearly 14,000,000 foreign born, less than half are naturalized American citizens. Our records indicate that the average alien is in this country 10 years before he assumes the duties and responsibilities of citizenship. Clearly there is something wrong with a system which permits this vast undigested mass of alien population to continue undigested for year after year.

During the early days of our history we asked no questions of arriving aliens. We did not even count the number who came. We extended the hand of welcome to everyone who arrived, regardless of who or what he might be or why he came. Beginning with 1820 we counted the arrivals, but that was about all we did. Practically all of our immigration legislation has been created since 1880. From that time until the present a great many types and classes of aliens have been added to the excluded classes. The first class to be excluded was the insane. Thereafter, rapidly the list was increased until the beginning of the present century, since which time we exclude, as a matter of law, every diseased person, every imbecile, idiot, feeble-minded person, insane person, criminals, and all those likely to become public charges. We have sought to protect our social and political organization by refusing admission to those who would lower our mental, moral, or physical level. How far we have succeeded was shown in a survey recently completed for the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House of Representatives which covered our jails, almshouses, insane asylums, and other public institutions. The scientists who made the survey investigated State institutions housing the feeble-minded, the insane, the criminals, the epileptics, the inebriate, the chronically diseased, the blind, the deaf, the deformed, the crippled, and the dependent. He found that while the foreign-born make up 14.70 percent of the Nation's population, they furnish 20.63 percent of the population of these institutions housing our social inadequates. He estimated that 44.09 percent of the inmates of these institutions were either foreign-born or of foreign-born parentage.

I have been told that 47 percent of the inmates of New York State institutions for the care of public dependents are either foreign born or of foreign-born parentage.

This House committee has before it figures showing the mental level of some of the aliens who have been coming to us during the last generation. The intelligence tests applied to our soldiers during the World War have been worked out to index the intelligence rating of our whole population, including our foreign born. According to this calculation, which divided all those examined into seven classes or standards of mental ability, America's foreign-born population of 13,920,692 was indicated in the following classifications:

	Number	Percent
Very superior	153,128	1.1
Superior	403,700	2.9
High average	1,016,211	7.3
Average	3,702,904	26.6
Low average	2,296,914	16.5
Inferior	4,287,573	30.3
Very inferior	2,060,262	14.8

Thus, according to these figures, we have in America today 6,347,835 aliens, nearly one-half of our total foreign-born population, who are classified as of inferior or very inferior in intelligence. In other words, if we had applied these intelligence tests to our immigrants for the last generation and had admitted only those making the five higher ratings, we would have barred 45.6 percent of all the aliens who have come to us. And these people have come despite our vigorous efforts to bar those plainly deficient in mental, physical, or moral health.

One of the sources of this flood of social inadequates which fill our jails and penitentiaries, our insane asylums, and our homes for the feeble-minded is the underground network of devious paths by which aliens are smuggled into this country. We have found them coming by every means of transportation and in every guise. Our thousands of miles of land borders and our vast expanse of coast line with its myriad harbors offer wealth of opportunity for the hardy outlaw who, tempted by the vast profit in the traffic, engages to pour the poison of illicit immigration into the life stream of American civilization.

The actual number of surreptitious entries is difficult to determine. It has been conservatively estimated that 100 individuals a day are coming into the United States in violation of the law. Some well-informed authorities are of the opinion that at times it rises as high as 1,000 a day.

Every underground and overhead channel into America is crowded with the stream of illicit immigrants. We find thousands of them waiting in Cuba for an opportunity to take to the fast motorboats of the smugglers for a quick trip to the shores of Florida. We find them sneaking over unguarded points on the Mexican border by the hundred and losing themselves in the great Southwest. We find them coming by airplane and by automobile, by railroad and by steamship, by motorboat and by schooner. We find them running side by side with the illicit traffic in rum and with the vile commerce in narcotic drugs. There is no means of coming into the United States that is not utilized in this illegal traffic.

One of the chief means of smuggling immigrants today is devised as an evasion of the seaman's law, enacted some time ago to regulate the treatment of sailors in American vessels. Under this law a foreign sailor entering an American port and leaving his vessel may remain in the United States 60 days while he seeks a berth in an out-bound ship. It is literally true that there are thousands of so-called sailors in the United States today working at everything in the world and at nothing at all. They simply leave and desert their ships, wander away from the seacoast, and are lost sight of. We found hundreds of them not so long ago at work in a New Jersey industrial plant. Some months ago we happened upon a Portuguese schooner off the New England coast with a crew of 20 or more aboard. Seven men were her regular complement. Among the crew we found one woman. Upon investigation it developed that the whole outfit had shipped as sailors in order to get into the United States. The captain had been paid to let the crew work its way. That smugglers' fee of $500 or more a head is the motive power behind the whole illicit traffic.

The immigration authorities estimate that there are today in the city of New York more than 5,000 Chinese who are in this country illegally. We are almost without the means of rounding them up. We did gather together more than 150 of them in a series of raids within the last week or two. These aliens are liable to deportation, but it costs $200 a head to provide passage for them back to China. For 5,000 Chinese that would mean an expenditure of a million dollars.

For every smuggler that the officials intercept, dozens escape, and land their illicit cargoes. It is plain to me that it would take a patrol equal to a man to every yard of our thousands of miles of border and seacoast to put an end to the smuggling of aliens. If we put all the Army and all the Navy, and every police force in the country at the task, I hardly believe we would stop the trade. But there is a way to stop it, and that is to make it utterly useless for an alien to enter the United States illegally. If the alien knew that within a short time after his arrival, the authorities would discover him and deport him, he would not come surreptitiously. There is a practical, feasible, simple plan to accomplish this.

For I say to you that no good American comes to this country surreptitiously. We get no real upstanding American citizen out of the dregs of humanity that crowds itself into smugglers' holds, fit company for illicit rum and outlawed drugs. What kind of an American can be made out of the individual whose first experience of America comes through defiance of her laws and evasion of her authority? He comes through crime and he brings crime with him. He is an outlaw from the moment he lands on American soil. He has learned contempt for law and order, for all that stands for America.

Every undesirable alien who finds his way into the United States plays his part to prejudice all Americans against all aliens. The foreigner of low mental standard who comes to us automatically stirs the apprehension of the American people against every foreigner. He damages the standing of every good foreign-born resident or citizen who is seeking to make his way in this country. For this reason every upstanding alien, every citizen of foreign birth, should be alert to put our immigration on the highest possible plane. We should support every measure that will make for better immigrants. It is clear to me that we must Americanize the alien before the alien alienizes America.

To this end I propose that the Federal Government enroll every alien upon his arrival in this country and issue to him an identification card which will establish his right to be here. Over a period of years I would provide for an annual census of these aliens in order that we might offer to those legally here every opportunity to learn what America means, what its traditions are, and what life in America has to offer them. I would see that they were given every chance to become good American citizens, and if they proved worthy I would accept them through a simplified naturalization plan. If they proved unworthy I would send them whence they came.

It is plain to me that under this system we would have no difficulty in weeding out the illicit immigrant, the smuggled oriental, and the apostle of destruction who has found his devious way to America and to preach the downfall of American institutions, the destruction of all law and order. The alien unable to produce his identification card would be given a hearing, and if after a fair and impartial investigation he was unable to establish his right to be here, he could be summarily and promptly deported.

This enrollment plan is no radically new departure in our American scheme of things. Every American citizen under the law must register himself before he can exercise the right of suffrage under our laws. There has been some objection to the enrollment of the alien on the ground that it might develop into some sort of an espionage system. I cannot find any basis for this thought. The registration lists of our citizenship have never been used for such a purpose, and there is no more reason to believe that the enrollment of the alien would subject him to any surveillance that has not been imposed upon the citizen through our election registration plan. No man whose life is open and aboveboard could object to enrolling himself as a prospective good citizen any more than any American today objects to enrolling himself as a voter.

I would make the enrollment plan a means of helping the good alien and of eliminating the bad alien. I believe that it would operate to weld all of the foreign-born into a great organization similar to our fraternities, devoted to helping each other toward getting the best that they have to give. The alien enrollment card would be an evidence of good character, just as the card of any of our great fraternal orders is an evidence of membership. I would enlist in the work of helping these aliens to become better, stronger Americans, the efforts of every civic organization, every church organization, every great fraternal order, and every patriotic society. I would call for the aid of every honest American, in this highest of all duties, the making of better Americans for a bigger, better America.

You men have fought for America. What kind of an America did you fight for? What kind of an America have all those heroes fought for since the days when the fathers established in this new land a government based upon the principles of liberty and equality? The time has come to answer this question, for we are facing the necessity of determining just what America is and what America shall be.

Not long ago a distinguished member of a certain eastern European racial group in America was quoted as saying:

"This country is not a 'nation'; it is a gathering together of peoples from every corner of the earth. No one racial group, no matter how early settled in this country, can furnish more than one note in this vast symphony of nations."

This means only one thing. It means that this new American, and those whose minds run with his, believe that there is no real America. It means, if this idea is to prevail, that the history of this country, its traditions, its ideals will be forgotten. It means that this great country, stretching from sea to sea, is to be a mere jumble of racial groups, each preserving its own racial customs and its own racial language, without common language or ideals. It means that the whole fabric of social, economic, and political life, built up through the toil and suffering of the last 150 years on this continent, is to be shattered. It means that the principles of union and liberty for which millions have laid down their lives, from Bunker Hill to the Argonne, those principles for which you and your fellows took up arms and crossed 3,000 miles of sea, shall perish in a welter of discord like unto that which fell upon Babel.

That is not the America that I know. I trust it is not the America that my children shall know. It is not the America that my people came across the ocean to seek. My father came here to become an American, and he became one. When, as a lad of 8, I followed my mother as with her six children she came forth from the shadows of the old Castle Garden immigration station, I came to a new life. She did not bring her children here to preserve the language and customs and ideals of the land she had left behind. She visioned her sons growing up part and parcel of the great new civilization to which she had brought them. On the threshold of this country all that there was about that family of the Old World fell away, and it faced the future as a family of Americans, Americans in heart and Americans in soul. When those who come to us from abroad fail to consecrate themselves wholly and entirely to America, to American life, American institutions, and American ideals, then we will have lost the thing which has made America great.

We can have no divided allegiance, no double loyalty. An American must be for America against all the world.

BORAH VERSUS ROOSEVELT—ARTICLE BY WALTER LIPPMANN

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Walter Lippmann, published in the New York Herald Tribune of Saturday, April 18, 1936, entitled "Borah Versus Roosevelt."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of Apr. 18, 1936]

BORAH VERSUS ROOSEVELT

By Walter Lippmann

In interpreting the significance of the Illinois primary election, it is necessary to remember that over 1,000,000 voters were not heard from at all. For there appear to have been about 2,130,000 votes cast, whereas in 1932 the two major parties polled about 3,300,000 votes. Now on the face of the returns, the Democrats have well over 60 percent of the vote, a percentage which would be described as a landslide. In 1932 they had only 57 percent. Thus they could be defeated only if two-thirds of the stay-at-home vote on Tuesday goes over to the Republicans in November and if Senator BORAH'S followers stay with the Republican candidate.

Yet when all possible allowances have been made for the stay-at-home voters, the verdict rendered in Illinois is still overwhelmingly decisive on one point. It is that conservative Republicanism is at a hopeless discount in Illinois. It was able to muster only about 1 vote out of 5 cast. It did not enlist the support of more than 20 percent of the electorate. Colonel Knox is by no means a reactionary, but he took his text, so to speak, from the Liberty League. Roosevelt alone outnumbered him better than 3 to 1. Roosevelt and BORAH combined outnumbered him perhaps 5 to 1.

This is a fairly conclusive evidence that Senator BORAH has been right in saying that the Republican Party would be disastrously defeated under the leadership of the Old Guard.

Insofar as Illinois is a fair sample of sentiment in the Mississippi Valley, the primary shows that the alternative to the New Deal is not Old Guard republicanism but a different kind of progressivism. Mr. BORAH, or a candidate who represented his general point of view, might defeat Mr. Roosevelt. A candidate who represented the general point of view of the Liberty League could, on the present showing, get nowhere at all.

Now there are many Republicans, especially in the East, who think there is no real difference between BORAH and Roosevelt. But there is a difference, it seems to me, and a very deep one. The two men are alike in their general feeling that large corporate wealth has exercised too much power. But they are radically different in their general feeling as to how to deal with the problem.

Senator BORAH is, in the main, apart from certain aberrations such as prohibition and the tariff, a lineal descendant from the earliest American liberals, an individualist who opposes all concentration of power, political or economic, who is against private privilege and private monopoly, against political bureaucracy and centralized government. It is the tradition of Jefferson and Lincoln, of Bryan and Wilson. It is grass-roots progressivism. Mr. BORAH believes in the Bill of Rights. He believes in the principle of the Sherman Act. He believes in widely distributed private property. He believes in competition. He believes in a government of limited powers, above all in the distinctively American theory that the Government itself is under the law and must be held to the law.

This general philosophy has always been, and is still today, the true alternative to a socialist order and an authoritarian state. In expounding that philosophy Mr. BORAH is frequently vague. But he holds it instinctively. It is the habit of his mind; and where the issue is clearly drawn he will almost always be found fighting in this historic tradition of American liberalism.

Mr. Roosevelt, on the other hand, has no such instinctive appreciation of American liberalism in this, its oldest and most authentic, sense. He is disposed to think that these old liberal principles no longer fit the modern world, that they belong to a horse-and-buggy age, and that the future is to bring a very highly organized society controlled by a very powerful government. Thus he is not much concerned about the old safeguards of liberty. What he is really concerned about is sufficient power to provide security and the good things of life for everybody.

Though it may horrify him to hear it said, he approaches the social problem in the manner of what in England would be called a Tory philanthropist, of one whose sympathy for the people expresses itself in a desire to help them rather than in a desire to let them help themselves. Thus he has tried to present the farmers with monopolistic privileges equal to those enjoyed by certain industrialists, to present wage earners with Government-created labor unions.

No one can doubt for a moment the sincerity of his passion to have privileges more widely shared. But his method of reform is generally, for, of course, he has not been consistent, to create new privileges to balance old ones; not to liquidate old privileges in order to provide more equal opportunity. His speech at Baltimore the other day shows that, though the N. R. A. is dead, its ghost still possesses him; and the essence of N. R. A. was to give everyone his little monopoly and then to have an all-powerful Government to keep all the monopolists in order.

The real issue of the near future lies between the kind of liberal individualism which Mr. BORAH represents and the kind of regulated monopoly which Mr. Roosevelt seems to believe in. The kind of thing represented by the Old Guard, in general, unregulated private monopoly, could become popular again only if Mr. Roosevelt's plans ended in another economic crisis and produced an unthinking but violent reaction.

The issue symbolized by BORAH and Roosevelt runs across all the existing party lines. Thus Senator BORAH is in his ultimate political faith far closer to Secretary Hull, to Senator GLASS, than he is, let us say, to a Republican progressive like Senator LA FOLLETTE or to a Democratic progressive like Senator WAGNER. He moves away from rather than toward a collectivist order and an increasingly powerful Government.

The issue he has raised within the Republican Party is no less an issue in the Democratic Party, and there are an untold number of Democrats, like Vice President Garner, who, contemplating Mr. Roosevelt's social philosophy, feel they are in a similar fix. The issue is whether the idealism of the country is to be realized through a removal of privileges in order to enhance the liberty of the individual or through the fostering of great organizations in which the individual is submerged. That is why those who really wish to oppose the New Deal will have to look for their inspiration in the general direction indicated by Senator BORAH.

AS LINCOLN SAID AT GETTYSBURG—ADDRESS BY EMANUEL HERTZ

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD portions of an exceedingly interesting address entitled "As Lincoln Said at Gettysburg", delivered by Emanuel Hertz, before the Covenant Club of Illinois on February 13, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In a recent film one of the actors in the course of a conversation made the significant statement: "As Lincoln said at Gettysburg." When asked what it was that Lincoln said at Gettysburg, he, in turn, asked: "What did Lincoln say at Gettysburg?" The person spoken to turned to the nearest man and asked the same question, until everyone in the room admitted his ignorance as to what Lincoln did say at Gettysburg. The English valet, who had memorized the address soon after he read it, then told what Lincoln said at Gettysburg in so impressive a manner that it disclosed his veneration for the short address, not unlike that of the editor of the London Standard in 1863—long before the full significance of the address dawned upon Lincoln's own countrymen. Lincoln himself was in doubt as to whether the address would "scour" as he said in an aside to Lamon. There was no applause—you would as soon think of applauding the recital of a psalm or prayer. But the English editor detected the eternal ring in the address the moment he read it. Again, in 1913—50 years later—Curzon, in a presidential address before the Oxford Union, compared it with the funeral oration of Pericles, the masterpiece of the ancient world. Referring to the Gettysburg address and to the second inaugural Curzon says: "They are among the glories and treasures of mankind."

We might ask the same question about a great many other important utterances of Lincoln and fare no better. There never was more general ignorance about the utterances of any other great American than there is about his. And yet he wrought many permanent changes in many important departments of our country and its policies; changes which not only made us great but which opened new avenues for our growth His mental stature enabled him to survey and detect the needs of his country in almost every phase of its retarded development, brought on by the attention which for three decades was almost exclusively given to the slave power and its inevitable companion, secession; all else was crowded out of the line of visibility. Lincoln saw the country as a whole. He had studied its needs during a lifetime of preparation, and he knew the problems of the people. "The dogmas of the quiet past", said he, "are inadequate to the stormy present; the occasion is piled high with difficulty, and we must rise with the occasion. As our case is new, so we must think anew and act anew."

• • • • • • •

What did Lincoln say on March 4, 1861?

Coming to the end of his first inaugural, Lincoln concluded: "In your hands, my fellow countrymen, and not in mine is the momentous issue of civil war. The Government will not assail you. You can have no conflict without being yourselves the aggressors. You have no oath registered in heaven to destroy the Government, while I shall have the most solemn one to preserve, protect, and defend it." At this point he paused, for he had finished the argument. But Seward thought that there should be an imaginative appeal added to the address. Lincoln passed the address into the hands of Seward and asked him for a suggestion, and this is what Seward wrote: "I close. We are not, we must not be, aliens or enemies, but fellow countrymen and brethren. Although passion has strained our bonds of affection too hardly, they must not—I am sure they will not—be broken. The mystic chords which, proceeding from so many battlefields and so many patriot graves, pass through all the hearts and all hearths in this broad continent of ours will yet again harmonize in their ancient music when breathed upon by the guardian angel of the Nation." And this is what the paragraph became after it had passed the purifying fires of Lincoln's mind as he transformed it into his preoration: "I am loth to close. We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, we must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory stretching from every battlefield and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land will yet swell the chorus of the Union when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature."

The rail splitter took the great scholar's straggling paragraph and made it immortal.

Lincoln and education:

Justin S. Morrill introduced a bill to provide for the giving to the States certain tracts of public land in proportion to their representation in the lower House of Congress; the lands to be sold, when necessary, the proceeds to be turned into the State treasury as a perpetual fund, the income only to be used, for the endowment and support of at least one college in the State in which the primary object should be instruction in branches relating to agricultural and the mechanic arts—without excluding other literary and scientific subjects, including military tactics. That act passed both Houses of Congress in 1859, but was vetoed by President Buchanan. Morrill reintroduced the bill, and when it passed it was signed by Lincoln on July 2, 1862. The Morrill Act, or Land Grant Act, has been called the most far-reaching educational statute ever enacted by any legislative body in this country. Every State promptly accepted the provisions of the act. There is today in every State at least one land-grant college. About 39 percent of the collegiate students of the United States are enrolled in these colleges, which were made possible and which were chartered under the act signed by Abraham Lincoln on July 2, 1862. So that at the close of the year of 1935 there were 168,388 students and 14,065 teachers in these colleges.

What did Lincoln say to Greeley?

Lincoln was a powerful wrestler in his youth. The man was never found who could throw him on equal ground save the one Army captain, Lorenzo Dow Thompson. Once in his clutches, the strongest antagonist was broken and cast prone. Lincoln's method with a political opponent or a fault-finding editor was the same. Horace Greeley in the high noon of the war attacked Lincoln and demanded to know his meaning. Would he or would he not abolish slavery? Was he or was he not a friend of freedom? Why would he have a Union stitched together with bayonets? Why not let the erring sisters go in peace? Would he answer the prayer of twenty millions? And this is Lincoln's reply: "If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time save slavery, I do not agree with them. If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time destroy slavery, I do not agree with them. My paramount object is to save the Union and not either to save or destroy slavery. If I could save the Union without freeing any slaves I would do it. If I could save it by freeing all the slaves I would do it, and if I could do it by freeing some and leaving others alone I would also do that. What I do about slavery and the colored race I do because I believe it helps to save the Union, and what I forbear I forbear because I do not believe it helps to save the Union. I shall do less whenever I shall believe that what I am doing hurts the cause, and I shall do more whenever I believe doing more will help the cause."

"Since the death of Thucydides", says Historian Ridpath, "there has not, I believe, been written another such paragraph as that. Talleyrand and Burke and Webster all sitting together could not have composed it." It is tougher than wrought steel; the precision of it is equal to the strength and the cogency and the comprehensive harmony of the diapason. It is well-nigh the unapproachable model of all that was ever done in human argument. No phalanx of bayonets ever went so level across the field against the enemy. It is a countercharge that goes over the redoubt without breaking a step. After that was said there was a profound silence in the sanctum of Greeley's Tribune.

Lincoln and the slave power:

To one who has given any thought to the rise and fall of the slave power on our continent from that day in 1619 when Rolfe made his now epoch-making entry in his ledger "came in the Dutch man-of-warre that sold us 20 Nagers", until the eve of the great whirlwind with the great Civil War and its attendant hatreds and suffering, which threatened to destroy all that had been established in the seven decades preceding, a scene witnessed by Roy Chapman Andrews is very illuminating. "Not long ago, exploring in the Gobi Desert, I saw an age-old tragedy reenacted. A huge mastodon, his monstrous shovel jaw dredging up masses of trailing grasses, worked his way slowly along the shore through the shallow waters into a deep well of mud. The succulent tubers, just beyond the water's edge enticed him farther and farther into the treacherous mud. Suddenly, amidst his greedy feeding he found that he could not lift his ponderous legs. He struggled madly, only to sink deeper and deeper into the mire of death. I heard his frenzied trumpeting echoing from the high shores. At last they ended in exhausted gurgles as the colossal beast sank below the surface."

Face to face with the mastodon of slavery as represented by the southern oligarchy of slaveholders, and Lincoln became adamant. Neither menace of rebellion nor final secession, nor fear of an engulfing and unending war, nor intervention by a threatening and hostile world frowning on triumphant democracy; neither treason in his own ranks nor foul abuse from friend and foe alike, stayed him from the predetermined completion of his self-appointed tasks—he resolved that, as far as was in his power, it be ordained by a victorious Union firmly reestablished, that racial enslavement cease on the American Continent. The small beginning in 1619 from which grew this mastodon of slavery from the seemingly harmless purchase of "20 Nagers", was thus for all time sunk into the mire of extinction and annihilation by the kind-hearted lover of his people—when he issued his declaration that all men must be forever free.

What did Lincoln say on August 26, 1863?

The Lincoln-Conkling letter was written at a crucial period in the history of the war. The emancipation proclamation had been in force since January 1 of the year; though Vicksburg had fallen and Gettysburg had been won, drafts had been forcibly resisted in many of the States, and the enemies of the Union were unusually active. Race riots were rampant, and New York City was in the hands of rioters subdued only after the arrival of Federal troops. The elections of the previous year had resulted disastrously to the administration, and the fate of the Republic seemed to be trembling in the balance. "Peace at any price" was shouted from the editorial rooms of the northern press. It was in this condition of affairs that Lincoln's friends conceived the idea of calling a great mass meeting of the Union men of Illinois who were in favor of a vigorous prosecution of the war. Lincoln was to have appeared in person before this monster mass meeting in Springfield, the attendance at which was estimated to have been between sixty and seventy thousand. Lincoln was unable to leave Washington, and wrote this letter to James C. Conkling, one of the leaders, and requested him to read the letter to the vast assembly. "I have but one suggestion, read it very slowly, and now, God bless you and all good Union men." Understanding the momentous character of the occasion where this letter was to be made public—and it was read from a score of platforms to the vast crowds—he threw into it all the power of persuasion and logical argument, of which he was a master. It is indeed a marvelously convincing argument that the only hope of the preservation of the Union is to suppress the rebellion by force of arms—to defend the emancipation proclamation to the utmost, to employ Negroes as soldiers, and then the letter closes with an enumeration of the encouraging signs of final triumph and an appeal to the patriotism of all—that stirred the hearts of the Union men not only in Springfield but throughout the Nation. "I certainly wish that all men could be free, while you, I suppose, do not. Yet I have neither adopted nor proposed any measure which is not consistent even with your view, provided that you are for the Union. I suggested compensated emancipation, to which you replied you wished not to be taxed to buy Negroes. But I had not asked you to be taxed to buy Negroes, except in such a way as to save you from greater taxation to save the Union exclusively by other means." * * *

"Is there, has there ever been, any question that, by the law of war, property, both of enemies and friends, may be taken when needed? And is it not needed whenever it helps us and hurts the enemy? Armies the world over destroy enemies' property when they cannot use it, and even destroy their own to keep it from the enemy. Civilized belligerents do all in their power to help themselves or hurt the enemy, except a few things regarded as barbarous or cruel. * * *

"I know that some of the commanders of our armies in the field, who have given us our most important victories, believe the emancipation policy and the use of colored troops constitute the heaviest blows yet dealt to the rebellion, and that at least one of those important successes could not have been achieved when it was but for the aid of the black soldiers. * * * I submit their opinions are entitled to some weight against the objections, often urged, that emancipation and arming the blacks are unwise as military measures and were not adopted as such in good faith."

"Humor", said Bacon, "is a sudden glory; as a glory, a heavenly benediction, it blesses him that gives and him that takes; and it will be found that the most lovable characters, those whose virtues we should do well to copy, are always these among whose main inspirations is also laughter. Their mirth shall be counted to them for righteousness sake, for without an alloy of humor there can be no salvation."

A local politician went to Washington to get an office which he felt sure only awaited his application. In a couple of weeks he came back. "Well, did you get your office?" his friends asked him. "No", said he. "Did you see the President?" "Yes, of course." "What did he say?" "Well, we went in and stated our errand. He heard us patiently, and then said, 'Gentlemen, I am sorry that I have no office for Mr. ———, but if I can't give you that, I can tell you a story.' We thought best to hear the story and let him go on. 'Once there was a certain king', he said, 'who kept an astrologer to forewarn him of coming events and especially to tell him whether it were going to rain when he wanted to go on hunting expeditions. One day he had started off for the forest with his train of ladies and lords for a grand hunt, when the cavalcade met a farmer, riding a donkey, on the road. "Good morning, farmer", said the king. "Good morning, King", said the farmer. "Where are you folks going?" "Hunting", said the king. "Lord, you'll get wet", said the farmer. The king trusted his astrologer, of course, and went to the forest, but by midday there came on a terrific storm that drenched and buffeted the whole party. When the king returned to his palace he had the astrologer decapitated and sent for the farmer to take his place. "Law's sake", says the farmer when he arrived. "It aint me that knows when it's goin' to rain, it's my donkey. When it's goin' to be fair weather that donkey always carries his ears forward, so. When it's goin' to rain he puts them backward, so." "Make the donkey the court astrologer!" shouted the king. It was done. But the king always declared that that appointment was the greatest mistake he ever made in his life.' Lincoln stopped there. 'Why did he say it was a mistake?' we asked him. 'Didn't the donkey do his duty?' 'Yes', said the President, 'but after that time every donkey in the country assembled in front of the palace and wanted an office.' "

What did Lincoln say in his second inaugural?

The second inaugural, coming so shortly before his death, formed unintentionally his farewell address. It has the tone of prophecy, for the Bible was its inspiration. The first two paragraphs ring like chapters from the poet seers of old. The concluding paragraph is an apostolic benediction.

An editorial in the Chicago Tribune of August 12, 1862, written by Horace White, inspired by a letter from Mrs. Mary E. Root, not only found a ready lodgment in Lincoln's mind but furnished him with some of the material from which he built that symmetrical structure which will always impress us with its grandeur and its beauty. Lincoln was a constant reader of the Tribune, and Joseph Medill, the editor and owner, for years had been his friend. The editorial is entitled "The Justice of the Almighty" and is as follows:

"It seems to be decreed that the American people must lose all that they have made or acquired from the sin of slavery, and suffer in their own persons all the anguish they have wrongfully put upon the African race. It is impossible to compute in dollars and cents the aggregate of the imposing balance sheet, but we cannot avoid the conviction that the sum total of profits that has been derived from slave holding, slave trading, and slave driving, from the first cargo of Africans which was landed at Jamestown down to the day when the last of the race shall be emancipated, is to be swept away in a vortex of civil war, with probably compound interest at 6 percent. If so, who shall gainsay the justice of the Almighty? But the dread account does not stop here. Dollars and cents can be replaced. The accumulation of wealth which the sun beholds in his course from the Atlantic to the Pacific today is a trifle in the lifetime of a nation. There is an account of bloodshed and tears, bodily torture, separation of husband and wife, parent and child, extending over a period of 200 years. Have we nothing to balance it in our own sufferings, in the tale of every battlefield, in the mortality report which each day brings us from some quarter? We have used men and women as so much raw material to be worked up into cotton and sugar till we have been able to compute that the average life of a slave on a plantation in the cotton and sugar States is about 7 years. Do our hospitals on the Peninsula show nothing to correspond with this fact in the alarming waste of human life?

"There is a philosophy in this war which we will do well to comprehend. They tell us that England is on the eve of great calamities by reason of the war in America. England is entitled to great calamities for putting upon us the original sin. Let her take her just share and bear it as she may. 'I, the Lord thy God, am a jealous God, visiting the inquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation.' England gave us her slavery and took cotton for her pay. If she has made rope enough out of it to hang herself, let her cry aloud to God for mercy, and not rail at us for being the instrument in His hands to carry forward the pleas of everlasting justice.

"But what shall be the penalty of the slaveholders themselves in this general settlement? What is the balance due from them at the great clearing house? If those who are responsible accessories, those who long ago put away the sin from their own doors, suffer so much, what must be the reckoning for those who have trafficked in human flesh, wielded the scourge with their own hands, and taken the sword at last to perpetuate and extend the horrid crime?

A spiritual leader some years ago said that what happened to the fame of Lincoln is a vindication of human idealism. For if the leaders of the reconstruction period had become the heroes of America, then we would be justified in the conclusion that the evil that men do lives after them and the good is buried with them. But because it was Lincoln's fame which survived, because the Union became permanent, then we may declare that the eternal things, the great and infinite aims, live and endure. Because Lincoln touched eternity in his work he became eternal.

Lincoln, therefore, is the barometer of America's idealism in each successive age, understood and appreciated to a varying degree. In an age that is particularly materialistic, Lincoln begins to fade into vague memory. In an age that cherishes idealism, Lincoln becomes more real and comes closer to the hearts of man. This much is sure: that should America ever become so sunk in materialism and so forgetful of all that is noble that its soul will die, only then will Lincoln be forgotten. And that will be the tragic era of American history. But as long as idealism lives on among us, so long will his influence remain.

GRATITUDE IN POLITICS—WASHINGTON STAR EDITORIAL

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Gratitude in Politics", published in the Washington Evening Star of April 21.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Star of Apr. 21, 1936]

GRATITUDE IN POLITICS

Gratitude too often is erased from the lexicon of politics. Senator HASTINGS, of Delaware, took occasion yesterday in the Senate to recall to certain Democratic leaders, who are today bitter in their denunciation, what they owed in the past to some of the members of the American Liberty League. He recalled, for example, that members of the Du Pont family in the past contributed large sums to the Democratic campaign chest; that these sums were contributed not only in the campaign of 1928 but also in the campaign of 1932. He mentioned the fact that John J. Raskob, at one time chairman of the Democratic National Committee, took hundreds of thousands of dollars out of his own pocket to help finance the Democratic national campaign in 1928, and that he continued his support of the Democratic organization thereafter when the Democratic Party was flat on its back.

These Democrats are now members of the American Liberty League, which is committed to the support of the Constitution of the United States and to the liberties guaranteed the American people under that great document. And yet it is charged by the New Deal Democrats that the men whose money was so gladly accepted by the Democratic National Committee in the past are actuated only by the basest of motives. If the followers of the New Deal are to be believed, these men are merely representative of "entrenched greed."

Senator HASTINGS compared the platform of the American Liberty League with the platform of the Democratic Party adopted in 1932, the platform on which President Roosevelt was elected. The Delaware Senator found them almost identic in the principles laid down, principles which declared for the preservation of American institutions, for economy in Government, for a sound fiscal policy and the maintenance of a sound and stable currency, for the restoration of employment, and for no unnecessary competition by Government with legitimate industry. As Senator HASTINGS pointed out, the platform of the American Liberty League is so nearly in line with the 1932 Democratic platform that it must be concluded that the league is being controlled by those who believe in the Democratic platform.

The trouble arose when these Democratic members of the American Liberty League refused, as Senator HASTINGS said, "to follow the New Deal into the morass of socialism and when it deliberately violated every Democratic principle for which all good Democrats stood when Mr. Roosevelt was nominated in 1932." The New Dealers have characterized the American Liberty League as "the miscalled American Liberty League, an organization of multimillionaires." There was no complaint when Irénée Du Pont sent a check for $5,000 to Chairman James A. Farley of the Democratic National Committee a month after the inauguration of President Roosevelt. The complaint came later, when the Democratic chairman declared the Du Ponts "ungrateful" to the Roosevelt administration, and added "they want the people of the United States to be just as ungrateful as they are." The people of the United States will determine for themselves whether they believe that they should be grateful to the New Dealers.

Senator HASTINGS called the roll of prominent Democrats who now are members of American Liberty League committees. He listed among them Alfred E. Smith, who was the Democratic standard bearer in 1928, and John W. Davis, who was the party nominee for President in 1924. He mentioned also the same Irénée Du Pont and John J. Raskob, who were generous in their contributions to the Democratic cause. He called the roll, too, of other prominent Democrats who have broken with the New Deal, among them former Senator Reed, of Missouri, the late Governor Ritchie, of Maryland, former Governor Ely, of Massachusetts, Lewis W. Douglas, the first Director of the Budget in the Roosevelt administration, Col. Henry Breckinridge, Judge William R. Pattangall, of Maine, James R. Warburg, and others.

The speech of the Delaware Senator was partisan and Republican. He spoke as a critic of the Roosevelt administration. The facts that he marshaled, however, are sufficient to indicate that the Democratic Party, united in 1932, is no longer united. The attacks launched upon the anti-Roosevelt Democrats by the new dealers are scarcely calculated to win these Democrats back into the fold.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 371. An act for the relief of G. Elias & Bro., Inc.;

S. 713. An act granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear the case of David A. Wright;

S. 929. An act for the relief of the Southern Products Co.;

S. 1062. An act for the relief of James R. Young; and

S. 1846. An act for the relief of the estate of Anton W. Fischer.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12037) relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced providing for the control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such States, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 788. An act for the relief of the International Mercantile Marine Co.;

S. 790. An act for the relief of the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique;

S. 998. An act to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of George Lawley & Son Corporation, of Boston, Mass.; and

S. 1110. An act for the relief of A. Randolph Holladay.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, severally with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 267. An act for the relief of certain officers and employees of the Foreign Service of the United States who, while in the course of their respective duties, suffered losses of personal property by reason of catastrophes of Nature;

S. 753. An act to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Wales Island Packing Co.; and

S. 1138. An act for the relief of Art Metal Construction Co. with respect to the maintenance of suit against the United States for the recovery of any income or profits taxes paid to the United States for the calendar year 1918 in excess of the amount of taxes lawfully due for such period.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 796. An act for the relief of A. E. Clark;

H. R. 1365. An act for the relief of E. G. Briseno;

H. R. 1485. An act to pay the Printz-Biederman Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, the sum of $741.40, money paid as duty on merchandise imported under section 308 of the Tariff Act;

H. R. 2087. An act for the relief of the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co.;

H. R. 2163. An act for the relief of William Sulem;

H. R. 2213. An act for the relief of Charles P. Shipley Saddlery & Mercantile Co.;

H. R. 2259. An act for the relief of Addie I. Tryon and Lorin H. Tryon;

H. R. 3155. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the Bankers Reserve Life Co. of Omaha, Nebr., and the Wisconsin National Life Insurance Co. of Oshkosh, Wis.;

H. R. 3286. An act for the relief of Albert W. Wright;

H. R. 3348. An act for the relief of Nathan A. Buck;

H. R. 3694. An act for the relief of Florence Byvank;

H. R. 3737. An act for the relief of George L. Stone;

H. R. 3866. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Emanuel Bratses;

H. R. 4060. An act for the relief of Jessie T. Lafferty;

H. R. 4942. An act for the relief of the estate of Patrick Henry Walsh;

H. R. 9213. An act to provide a preliminary examination of the Hillsborough and Withlacoochee Rivers and their tributaries, in the State of Florida, with a view to the control of their flood waters; and

H. R. 11302. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to lend to the reunion committee of the United Confederate Veterans 3,000 blankets, olive drab, no. 4, and 1,500 canvas cots, to be used at their annual encampment to be held at Shreveport, La., in June 1936.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 796. An act for the relief of A. E. Clark;

H. R. 1365. An act for the relief of E. G. Briseno;

H. R. 1485. An act to pay the Printz-Biederman Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, the sum of $741.40, money paid as duty on merchandise imported under section 308 of the tariff act;

H. R. 4942. An act for the relief of the estate of Patrick Henry Walsh; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 9213. An act to provide a preliminary examination of the Hillsborough and Withlacoochee Rivers and their tributaries, in the State of Florida, with a view to the control of their floodwaters; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 11302. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to lend to the reunion committee of the United Confederate Veterans 3,000 blankets, olive drab, no. 4, 1,500 canvas cots, to be used at their annual encampment to be held at Shreveport, La., in June 1936; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ALTERNATIVE METHOD TO IMPEACHMENT FOR TRIAL OF INFERIOR FEDERAL JUDGES

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, the impeachment trial of a Federal judge which has just been concluded in this Chamber centers attention upon a grave and important problem which now confronts the people of the United States. It is a truism that the integrity, the honesty, the fair-mindedness of our courts constitute the ultimate foundation upon which our Republic rests, upon which free institutions throughout the world are based, and without which liberty and order are alike impossible. No breath of scandal since the birth of our Government has touched the highest Court in the land, the Supreme Court of the United States, but it is not enough that that high tribunal alone should be above suspicion. The intimate contact of our citizens is with the lower courts. For every citizen immediately affected by a decision of the Supreme Court 10,000 may be affected by the decisions of the Federal circuit and district courts. Confidence of the citizen in the integrity, the incorruptibility, and the even-handedness of Federal justice depends directly upon his confidence in and his ability to have confidence in the lower courts whose action directly and immediately affects his rights, his liberty, and his property.

It is not perhaps generally realized to what an extent our lower courts, and particularly our lower Federal courts, are discretionary agencies charged not merely with the application of clear and definite rules of law laid down for them by Congress or by the precedents, but vested also with vast administrative powers, the exercise of which, in the nature of the case, cannot be governed and prescribed by rules, but which require the constant exercise of broad discretion. I am referring especially to their powers in connection with bankruptcies and receiverships, which make them to all intents and purposes the administrators of great properties and estates for the benefit of creditors and investors. These involve discretionary powers far broader and more important than those which attach to any other courts in the country.

It has been my experience to sit first as a member and subsequently as chairman of a special committee of this body to investigate receivership and bankruptcy proceedings and the administration of justice in the courts of the United States. Not alone the testimony to which I have listened in that capacity, but also the disclosures which have come to light and attracted widespread public attention during the past 10 years in relation to similar conditions in the Southern District of New York, in Illinois, in California, and more recently in Florida, as evidenced by the testimony in the impeachment proceeding which has just come to a close, have convinced me, and would, I believe, convince anyone who has had the same opportunity to become acquainted with conditions, that we are confronted with a problem which we can no longer neglect if public confidence in the courts is to be maintained. District courts in the exercise of their administrative discretion, in the management of insolvent properties and corporations, have been, in instance after instance, revealed as too frequently taking action, the effect of which has been to deprive creditors and investors of a proportionate share of the assets to which they are entitled, for the benefit of lawyers and receivers and other court officials. Favoritism and influence have too frequently ruled the selection of receivers and trustees appointed by the courts, and the integrity and ability of these officers of the courts have too frequently been disregarded for other considerations. Officers of the courts, such as referees in bankruptcy, receivers, trustees, and special masters, have too often disregarded the obligations imposed on them by their public trust. The rights of creditors and other parties interested in insolvent estates have, not infrequently, been grievously neglected. Where judges are entrusted, as are the judges of our district courts today, with the management and administration of billions of dollars in value of property through insolvency or bankruptcy proceedings, and where the effect of such management and administration is that the creditors and investors too often realize little, if anything, out of the properties, while attorneys' fees and the fees of receivers and trustees run into magnificent figures, the necessary result is to impair the confidence of the people in the administration of justice.

This situation cannot be corrected by mere multiplication of rules or law or by an attempt to deprive the judges of discretionary power.

Obviously, judges cannot be transformed into mere ministerial officers in respect of any of their functions and least of all in the exercise of the broad powers of supervision and management of estates committed to their care which have always formed a part of the historic jurisdiction of chancery. That jurisdiction is embodied in the Constitution itself and judges must of necessty continue to exercise the discretion which the jurisdiction comprehends. Instead of attempting the futile and impossible task of cutting down this discretion or attempting to cabin it within rigid rules, the only intelligent course would seem to be to prevent its abuse by holding the judges who abuse it to strict accountability and preventing further abuse by promptly and unhesitatingly depriving them of their judicial office.

The method upon which we now rely, and upon which we have relied throughout our history, to enforce such accountability upon our judges and to effect such removals is the process of impeachment. The Constitution definitely provides that judges shall hold their office only "during good behavior"; and the method of impeachment has been our traditional device for enforcing the requirement of good behavior and for removing the stain upon the ermine by unfrocking the faithless judges who have sullied it. That impeachment has been a prompt and efficient method for accomplishing this result, I do not believe anyone will contend. Our experience is proof to the contrary. In the 149 years since the Constitution was adopted only nine judges have been impeached. Of those nine, only four were found guilty and removed from office. Four removals in a period of 149 years! Within the past decade we have twice witnessed the spectacle of judges strongly suspected of improper conduct resigning under fire and thereby evading the consequences of the impeachment process. Not merely has impeachment been unproductive of results; but the nature of the process is such that, as evidenced in the recent proceedings, it seriously interrupts for long periods the necessary transaction of important legislative business, places an almost intolerable burden of hearing and weighing testimony upon Senators already charged heavily with other responsibilities, and for this reason alone is always resorted to with extreme reluctance, even in cases of flagrant misconduct. The pressure of other responsibilities on the time of the Senate, together with the inevitable increase in the number of Federal judges, is clearly bringing us close to the time when this body will find it a matter of sheer physical impossibility to conduct a sufficient number of impeachment trials to render the prospect of impeachment an effective deterrent to judicial misconduct. On the other hand, the practical certainty that in a large majority of cases misconduct will never be visited with impeachment is a standing invitation for judges to abuse their authority with impunity and without fear of removal.

In view of this situation, the time is clearly at hand when we must consider seriously the possibility of reenforcing the process of impeachment with some other and more certain, prompt, and effective method for dealing with the judges of the inferior Federal courts who abuse their office.

I wish to submit today such a method for the consideration of the Senate, in order that while the difficulties and the unsatisfactory character of the impeachment process are still fresh and vivid in our recollection, we may concentrate our attention on the consideration of a more effective way of dealing with a great and fundamental problem before the evil shall have passed beyond remedy.

The question which confronts us upon the very threshold of the inquiry is whether, under the Constitution, the impeachment process is exclusive; whether, in other words, the Constitution requires that judges guilty of improper conduct in office shall be removed by impeachment, and by impeachment alone.

I contend that the Constitution does not so require; that impeachment is not the sole constitutional method for the removal of faithless judges; and that the Constitution leaves the door open for legislative action by the Congress to provide supplementary and additional methods, if in its judgment, it should deem such action desirable.

This conclusion follows clearly from a scrutiny of the pertinent provisions of the Constitution itself.

Let it first of all be noted that, contrary to a widely prevailing idea to the contrary, there is no separate provision in the Constitution for the impeachment of judges as distinguished from other officers of government. The constitutional basis for impeaching judges is found in section 4 of article II which does not mention judges by name, but which applies equally to all civil officers of the United States. This includes judges only because they fall within the general description of civil officers. The language of the provision is as follows:

> The President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States, shall be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of, treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

In view of the fact that the impeachment process thus applies to judges only because they are civil officers, it must follow, if we are to conclude that impeachment is the exclusive method for removing judges, that it is also the exclusive method for removing all civil officers. This is obviously not the case. Clearly, civil officers other than judges may be removed by other means than impeachment. This question, so far as relates to civil officers generally, was squarely presented to the Supreme Court in the case of Shurtleff v. United States (189 U. S. 311 (1902)); and the answer which the Court gave to it is as follows (at p. 317):

> By the fourth section of article II of the Constitution it is provided that all civil officers shall be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of, treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors. No one has ever supposed that the effect of this section was to prevent their removal for other causes deemed sufficient by the President. No such inference could be reasonably drawn from such language.

Since it is thus settled that the provisions of section 4 of article II do not, in and of themselves, provide an exclusive procedure for removing from office civil officers, including judges, the only question which remains is whether, with respect to judges, there is some other and different provision of the Constitution which prevents the application to them of any process other than impeachment.

No such provision can be found anywhere in the Constitution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the remarks now being made to the Senate are uttered by two of the ablest lawyers in the Senate, but I am unable to hear what they are saying. Will they permit me to advance closer to them, or else speak louder? I am sure the Senate wishes to hear both Senators.

Mr. McADOO. I shall be happy if the Senator from Arizona will move nearer if he feels so disposed. As he is chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I desire particularly to have him hear my remarks.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I now have the strongest possible inducement to speak so that I may be heard. I thank the Senator from Arizona.

The Senator from California, I apprehend, is proposing some method of removal other than through the process of impeachment. May I ask him, Is there not much good to be derived from trying judges through the present method of impeachment, even though it may be cumbersome and toilsome and laborious? Does not the spectacle which is presented to the country of a high court of impeachment here in the Senate attract more attention, and does not the public look on it as a proceeding of more dignity and of more importance, and is there not a good to be accomplished through that process rather than by some process of trial by a committee or by a special court? And does not the decision of the Senate, in the final analysis, carry with it greater prestige and greater benefit to the public than the judgment of some lesser or subordinate tribunal?

For instance, while the proceedings which we had here 2 weeks ago interrupted the work of the Senate, yet when the Senate did act I feel confident that the decision went out all over the United States, and commanded respect, and, so far as I know, elicited very little opposition or criticism from the people of the country.

I merely suggest those considerations to the Senator with a view to having his reaction.

Mr. McADOO. I may say that the proposals I shall submit in this argument do not exclude the impeachment process. We may still resort to it if we wish to do so; but I think there are very grave objections to the cumbersome and inefficacious impeachment process, as illustrated throughout our history. It is extremely difficult to convict a judge by a two-thirds vote of this body, and it is also very difficult to secure the presentation of articles of impeachment by the House.

When we do get someone before the Senate for trial on an impeachment, the proceeding may be impressive. I grant that; but if, as a result of it, we effect only an impressive spectacle and do not administer justice, then I say we had better devise, as supplemental and additional to impeachment, some other method which may enable us to call and to hold judges to a stricter accountability. That is a thing which I believe is of imperative importance to the country.

I desire to say to my colleagues that I shall be more than glad to have questions propounded to me, but I shall appreciate it if I may be permitted to present this argument with continuity. After it has concluded, I shall be more than happy to answer any questions my colleagues may desire to propound.

In offering this suggestion I do not mean to be discourteous. I only mean that I think what I have to say will be more effective if its continuity may be preserved.

The Constitution clearly contemplates the removal from office of judges who betray their trust. This is evident from the explicit language of the very first section of article III, the judiciary article of the Constitution, which provides that judges shall hold their office "during good behavior", and thereby specifically looks to their removal from office for improper behavior. Nothing is said in this section as to the method of removal, since the section deals not with the removal process but merely with tenure. One method of removal is by the process of impeachment; but, as I have shown, that process is clearly not exclusive. The way is, therefore, open for implementing the requirement of good behavior by some other method of removal, provided one can be found which does not transgress some specific provision of the Constitution.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say that I have listened to the Senator with more than usual attention, because as to the subject involved there is some division of opinion in the Senate, and the Senator knows how highly I respect his opinions. Therefore I have listened closely; and I could not hear a while ago until the Senator elevated his voice.

Mr. McADOO. It is a question upon which there has been and is, I have no doubt, a wide difference of opinion; but I think that difference of opinion arises from the fact that for the past 149 years we have accepted the impeachment process as the only means of putting unworthy judges out of office, and I do not think we have ever explored the alternative methods. My hope is that in the argument I shall present to the Senate I may open a train of thought which may lead to some productive result. That is the sole object of this argument.

So far as relates to civil officers other than judges, it is the law under the most recent decisions of the United States Supreme Court that Congress, in creating the offices, may provide for the removal by the President for misconduct of the persons holding the offices, even in the case of quasi-judicial officers such as the members of independent administrative boards and commissions (Humphrey's Executor v. United States, 295 U. S. 672). Thus, although a member of the Federal Trade Commission might clearly be impeached for bribery under the impeachment provision of section 4, article II, Congress may nevertheless provide that he shall be removed from office by the President if he is found guilty of bribery or some other breach of duty.

I do not propose to enter upon a discussion of the question as to whether or not Congress could constitutionally confer on the President the power to remove judges of the lower Federal courts for cause, similar to the power which may be conferred upon him to remove quasi-judicial officers. Whatever might be the conclusion as to constitutionality—and, in view of our doctrine of "separation of powers", a serious constitutional doubt may be raised as to whether the President could be given such a power over the judiciary—I shall not discuss that question, because, apart from all questions of constitutionality, no President would care to be charged, or should be charged, with the responsibility of passing on the conduct of members of a great coordinate branch of the Government.

The Houses of Congress comprising the legislative branch have a well-recognized power to protect their integrity by the process of expulsion, which is in substance nothing but an exercise of the power of removal of their own Members for misconduct. Analogous to this is the power of the President, whether under statute or otherwise, to preserve the integrity of the administrative arm of the Government by exercising the power of removal with respect to subordinate executive officers. In view of these clearly established powers in both the legislative branch and the executive branch to remove their own unworthy members by different processes than impeachment, it seems clear that the judiciary may constitutionally be authorized to exercise a like power unless the obstacle of some specific constitutional provision stands in the way.

Two such obstacles may conceivably be suggested. In the first place, it is well established that courts of the United States erected under the judiciary article of the Constitution can exercise only judicial powers. The first question which arises, therefore, is whether the power to remove a judge for misconduct in office is a judicial power.

On this point we are necessarily without the benefit of direct precedents from the Federal courts, because no such power has ever been exercised, or even attempted; but it would seem entirely clear, both on principle and on the authority of the precedents drawn from the State courts, that such a power of removing judges is a judicial power. From the standpoint of principle, it is to be noted that the Supreme Court has held that where a statute authorizes the President to remove executive officials for specified causes, the power of removal is judicial in such sense that it cannot be exercised without notice to the official in question and until he has been given an opportunity to be heard (Shurtleff v. United States, 189 U. S. 311).

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. McADOO. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the Senator is correct. Apparently, he draws the conclusion that an impeachment process is the exercise of a judicial power. I agree with the Senator. The Constitution of the United States, in my judgment, gives the Congress no judicial power whatever except with relation to impeachments and with relation to passing upon the qualifications of their own Members.

Mr. McADOO. I think the Congress has the power to create a judicial tribunal which may deal with judges accused of abuse of their trust.

In many States, and I may specifically name Maryland, Indiana, Louisiana, New York, and Texas, the upper courts are given authority to remove inferior judges for misconduct in spite of the fact that, in some of those States, the State Constitution is explicit in confining the courts to the exercise of purely judicial functions.

That the exercise of the power of removal from office for misconduct is not per se beyond the competence of the Federal courts is clearly proved by their well-established practice of exercising such a power in the matter of the disbarment of attorneys for misconduct, which is nothing more than the removal of officers of the court from office, because it is well established that attorneys are "officers of the court." An attorney, an officer of the court, cannot be removed without trial, without opportunity to be heard, and without the exercise of judicial power.

It has long been recognized in the Federal courts that this power is a judicial power, and I may refer specifically to the case of Ex parte Garland (4 Wall. 333), decided in 1886, where the Supreme Court said that attorneys hold their office during good behavior and that "their admission and their exclusion are the exercise of judicial power."

A second objection which might conceivably be raised against the exercise by the Federal courts of power to remove members of the Federal judiciary is that under judiciary power of the Constitution—article III, section 2—it has been held that the courts are limited to the adjudication of cases or controversies "in law and equity." The question, therefore, arises whether a proceeding for the removal of a judge would be a case or controversy "in law and equity" within the meaning of the Constitution. The answer to this question would likewise seem to be clearly in the affirmative. The term "all cases in law and equity" as used in the Constitution has been held to include all types of proceeding known to the common law as the common law existed at the time of the adoption of the Constitution.

One of the historical forms of procedure at common law is the writ of quo warranto. This is the traditional common-law procedure for determining the right of a person or corporation to hold an office or franchise conferred by the State. The essential feature of quo warranto is that it results in a judgment of ouster from the office or franchise. While ordinarily quo warranto is used to determine the legal questions regarding title to the office, there is sufficient authority to the effect that it may also be used to oust a person from office for misconduct (Commonwealth v. M'Williams, 11 Pa. 61; State v. Darnell, 123 Kans. 643; State v. Redman, 183 Ind. 332).

The Indiana case which I have just cited is directly in point in the present connection. The Indiana Constitution provides that any judge who shall have been convicted of corruption or other crimes may be removed from office by the Supreme Court. The details of the procedure for such removal had not been provided by the legislature. It was held that the proper form of proceeding was one analogous to quo warranto, and that in such a proceeding the Supreme Court might remove a judge.

Since, as I have shown, the power to remove judges for misconduct is a judicial power, and since a proceeding for removal is directly analogous to quo warranto, which is a proceeding known to the common law prior to the adoption of the Federal Constitution, it follows that such a power of removal could validly be exercised by a Federal court established under article III of the Constitution.

With these points established, there exists no constitutional objection to the institution by Congress, in addition to the procedure of impeachment, of a method for the removal of faithless judges by the courts of the United States themselves. I raise no question here as to whether such a procedure could be entertained by the Supreme Court of the United States and whether that Court has, or could be given, the power to purge itself by the removal of a faithless member because the question with which I am dealing does not concern the Supreme Court. It relates only to the inferior Federal courts. I assert, therefore, that it would be constitutional for Congress to establish a procedure for the Federal courts to try members of the inferior Federal judiciary for misconduct and to remove them from office if found guilty.

Again, I say that if such a procedure should be adopted it would not exclude the process of impeachment, which could still be resorted to if the Congress desired that that method should be employed.

We now confront the question as to what form this procedure may most satisfactorily take. It seems clear that the Supreme Court of the United States could not be charged with original jurisdiction to hear and determine proceedings for the removal of a Federal judge, because the original jurisdiction of that Court is expressly limited to the classes of cases which the Constitution specifies and by the provision that all other exercises of jurisdiction by the Supreme Court shall be appellate in character. Accordingly, some other tribunal than the Supreme Court must be found. It would no doubt be possible to vest in the circuit court of appeals for each circuit the power to hear and determine removal cases with reference to judges within the circuit, but as a practical matter, in view of the relative unevenness in the distribution of business among the circuits and in view of the fact that in some circuits the dockets are grievously overburdened, it would seem, apart from other considerations, unwise to add this additional burden to the business of the regular circuit courts of appeals.

It would be entirely practical, and I therefore suggest that a high court be established by act of Congress, whose sole jurisdiction shall be to try charges of misbehavior which may be presented to it against judges of the inferior courts of the United States in the manner and through the channel I shall shortly propose.

This high court should be composed of 10 judges of the circuit courts of appeals of the United States, ranking in point of seniority in service, one to be drawn from each circuit, together with the chief justice of the United States District Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, who should be the presiding judge or justice thereof.

The said court should hold annual or semiannual sessions in the city of Washington for the trial of such cases as may be presented to it; but the court should not be required to sit unless notified by the Attorney General of the United States 30 days in advance of the fixed date for such sessions that there is on the docket a case or cases for submission to the court.

The question now arises as to how and in what manner the charges shall be brought before the proposed court. Clearly the origination of the proceeding should be safeguarded in such manner that the judges would not be exposed to the danger of unmerited harassment through frivolous or unjustified complaints. The procedure must be solemn and dignified and vested in hands which can be trusted not to abuse it and which will act always with due regard to public responsibility.

Here again the analogy of the historic procedure by quo warranto points the way. Quo warranto is a proceeding brought in the name of the State by the attorney general acting in defense of the public interest. The Attorney General of the United States should be authorized and directed to receive and to make careful and thorough investigation of complaints which may be lodged with him against any judge or judges of the inferior Federal courts of the United States. If, as a result of such investigation or investigations, the Attorney General should conclude that a proceeding in quo warranto should be brought against any such judge, he should be required thereupon to file a complaint with the high court I have described and to prosecute the same before such court. It should be the duty of the said high court to proceed, without unnecessary delay, to hear and determine the charge or charges. The defendant judge should have the right to answer the complaint and to defend the same. The court, after having heard the case, should either dismiss the charge or charges for want of sufficient evidence, or upon grounds of law, or if the charge or charges should be proved, the court should enter against the defendant a judgment of removal from office. From such judgment the defendant should be entitled to appeal on questions of law to the Supreme Court of the United States.

I would suggest that the Congress should also have a right to set in motion such proceeding before the said court through a direction or instruction to the Attorney General to commence a quo warranto proceeding by resolution adopted by a majority of both Houses of the Congress.

It is my opinion that this procedure would be in all respects constitutional for the reasons I have outlined and would be fair, prompt, and efficacious in a far higher degree than the present method of impeachment. Practically the only objection to it would be because of its novelty or because it runs counter to our long-accepted theory of historical tradition and exclusiveness of the remedy of impeachment. As contrasted, however, with the process of impeachment, it would, besides being more efficacious, be fairer to the accused and fairer to the courts. It would, at the same time, fully preserve the rights and powers of Congress aside from the fact that the impeachment procedure would still continue to exist and could be resorted to by Congress whenever impeachment should appear preferable.

The procedure I have outlined would be in all respects fair to an accused judge. It would give to him the benefit of a trial in a regular court of law, sitting exclusively to determine the question of his guilt or innocence, and unencumbered and uninterrupted by other duties during the period of the trial. The procedure would be fair to the courts, because it would place in their own hands the determination of the judicial question of the guilt or innocence of a member of the judiciary. It would not impose upon them the performance of any nonjudicial task and would invoke their cooperation in a matter in which they should be supremely interested, namely, the preservation of the honor and integrity of the judicial office.

At this point I wish to add that it is my firm conviction, after such studies as I have made of this subject, that the term "good behavior", as used in the Constitution, is a justiciable question, and that the Congress, under the authority conferred upon it, has the power to create a tribunal to try that issue whenever it shall be raised in a proper manner.

The procedure I am suggesting would in no way diminish or cut down the privileges or prerogatives of the Congress. The Congress would be free, whenever it so desired, to resort to the existing process of impeachment. At the same time the Congress could set in motion the alternative procedure by a majority vote of both Houses directing the Attorney General to institute a suit under the new removal method, as I have already stated, and I merely repeat it to emphasize the point. The freedom of action of the Congress would thus in all respects be preserved.

So far as relates to the power of the Attorney General to initiate such a proceeding, what I propose would in no way hamper or restrict the judiciary. All that the Attorney General could do would be to set in motion a procedure exclusively judicial in character, conducted entirely through the courts and depending for its results upon action by a court. The fate of the accused judge would be exclusively in the hands of the judicial department. The court which would be empowered to pass upon his guilt would be a court consisting of judges of high character, independence, and ability, thereby being vested with the fullest possible guaranty of its impartiality; and, finally, the accused would have the benefit, which he does not now have, of an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States on any question of law involved. Surely no judge could object to the impartiality or the appropriateness of such a method for determining charges of misconduct brought against him.

With such a procedure in existence for the removal of judges guilty of misconduct, the administration of justice in our lower Federal courts would be held to a far higher standard of strict accountability than at present. No longer could judges, who are careless of their responsibilities, trade upon the uncertainties of the impeachment process and profit by the likelihood of never having to answer for their conduct before the bar of justice. That, in my opinion, is one of the most serious objections to the remedy of impeachment. No longer would this body face the prospect of having from year to year to devote an increasing amount of its time to sitting as a Court of Impeachment, and thereby having to neglect its already heavy responsibilities in other directions, if the purity of the Federal bench is to be maintained.

The time is upon us when we can no longer postpone the necessity of supplementing and reinforcing the process of impeachment by additional means to maintain the purity of the bench.

I therefore introduce and send to the desk a tentative draft of a bill embodying the suggestions I have made, and request that it be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks. I also request that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be received, printed in the RECORD, and referred, as requested by the Senator from California.

The bill (S. 4527) to provide for the judicial determination of charges of misconduct in office by judges of courts of the United States other than the Supreme Court of the United States, and for removal from office of justices against whom such charges shall be proved, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

A bill to provide for the judicial determination of charges of misconduct in office by judges of courts of the United States other than the Supreme Court of the United States, and for removal from office of justices against whom such charges shall be proved

Be it enacted, etc., That a court to be called the "High Court for the Trial of Judicial Officers" is hereby established, to be composed of 10 judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, ranking in point of seniority in service, one to be drawn from each circuit, together with the chief justice of the United States District Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, who shall be the presiding judge or justice thereof.

SEC. 2. The jurisdiction of the said court shall be confined exclusively to the trial and determination of charges which may be brought against judges of the inferior courts of the United States as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. The said court shall have all the powers of a district court of the United States to compel the appearance of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence: Provided, That the process of such court shall run throughout the United States and all Territories subject to jurisdiction thereof.

SEC. 4. The said court shall meet semiannually in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, on the first Monday in May and November of each year for the trial of such cases as may be on the docket of said court: Provided, however, That the said court shall not convene at the time and place hereinabove named unless the Attorney General shall, in writing, notify each member of the said court 30 days in advance of the regular sessions herein provided that there are on the docket of said court cases for the consideration of the court.

SEC. 5. Said judges are authorized to appoint a clerk and such other officers and employees as in their opinion may be needed; and the funds for the payment of such officers and employees and for the other expenses of the court shall be appropriated by the Congress.

SEC. 6. The Attorney General of the United States is hereby authorized to receive and to make careful and thorough investigation of complaints which may be lodged with him against any judge or judges of the inferior courts of the United States. If, as a result of such investigation or investigations, the Attorney General shall conclude that a proceeding in quo warranto should be brought against any such judge or judges, he shall thereupon institute proceedings in said court for the removal from office for misconduct or misbehavior of any judge holding office under the authority of the United States, other than a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, and shall set forth the charges against the defendant judge and pray for a judgment of removal of such defendant from office; and thereafter the proceeding shall, so far as practicable, conform to the proceeding on an information in the nature of a quo warranto for ouster from office for misconduct.

SEC. 6. Said court may make rules and orders directing the return of writs and processes, the filing of pleadings, the taking of rules, the entering and making up of judgments by default, and otherwise regulate its practice as may be necessary or convenient for the advancement of justice and the prevention of delays in proceedings.

SEC. 7. At the conclusion of the hearing and argument in the cause it shall be the duty of the court to cause a written opinion to be filed in the cause, setting forth the specific findings of the court of the facts therein and the conclusions of the court upon all questions of law involved in the cause and to render judgment thereon. Such judgment shall be either for dismissal of the information and charges or for the removal of the defendant from office. In the event the judgment shall be for removal from office, the defendant may have an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States on all questions of law, subject to such rules governing such appeals as the Supreme Court of the United States may prescribe.

SEC. 8. In the event that a judgment of removal shall have been affirmed by the Supreme Court or in the event that no appeal to the Supreme Court from the judgment of such high court shall have been taken within the period prescribed by any rule or regulation made in pursuance of this act, a certified copy of such judgment shall immediately be transmitted by the presiding judge to the President of the United States and upon such transmittal the office of the judge against whom such judgment shall have been entered shall at once become vacant and the President of the United States shall be empowered to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a successor to such judge.

SEC. 9. Removal of a judge from office under the procedure provided by this act shall not be a bar to criminal prosecution of the judge so removed for any criminal offense which may have served as a basis for such judgment of removal.

SEC. 10. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit or impair the right and power of Congress to impeach judges for misconduct.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says that as a practical proposition the power of impeachment would still remain. Let us suppose a judge was tried before such a court as suggested by the Senator and that he was acquitted; then would it not be practically impossible successfully to impeach him regardless of the merits of the case? Would there not be so much moral force in the fact that the court had absolved the judge as to make it practically impossible to get a verdict against him?

Mr. McADOO. It is not my thought, I may say to the Senator from Texas, that there would still reside the power of impeachment after the court had acted. If the court first took jurisdiction clearly the impeachment power would not be resorted to. It would be exclusive of that. What I mean to say is that before the court takes jurisdiction and even upon the direction of Congress to the Attorney General that in any particular instance he must not file or that he should file a quo warranto under the proposed act, the House would still be free to consider a case and to present impeachment to the Senate, in which event the Senate would still be free to try it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does not the Senator's proposal to turn over to the courts themselves the trial of inferior judges run counter to the whole theory of the constitutional provision regarding impeachment, which is that the Senate by reason of its being an independent branch of the Government is a check on the judiciary? If we turn over to the judiciary the supervision of its own conduct, are we not destroying one of the most wholesome provisions of the Constitution in that regard?

Mr. McADOO. I do not propose that that provision be destroyed. I am proposing an alternative. It seems to me it is clearly appropriate to confer upon a special court the power to discipline the judges of the inferior courts. Impeachment is rarely resorted to; and when resorted to, the result is involved in great uncertainty. As I have read the record of impeachments, I think several guilty judges have escaped. It is almost impossible to keep 96 judges in their seats to hear the evidence in impeachment cases and the arguments of counsel, and it is almost impossible for any political body to divest itself wholly of its legislative and political character and to assume effectively and successfully the judicial quality which I think is necessary in the determination of impeachment cases.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, let me state to the Senator that the theory of impeachment is a blending, as it were, of the judicial power and the very political power of which the Senator complains. That was the theory of impeachment from the beginning, as I understand it. Would it not be preferable for the Senate to delegate to a committee the hearing of the evidence, which we can do under the Constitution, and for the Senate to act upon the report of the committee, rather than to delegate that power to some court somewhere? I am in sympathy with the Senator's desire to secure more prompt action in impeachment cases, but still I approach the question probably from a conservative viewpoint, hesitating to abandon the old theory.

The Senator referred to the removal of subordinate officers. The theory of removal of subordinate officers is based on the idea that since Congress creates an office it may fix the tenure. In the Humphrey case that tenure was prescribed. It was prescribed that he could only be removed for certain causes. Therefore the Supreme Court held that until those causes arose and the facts were determined he could hold his office. The Senator will remember, however, that the original theory was that the President could remove all Government officers, but not the judiciary, of course, because the judiciary is provided for in a separate and specific article of the Constitution.

In the first Congress which met under the Constitution there was an extended debate, participated in by Mr. Madison and others, on the contention that the President had the right as an incident of the power to appoint, to remove all subordinate officers where the Constitution did not prohibit it. In the Constitution, however, it is provided that the President—

Shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law.

Under that provision, since we have the power to create the office, we have the power to determine its tenure. Therefore we could leave the period of tenure absolutely blank and allow the President, if we saw fit, to remove the officer at will. Of course, that does not apply to judges. However, in the case of judges the Constitution specifically provides that they shall hold office——

Mr. McADOO. During good behavior.

Mr. CONNALLY. During good behavior. Therefore they have a life tenure.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I shall be glad to yield in a moment. I do not agree with the distinguished Senator from Texas in some of his conclusions. I wish to repeat that I do not mean by any action we may take here to exclude resort to impeachment.

It is always within our power to resort to impeachment if the House prefers charges. I am proposing an alternative method which, I think, if adopted, would have the most salutary effect upon the courts of the United States, because it would assure prompt investigation of complaints, many of which are legitimate, against the conduct of judges who feel they cannot be held to swift, if any, accountability. When I say that, I do not mean by any means to imply that every judge is recreant to his duty. I think the great majority of judges are men of character and responsibility, and that they discharge their duties with a high conception of the obligations of their office; but so long as judges feel, as many undoubtedly do feel, that they have a life tenure and that they can do very much as they please on the bench, without accountability to anybody, abuses of a serious character occur in many instances, abuses which I think will be developed and presented to the Senate in due season by the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McADOO. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. I have listened to the suggestions of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] with much interest, and I have listened to the argument made by the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] with even a greater degree of interest, because, it seems to me, he is dealing with a question that has been long neglected. If I understand the contention of the Senator from California, the plan which he proposes would in no way interfere with the impeachment of judges for high crimes and misdemeanors, but considering the section of the Constitution where we find the provision that judges shall hold office during good behavior, is it the opinion of the Senator from California that a judge might be guilty of misbehavior or be lacking in good behavior which would justify his removal although he might not be guilty of any offense that would justify his removal by impeachment?

Mr. McADOO. That is my decided opinion, I may say to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. How could a man be impeached because he was ignorant of the law and decided questions erroneously or because his mind had "gone bad" on him or his habits had become bad? That would not be ground for impeachment if there was nothing evil behind it all. But it is not good behavior on his part if he cannot discharge the duties of the office, and he might be removed under the plan suggested by the Senator from California without casting any stigma at all upon him or charging him with a criminal offense.

Mr. McADOO. Precisely. My view of the matter is that the jurisdiction of the proposed court should be confined solely to the question of good behavior of a judge, and not beyond, and that punishment should be confined solely to removal from office.

If in the course of investigation before the high court I have suggested it should be developed that the judge had been guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors, then, in conformity with the Constitution, he might be prosecuted in a court of competent jurisdiction and, upon conviction, punished under the criminal laws.

Mr. LOGAN. I fully agree with that, but I wonder if the Senator has considered this phase of the situation: The expression "during good behavior" has given me trouble for 40 years. I have wondered who is going to determine when a judge was of good behavior. I wonder if the Senator has thought that when the President appoints a man to a position as a judge he is appointed only during good behavior, and if the time comes when he is not of good behavior his tenure is over; and that the Senate is called upon to confirm the nomination of a judge, but he is only confirmed in office during good behavior? Would it be possible, may I ask the Senator, for the Senate of the United States to have such a committee as might be necessary to make investigation of the conduct of inferior judges, and submit a report to the Senate through its Judiciary Committee, and if it should be found that the judge was not of good behavior, could not the Senate withdraw its confirmation and thereby end the tenure of the judge?

Mr. McADOO. I doubt it, although I confess that I have not considered that question seriously. I doubt if the Senate could withdraw confirmation once made, because I do not think that the Senate by such procedure could properly render a decision of such distinctly judicial character. A committee of the Senate would have to conduct a trial under the Senator's suggestion, as I understand, to determine the validity of the charges.

Mr. LOGAN. It would do exactly what it does in the first place when a nomination is sent in. The nominee is not confirmed unless he is of good behavior. The Senate makes its investigations through its committees, and finding that the nominee is of good behavior and that he is fit for the office his nomination is confirmed, not forever, not during life, but during good behavior. Does the Senate have the power to limit that confirmation to such period of time as he is of good behavior; and if, upon investigation, the same authority finds he is not of good behavior, could it withdraw its confirmation and the judge be deprived of his office? We do remove them that way indirectly. The President can appoint a judge as soon as the present session of Congress adjourns; and the judge can enter upon the office and qualify and serve, and his acts are legal; but when Congress meets again, if the Senate should be of the opinion that he is not such a man as should be confirmed, and should refuse to confirm him, he would be at the end and would be removed from office by the Senate itself.

Mr. McADOO. In that event, of course, he would not have acquired complete title to the office; he would be holding it on sufferance as an interim appointee. I may say to the Senator that I think the fault of his argument consists in this—and the suggestion he has made is very interesting—that the Senate alone does not make the judges. It requires an Executive appointment in the first instance before the Senate can consider the nomination.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, yes. I was going a little further, may I say? Somone must determine when a judge is guilty of misconduct or when he is not on his good behavior. The appointing power is in the President. Suppose he reports to the Senate that a certain judge is not of good behavior. Therefore his tenure is ended and the Senate then withdraws its confirmation. I am not saying that that can be done; I am merely suggesting that what the Senator has said this morning brings up some very interesting points and that I do want to consider them. I do not know whether or not the Senate could withdraw its confirmation, but we do not give a judge complete title forever to office when we confirm his nomination; we only give him title so long as he is of good behavior; and if we should determine that he was not of good behavior, I do not know but that we could withdraw the confirmation and end the term of the judge.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I will yield in just a moment. My feeling about it is, I may say to my able friend from Kentucky, that the "good behavior" as used in the Constitution, to repeat, is essentially a justiciable question, and the Congress, which creates the inferior courts has, since the foundation of the Republic, never attempted to assert its power by the creation of any authority to determine the question of good behavior in a judge. That is what I am contending we have the right to do, and that we should do now. Of course both Houses of Congress would have to enact such legislation. The power undoubtedly resides in Congress to create a tribunal to determine this justiciable question. As to that I am confirmed by my studies beyond a reasonable doubt. At the same time I do not mean to assert that my conclusions are infallible. It is an immensely interesting subject, and my chief purpose in making this presentation here today is to arouse a discussion of it.

It is, of course, a problem of growing and vital importance to the country. I think it is essential that some means shall be found to deal with it more efficaciously, more certainly, and more promptly than by the process of impeachment.

Now I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator's bill define "good behavior"?

Mr. McADOO. It does not.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then the Senator's bill would transfer the authority of determining what is good behavior to a court?

Mr. McADOO. It would, because, as I have previously said, I consider that a distinctly justiciable question, to be determined by the facts and law as presented in each case.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then the court, under the Senator's bill, rather than the Senate itself, would set up the rules which determine the tenure of judges?

Mr. McADOO. No; I do not say so; but I think if preferable to give judges a right of trial before an impartial court. If the plan I propose should be adopted, the judges would be tried before a high court, a dignified court, composed of men of ability and character, and that court would determine whether, upon the evidence presented, the case as made out justified a judgment of removal. The whole proceeding is in the nature of a quo warranto—that is what it gets down to—and I think it would be a more certain, effective, and expeditious method of dealing with the problem than by a trial before the whole Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator believe that under the Constitution a judge may be removed for reasons different from those for which any other civil officer may be removed?

Mr. McADOO. I think in that respect there is some limitation in the provision of the Constitution, because, although the term "good behavior" is so comprehensive that it includes, as the distinguished Senator from Kentucky said a moment ago, offenses which cannot be invested with the quality of a high crime or misdemeanor——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I agree with the Senator on that.

Mr. McADOO. Yet neglect of duty, for instance, malfeasance, and many other things enter into the subject of good behavior that are not denominated offenses.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator believe that it would be preferable in legislation of this kind to define exactly what we mean by good behavior in order to prevent arbitrary or whimsical action, so to speak, upon the part of the removing court?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McADOO. May I interject for a moment in reply to my good friend from Wyoming?

I think any attempt at definition of the term "good behavior" would be dangerous, because it might exclude many things that ought to be comprehended within the term.

Not only that, but I think under the Constitution we might not have the power to define "good behavior." We have the power to determine it under impeachment, as we have done in the cases which have been brought before this body.

I think in the case just tried many Senators voted—indeed, some Senators who are not lawyers have talked to me about it and said they voted "not guilty" on some of the counts because the charge was "high crimes and misdemeanors." They did not consider that phrase in the technical sense in which it is used among lawyers, but they would have voted "guilty", they said, if misbehavior alone had been charged in the count. We have the right to determine that, of course.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the constitutional Court of Impeachment cannot define "good behavior", how can it transfer the practical right of determining it to a Federal court?

Mr. McADOO. I say the Senate has a right to define it when the issue is brought before it, but I do not think we can define it by statute.

I am glad now to yield to my friend the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the word "removal" has been used frequently in connection with this argument. I do not think that is appropriate. Under the proceedings the Senator is proposing to set up, we would not remove a judge from office. We would simply notify him under proper procedure that his tenure was over, that his term was ended, and therefore he would just step out.

Mr. McADOO. The Senator would merely terminate his tenure?

Mr. LOGAN. That is all.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN CRIMINALS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2969) to authorize the deportation of criminals, to guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the noncriminal classes, to provide for legalizing the residence in the United States of certain classes of aliens, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chavez	Holt	O'Mahoney
Ashurst	Clark	Johnson	Overton
Austin	Connally	Keyes	Pittman
Bachman	Coolidge	King	Pope
Bailey	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Barbour	Couzens	Logan	Reynolds
Barkley	Davis	Lonergan	Robinson
Benson	Dickinson	Long	Russell
Bilbo	Dieterich	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Black	Donahey	McGill	Sheppard
Bone	Duffy	McKellar	Shipstead
Borah	Fletcher	McNary	Steiwer
Brown	Frazier	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	George	Metcalf	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Gerry	Minton	Townsend
Burke	Gibson	Moore	Truman
Byrd	Glass	Murphy	Tydings
Byrnes	Hale	Murray	Vandenberg
Capper	Harrison	Neely	Wagner
Caraway	Hatch	Norris	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	Nye	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] yesterday suggested an amendment to the pending bill. I am instructed by the members of the committee to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] to recommit the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I wish to say that it is my understanding that the question before the Senate is the motion made by me to recommit the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I insist upon that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course, the motion is debatable.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, without this being charged to my time, I assume that it was announced this morning, when the roll was called, that our beloved colleague the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is absent. I learned from the columns of the newspapers—although I knew it before—that the Senator from Illinois is in my State of North Carolina, where on last evening he addressed the Bar Association of Western North Carolina, at which time hundreds of the citizens of North Carolina were invited to be present and hear the address of the Senator from Illinois on the subject of International Affairs.

I take pleasure in availing myself at this time of the privilege of reading a press notice from Asheville, N. C., as to what the Senator said; and, incidentally, I may now address this body upon international affairs, as I understand that, in view of the fact that I have the floor, this statement cannot be charged to my time upon the pending bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should not accede to the statement made by the Senator, because, in my opinion, the understanding which we reached would preclude the Senator, while the bill is before the Senate, from occupying a period in excess of the time agreed upon. If the opposite were true, the Senator might speak upon a multitude of questions while the bill is under consideration, and, depending upon his physical ability, hold the floor for an indefinite period.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Presiding Officer of this body that I did make an agreement with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the effect that I would confine the remainder of my remarks upon the pending bill to a period and duration of 3 hours, and I shall now undertake to answer the inquiry directed to me on yesterday by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], at which time he inquired why I had agreed to limit my argument to a period and duration of 3 hours. I did not answer the inquiry then, but circumstances now are such that I feel it my duty to myself and to those who are interested with me in the question before us, which is of more importance than any other question before the American Senate today, to reply.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I cannot yield now.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. KING. The Senator from North Carolina has 44 minutes to his credit. He may not, under the rules, under the guise of answering a question which relates to the agreement and to the subject under discussion, talk indefinitely. I raise the point of order that he is now consuming a part of his 44 minutes. I want to be fair to him, and advise him that such is the parliamentary status.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from North Carolina that he may talk on anything he desires to discuss, but his time started at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I raise the point, Mr. President, that I have a perfect right at this time to speak upon any subject I desire to debate if I do not talk about the pending bill. I have the floor. I made an agreement to limit my argument upon the pending bill to 3 hours, and I will state to the Presiding Officer of this body that I did not make an agreement not to talk upon any other subject. I now state that I am ready to talk upon international affairs, world trade. Perhaps I will talk about the Great Smoky Mountain National Park of western North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from North Carolina that in a parliamentary sense he is speaking on the bill.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. I desire to give notice that later during the day I shall move to reconsider the vote by which the so-called tobacco-compact bill was passed.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I make the point that I am talking about the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and I wish to read what the Senator from Illinois stated last night in his address in North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian of the Senate informs the Chair that the Senator from North Carolina is speaking on the pending bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Then I shall not speak. [Laughter.] I prefer to wait until the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has spoken. I understand that I have 45 minutes left, and I desire to use all of the 45 minutes in answering the Senator from Utah, who favors the passage of the pending bill.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, permit me to inquire from what law or rule the Chair or the Senate derives the power to enforce private agreements between Senators to limit debate in this body?

The Senate has not adopted and probably never will adopt a general rule to restrict the freedom of senatorial speech.

The distinguished Senator Underwood, of Alabama, vigorously and eloquently advocated the passage of the last practical cloture measure that was seriously considered by the Senate. That measure was so decisively defeated that from the day of its rejection until this hour no Senator has had sufficient temerity to attempt to amend the Senate rules so as to interfere with the freedom of speech in this Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from North Carolina entered into an agreement which he now does not wish to stand by, he is at liberty, of course, to reject the agreement.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, has either the Chair or the Senate any power to enforce any private agreement between Senators concerning debate in this body?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from West Virginia that the Chair has no such power, and if the Senator from North Carolina wishes to repudiate his agreement with the Senator with whom he agreed, that is up to him.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. The Senator from West Virginia has not stated the situation quite accurately. It was not an agreement alone with the Senator from Utah; it was an agreement with the leader on this side, and an understanding with other Senators, notably, the colleague of the Senator from North Carolina, who were anxious to have the tobacco-compact bill taken up, and we who are in favor of the pending bill consented to permit the tobacco bill to be taken up, providing the debate, so far as the Senator from North Carolina was concerned, was to be limited to 3 hours; and he was very glad to accede to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is nothing in the RECORD about the agreement, and therefore it is just a gentleman's agreement between Senators, and they can repudiate it, stick by it, or modify it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in reference to the word the Chair employed, "repudiate", I desire to state that I have never given my word to any Member of this body at any time about anything that I did not keep it; and I declare to the Members of this body, all of whom I admire, and for all of whom I have deep affection, regardless of who they are, and all of whom I am constantly boosting and never knocking, that I will never repudiate anything I say to any Member or any gathering of Members of this body. I propose to stand by my word, which is my word of honor, and is as good as if I had sworn upon Holy Writ itself, to limit my discussion and debate on this matter to a period and duration of 3 hours.

I am now directing the attention of the clerk to the fact that I do not consider the time I am now taking to be chargeable to my remaining 44 minutes, but, in view of the fact that this matter has arisen, I desire to state to the Senate, so that my constituents in North Carolina may know, so that all of the patriotic societies of the United States, which include the Daughters of the American Revolution, 5,000 strong, who are assembled in the Capital today, my reason for limiting my argument to 3 hours upon this all-important subject.

I am glad the Daughters of the American Revolution are assembled here. I am glad that the mothers of this country, whose forefathers stood by the red, white, and blue of the flag which stands behind the presiding officer of the Senate at the present time, are in the Capital today in order that they may know where I stand on this question.

Mr. President, what is the question? It is, Do you, Senator REYNOLDS, stand for the American or do you stand for the alien? To all those who now sit within the sound of my voice I repeat, I stand for the American. Therefore, I stand here declaring to the world that I am against the Kerr-Coolidge bill, because, I repeat, unhesitatingly and unblushingly, it is an un-American bill.

Mr. President, I will tell the American Legion; I will tell the Veterans of Foreign Wars; I will tell the Disabled Veterans of the World War; I will tell half a dozen other World War veterans' organizations; I will tell the 500,000 members of the Junior Order United American Mechanics; I will tell 500,000 trainmen, brakemen, conductors, firemen, engineers; I will tell thousands upon thousands of Daughters of the American Revolution and their sons and daughters and grandsons and granddaughters; I will tell the Sons of the American Revolution and their sons and daughters and grandsons and granddaughters; I will tell the Patriotic Order of the Sons of America; I will tell the millions of members of the 110 patriotic societies of America, whose cause I am endeavoring in my feeble way to champion here today, why I have been limited to 3 hours. It is because I was forced into it against my will.

How did it happen? I desire to take this opportunity to thank the Members of the Senate who recognized the embarrassing position in which I found myself, through no fault of my own, who came to me voluntarily and said, "I see the predicament you are in. It is a personal predicament you are in. It is no fault of yours. I will help you out of it." I wish to thank them for volunteering their services to me, to help me get out of the embarrassing situation. But the time did not come when I could have a vote on my motion in the Senate. If there had been a vote on it, the motion I made would have carried, because I had the support of those who recognized the embarrassing position in which I was placed. What was it? On Friday, April 3, and Saturday, April 4, it is true that I consumed almost the entire session of the Senate talking about the immigration question, fighting the pending bill, and I say to my colleagues that I have no apologies to make to any Member of this body for that. I have no apologies to make, because I was talking for the men and women of America who are interested in holding up the standards set by your forefathers. I took up that time in an attempt to defeat the bill which is before us now, and I have no apologies to make for what I did.

But, lo and behold, like lightning out of the clear sky, the bill known as the tobacco-compact bill came before us. That bill came to us from the House. It had been passed by the House, according to my recollection, by a vote of about 190 to 116. It was immediately sent to the Senate, and, thanks to those in charge of the business of the Senate at that time, it was read twice so that a motion could be made to consider it. There are 97,000 tobacco farmers in North Carolina, and I know personally about 50,000 of them. I smoke cigarettes, Mr. President, and, according to what my colleague the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] said the other day, they are the best cigarettes on earth because they are made in North Carolina, from North Carolina tobacco. I know 50,000 tobacco-growing farmers in North Carolina, because I have ridden up every 'possum trail and walked down every stream in my State.

I used to chew tobacco. We all have to learn the ways of our friends. With every chew of tobacco I took, however, I made a vote or two, and I have not forgotten how to chew tobacco. [Laughter.]

I knew that those 97,000 farmers in North Carolina wanted the tobacco bill passed, and I further knew that I wanted them to continue to be my friends, because I shall run again for the Senate two years from now. I wanted all 97,000 of them to be my friends, and I was willing to do anything I could to help those 97,000 farmers. But, lo and behold, I was caught. The immigration bill was before us for action, and then there came the tobacco bill from the House, having been passed there, and we had to pass that tobacco bill this week in order that the tobacco farmers of North Carolina might be availed the opportunity of profiting by it if they saw fit. It will be necessary to call an extra session of the Legislature in North Carolina in order to take action in connection with the tobacco bill. Thousands of farmers marched upon the capitol at Raleigh the other day demanding that the Governor of North Carolina call an extra session of the legislature.

The immigration bill was before us. My colleague the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] wanted the immigration bill to be acted upon. I wanted the immigration bill laid aside until we could pass the tobacco bill, but I could not get that done. I would not agree to limit my argument upon this question; but, lo and behold, the tobacco bill was taken up. Then my colleague from Utah told me that he would filibuster against the tobacco bill; and I knew that would defeat the wishes of the 97,000 tobacco farmers of North Carolina; and they would promptly swear that BOB REYNOLDS was responsible. So I said, "If you will not filibuster I will agree to take just 3 hours." That is how the agreement happened to be made. That is how I happened to agree to limit my remarks to a period of 3 hours. My colleague the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] made inquiry of me concerning that matter yesterday. I did not then want to tell the people about it, but the argument had been brought before the Senate concerning how much time I had and why I was limited, and some Members stated that I could not commit myself or anybody else to 3 hours. However, that is the way the limitation occurred.

Mr. President, having explained my position I desire to read what our dear friend the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] said in North Carolina the other day. I am not taking this time out of my 44 minutes. The Senator from Illinois in addressing the members of the bar of western North Carolina made certain remarks which I should like incorporated in the RECORD. I wish to say that the Senator from Illinois is very popular in North Carolina. We are always anxious to have him there. We love him as much in North Carolina as do the people of Illinois. I happen to know they do love him in Illinois.

I was in Illinois last summer and talked with scores and scores of people of all classes, from the most humble citizen to those living in the finer sections of the cities, and they had nothing but love and affection and fine things to say about their Senator. I quote from the press dispatch:

LEWIS URGES ISOLATION

ASHEVILLE, N. C., April 23.—Senator LEWIS (Democrat), of Illinois, last night called for a new American foreign policy based on isolation from the League of Nations, promotion of an inter-American peace union, and promulgation of an unbiased international law acceptable to all nations.

Addressing the eastern division, North Carolina Bar Association, the veteran Senate Foreign Relations Committee member said:

"America should set forth a new doctrine of international law, holding all nations in balance through obedience to regulations which give no preference or special license."

I am happy to have had the opportunity to read that news dispatch, which in a sense brings to our mind the fact that a proposal was made on the floor of the Senate that we enter the back door of the League of Nations by way of the World Court, and I believe most of us recognize now that if we had been in the League of Nations, with Sir Anthony Eden directing the affairs of Great Britain, and every other country, incidentally, which has been affiliated with the League of Nations, probably oil sanctions would have been brought about with the aid of the United States, and we would have been involved in another world war, all of which would have been attributable to our endeavoring to keep Italy out of Ethiopia.

Mr. President, why is Italy in Ethiopia? Charge an additional minute to my time. Italy is in Ethiopia because she is conducting a war of conquest of territory in order that her surplus population, resulting from the annual increase in population of 750,000 may be placed in Ethiopia upon the soil of the African Continent. Such action has become necessary to Italy by reason of our having raised the immigration bars in this country. Before the American people raised their immigration bars almost 50,000 Italians came to the United States annually. When those gates were raised, however, with the aid of the Daughters of the American Revolution and the Sons thereof, the great American Federation of Labor, the American Legion, and other military organizations who saved the world for Christianity and democracy, Italy had to find a new outlet. So she went down into Africa to snatch off a slice of land about the size of the State of California to provide an outlet for the yearly increase in her population of 500,000 to 750,000. If we had not raised the bars against immigration to this country; if the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Sons of the American Revolution, and all the rest of the organizations that are fighting this vicious, un-American bill tooth and toenail, had not stood at the floodgates and closed them with all their might and all their strength, Italy never would have had a war with Ethiopia. She would have had no reason to do so, because she already owned Italian Somaliland.

I yield the floor for the time being.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, for several years efforts have been made to break down vital provisions of the immigration laws, but Congress has refused so far to take away this protection from the wage earners of our country. Inasmuch as American wage earners are fundamentally affected by immigration policies it will not be out of place to call attention to the attitude of the largest labor organization in our country toward this measure.

I am advised that a committee appointed by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor made a thorough investigation of this measure and declared that under no circumstances would labor approve of section 3.

According to its sponsors this bill was the outcome of the report of what was known as the Ellis Island committee. Forty-eight residents of New York were appointed to make a thorough investigation of immigration with the view of submitting legislation to Congress. No representative of the American Federation of Labor was on that committee. Neither President Green nor any other officer of the American Federation of Labor was asked to detail a representative to act for the American Federation of Labor.

Based on the report of this committee five bills were introduced, each of them having some provisions to weaken the immigration laws. Members of Congress who believe that the immigration laws should be tightened instead of weakened fought these bills until finally one measure was written, and it is now before the United States Senate for action.

The outstanding feature of the bill is the provision leaving it to the discretion of an interdepartmental committee as to whether any illegal entrant shall be deported. Section 3 provides that the interdepartmental committee may permit to remain in the United States any alien who entered the country illegally other than those deportable under the law enacted relating to prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons, if the alien is of good moral character and has not been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude.

If I am correctly advised, no such power, in our past history, has ever been given to any representative of the Government.

Under this bill three persons, appointed by the Secretaries of Labor, State, and Justice could permit, as they saw fit, anyone who has entered the country illegally to remain here if he—

(1) Has lived continuously in the United States for a period of not less than 10 years; or

(2) Has lived continuously in the United States for at least 1 year and has living in the United States a parent, spouse, legally recognized child, or, if a minor, a brother or sister, who has been lawfully admitted for permanent residence or is a citizen of the United States.

This bill provides that any alien not ineligible to citizenship as to whom there is no record of admission for permanent residence who has been permitted to remain in the United States in accordance with subdivision (a) of this section shall be recorded as admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the order permitting him to remain upon payment of a fee of $18 to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, such fees to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

It must not be forgotten that under present law illegal entry is a prison offense, and undoubtedly that provision would be repealed if the authority proposed were granted to the committee. If the bill becomes a law the deportation provisions of the immigration laws will be made discretionary instead of mandatory.

There are still millions of the unemployed in the United States, and I cannot understand how anyone can advocate legislation that will put a premium on the illegal entry of aliens. It is a permanent law that is proposed, and after 3 years it will be enforced by the Bureau of Immigration. There are millions of persons in foreign countries who are anxious to come to the United States, even under present conditions. If this bill is enacted it will be possible for many of them to steal into the country, hoping for security in the power given the interdepartmental committee by section 3.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Gladly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Has the Senator seen the amendment that was adopted by the committee and reported to the bill which limits that authority to 3 years? Does the Senator realize that the interdepartmental committee will not exist after 3 years?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand that, but I can anticipate that this limitation may be dissipated before the 3 years are over by additional legislation if the camel once gets his nose under the tent.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In other words, if he gets his foot in the door, he is going to open the door?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Does the Senator know how many aliens there are in this country today who are subject to deportation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not know the exact number.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course not, because we have no registration; but would the Senator give us an estimate as to the number of aliens who are in this country today who are not entitled to be here?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think it would require a special census to determine the number. If I am not mistaken, the bill of the Senator from North Carolina has some provision of that kind.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Would the Senator say there are anywhere from a million on?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Easily.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Is the Senator of the opinion that we ought first to ascertain the number who are here illegally before we delegate any power?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Most certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. Especially when statements are being made that there are a million or more here illegally?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Does the Senator understand that the interdepartmental committee, which it is proposed to set up under one of the sections of this bill, will have 3 years in which to pass upon the question of whether or not an alien shall stay or be deported?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That was the statement of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Excuse me; I did not hear the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I believe the Senator from Vermont made the statement that an amendment had been proposed limiting the authority of the committee to 3 years.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Does the Senator understand that the interdepartmental committee which, in all probability, will be functioning by way of clerks from each of the Departments of State, Labor, and Justice, will have an opportunity to pass upon thousands upon thousands of other cases?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Unquestionably.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Does the Senator understand that this bill does not merely affect the small number of 2,862? Does not the Senator understand that the 2,862 cases are merely a come-on, or sugar?

Mr. SHEPPARD. According to my understanding of the situation the Senator is correct.

Mr. President, is it possible that the United States Senate will approve a measure that will increase the number of unemployed in the United States? Can it be possible that the misunderstanding that has existed for months in reference to this measure has influenced any Member of the Senate to give it approval?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the original discussion by the committee concerning this bill occurred so many weeks ago that I wish, on behalf of the committee, very briefly to discuss the provisions of the measure in order that we may recollect, despite what I consider to be very misleading suggestions which have been made about it, exactly what this bill is about.

Senators who have spoken in opposition to the bill have very carefully avoided discussing the portions of the bill which not only do not permit aliens to enter or to remain but which very definitely provide for the deportation of criminal aliens. Section 1 of the bill refers exclusively to a tightening of the present deportation laws so as to enable the Government to deport criminal aliens.

The Department of Labor estimates that there are available for deportation on the ground of criminal activity an average of 4,000 a year, and that at the present time, because of defects in the present law, we are able to deport only 1,700. Under the provisions of this bill, if enacted, there would be made immediately available for deportation a total of 20,000 criminal aliens now in this country, and it would mean that from the time of the enactment of the bill an average of 2,300 more per year would be available for deportation than are available at the present time. So when Senators talk about this bill as being one which opens up the gates, as being one which makes it possible for aliens to remain here who are not entitled to remain here, they are not presenting the actual facts about the bill, because, under the terms of the bill, 20,000 criminal aliens will be immediately available for deportation, and, in addition, 2,300 each year.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator is making the statement that 20,000 will be deported. Will he also tell us the number that would be left behind? An alien engaged in the narcotic business or the bootlegging business and deported would probably leave behind a wife and a family.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania mean to intimate that he is objecting to this bill because of the fact that, if enacted, it would leave behind the relatives of criminal aliens?

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, no.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Then why is the Senator raising the question?

Mr. DAVIS. I am asking the Senator if he can give us an estimate as to the number.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; I cannot give an estimate. The Senator from Pennsylvania was Secretary of Labor for a number of years; nothing was done about this subject during that period of time, and I cannot give him an estimate.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Until I get through I will not yield. The attempt, in connection with this bill, to raise a camouflage, the attempt to raise a smoke screen about a condition of affairs which the Senator from Pennsylvania had more of an opportunity to correct than did anyone else in this country, is not justified. The Senator from Pennsylvania occupied the position of Secretary of Labor for a longer period than anybody else has occupied it, and because he did not take action during the time of his administration and did not do anything about it when the Republican Party was in power, now to try to raise that as an objection to this bill, in my opinion, does not evidence any degree of logic. This bill is a deportation bill. If it is desired to pass the bill the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] has introduced providing for the registration of aliens, the committee would say to the Senator from North Carolina that they will be glad to hear him on that bill, they will give him plenty of time and opportunity to bring in all his witnesses, but he will not take advantage of that. For the last 4 weeks the pending bill——

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes, I yield; but I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to refer to this bill and not to some other bill that has not anything to do with it.

Mr. DAVIS. I am referring particularly to this bill, and I ask the Senator if the number who would remain behind——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I have said I do not know the number.

Mr. DAVIS. Could not go to the interdepartmental committee with their plea for justice and ask the committee to permit the criminal aliens in whom they were interested to remain or come back?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. DAVIS. Just a moment. I want to ask the Senator about deportation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am not going to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania if he is going to make misstatements like that, and not give me an opportunity immediately to answer them. There is nothing in this bill that so provides, and the opponents of the bill know that there is nothing in it that so provides.

Mr. DAVIS. I know that there is. I want to follow the matter further with the Senator.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator will have ample opportunity in his own time to make statements and attempt to prove them. There is nothing in this bill which provides for that.

Mr. DAVIS. I will prove that to the Senator if he will give me an opportunity. The Senator made the statement that I did not take advantage of the opportunity to bring about the deportation of criminal aliens.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I have the floor and I decline to yield. The Senator has raised a question as to the knowledge we may have today in reference to aliens in this country. That was the question the Senator raised and it was that about which I was talking. I said that when he, as Secretary of Labor during all those years, did not attempt to have Congress pass a bill providing for registration of aliens, I could not see how there could be any logic in his position today in coming here and talking about that matter when we have before us for discussion a bill which has nothing whatsoever to do with that subject.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In order that I may answer the challenge made by the Senator from Washington to the Senator from Pennsylvania by way of statement that the Senator from Pennsylvania did not do anything, I ask unanimous consent that there be published in the Appendix of the daily RECORD a speech delivered by Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS, Secretary of Labor, before the American Legion convention in San Francisco, Calif., October 15, 1923, which speech I obtained from the files of the American Legion, and in which speech the present senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] then advocated, more than 10 years ago, everything that I am advocating today, and at the time he made that speech in San Francisco the Honorable HIRAM W. JOHNSON, of California, welcomed——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I did not yield to the Senator for a speech. I have the floor. If the Senator from North Carolina wants to have something printed in the RECORD, that is all right, but I do not want it in the RECORD as a part of my speech.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have asked that the speech might be printed in the Appendix of the daily RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the speech referred to will be printed in the Appendix of the daily RECORD.

(The speech referred to appears on p. 5928.)

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I want to answer that portion of the statement of the Senator from Washington with reference to deportation, in which he suggested that I did not do anything about it at the time.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I shall not yield for a speech by the Senator from Pennsylvania. He and the Senator from North Carolina have taken much of the time of this body for the last month, and they are not going to keep me standing here now while they occupy our time all afternoon. I am discussing the bill. I am willing to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania if he wants to ask me a question, but I am not going to yield to enable him to make an argument, because this is nothing more nor less than a filibuster, and I am not going to let him filibuster in my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington declines to yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I refuse to yield.

Mr. DAVIS. I have not taken 5 minutes——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington declines to yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator refuse to yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I said I refused to yield to permit the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from North Carolina to filibuster against the bill. I think that is perfectly understandable.

Mr. DAVIS. I want the Senator to understand perfectly that I am not filibustering. I am trying to give the Senator from Washington some information with reference to the bill, but it seems that he does not want any information.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I refuse to yield further. If the Senator from Pennsylvania insists upon talking despite my refusal to yield, there are methods by which he might be stopped from talking. I have the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator from Washington refuses to yield, I shall take my seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is out of order because he is talking when the Senator from Washington has declined to yield. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am still willing to yield for a question, but only for a question.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator yield to receive some information?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; I shall not yield, because I am not going to permit the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from North Carolina to filibuster against this bill in my time.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Pennsylvania is not filibustering.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is out of order. The Senator from Washington has the floor and will proceed.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Section 1 of this bill, as I said before I was interrupted to discuss a subject which is in no way germane to the subject of the bill, provides for the deportation of criminal aliens, and despite all the talk that may be made about the fact that this bill opens up the floodgates to immigrants and permits aliens to remain in the United States who should not remain here, it will result, if enacted, in the deportation of 20,000 criminal aliens at once, and an increase in the number which may be deported to 2,300 per year.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield for a question only.

Mr. DAVIS. Section 1, paragraph 2, as I see it, makes it possible to deport an alien for a legitimate fisticuff, for the most trivial affair——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield for a question only. If the Senator from Pennsylvania wants to be discourteous I shall refuse to yield at all. I have yielded for a question and for nothing else.

Mr. DAVIS. Very well. Does section 1, paragraph 2, make it possible to deport an alien for a legitimate fisticuff?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I cannot understand the Senator's last word—a legitimate what?

Mr. DAVIS. For a legitimate fisticuff—two fellows getting together and one cuffing the other.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator mean a brawl, an ordinary fist fight?

Mr. DAVIS. I would not say an ordinary fist fight. I mean just two men meeting for a discussion and one punching the other. Could he be deported under that particular provision of the bill?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think if the Senator from Pennsylvania would only read the bill he would have a better understanding of it. I will read clause 2 of section 1:

> * * * has been convicted in the United States, within 5 years of the institution of deportation proceedings against him, of a crime involving moral turpitude.

An ordinary brawl or fist fight does not involve moral turpitude, and therefore the answer to the question of the Senator from Pennsylvania is "No."

Mr. DAVIS. But it goes on further to say——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I have answered the Senator's question.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall not interrupt the Senator during the rest of his discussion.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I thank the Senator very much. I appreciate that promise.

Section 2 of the bill is a further limitation upon the power of the court to excuse a person convicted of a crime from the penalty of deportation. At the present time the court itself has the power, as a part of its sentence or within 30 days thereafter, to determine whether the particular person convicted shall be subject to the penalty of deportation. This amendment provides that that power shall be subject to the acquiescence and the affirmation of the Commissioner of Immigration. It extends the time, it is true, from 30 days to 90 days; but, nevertheless, it is a restriction upon the power and tends rather to increase deportations than to decrease them.

We come now to section 3, about which there has been the most discussion. It is the section as to which many witnesses appeared.

The question before the Senate at the present time is whether or not this bill shall be recommitted to the committee. It is my personal theory that where a committee of this body has given due and complete consideration to a bill and then has reported the bill as the result of evidence taken and investigation made and consideration given, it should not be attempted to defeat the bill by resort to the parliamentary procedure of recommitting it to the committee. Personally I have never been willing to vote to recommit a bill just because I was opposed to it. I think that is not the proper way to legislate. The particular bill has received full and complete consideration by our committee. I do not know how many dozens of witnesses we have heard. We have held four public hearings occupying four different periods of time on four different days. We heard every witness who wanted to be heard, and we heard dozens of them.

An interesting thing about the bill is that one group of witnesses was opposed vigorously to one part of the bill on the ground that it was too lenient and too liberal. I think the expression made by the representative of the American Bar Association, Mr. Justin Miller, who spoke on behalf of the American Bar Association, pretty well describes that condition. In speaking in favor of the bill, in behalf of the American Bar Association, he said:

> It has been attacked by some because of some provisions, with the statement that they approve others. It has been attacked by others who say that they approve those parts disapproved by the first group, and vice versa.

Our committee, after hearing the witnesses, met on two different occasions; and I call to the attention of the Senate the fact that the bill appears as a committee substitute. In other words, so many amendments were made by the committee, as a result of suggestions we had received, that we decided that the bill could not be written in the ordinary way with the amendments in italics, and had the whole measure reprinted as a substitute. The bill has received thorough consideration from the committee, and there is absolutely no value to sending it back to the committee. It is not an immigration bill.

The Senator from North Carolina has a bill here, the Reynolds-Starnes bill, which is an immigration bill. It provides for registration of aliens and certain further restrictions on immigration. That bill has nothing to do with the bill which the Senate today is considering. That is an immigration bill. This is a deportation bill.

As to section 3, many persons felt that it was too stringent, and many felt that it was too lenient.

Something has been said about the American Federation of Labor being opposed to the bill. The American Federation of Labor appeared before the committee by their legislative representative, who is personally opposed to the bill. He submitted, however, a statement made by a special committee appointed by the American Federation of Labor to consider the bill. They wrote a letter in which they reported to Mr. William Green, the president of the federation, on February 19. In that letter they said:

> With reference to section 1, our committee does not object to this section in principle; to the contrary, it believes it an improvement upon the existing law.

They suggested certain changes which they thought were desirable, and the Committee on Immigration has very largely adopted those changes.

> With reference to section 2, no objections were urged on our part; to the contrary, we approved the general purpose and objective embraced.
> * * * * * * *
> Section 3, your committee disapproved.
>
> * * * * * * *
> Section 4 relates to change of status of the alien. * * * Your committee does not object to this section in principle.
> * * * * * * *
> Section 5 is heartily concurred in.

In other words, as to the five sections of the bill, the American Federation of Labor was not only not in disagreement with four of them, but was in a spirit of approving them; and in one of them the Federation of Labor heartily concurred.

What is section 3?

The amendment we agreed to accept today, proposed yesterday by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], changes the provisions of section 3 as compared with the discussion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] in reference to it. It provides for what are called hardship cases. It provides that in the case of noncriminal aliens who have come in here, and who are guilty of the crime of illegal entry but are guilty of no other crime, under the amendment of the Senator from Vermont—that means of any crime either before or after they came into this country—who are persons of good moral character, who have been here for 10 years, or who have, at least a year prior to the time of enactment of the bill, married, acquired a family, have children or parents in this country who are citizens of this country, the interdepartmental committee shall have power to pass upon the question as to whether or not they shall be entitled to remain in this country.

In all the discussion before the committee, out of all the persons who appeared in opposition to section 3, there were none who said that the United States of America should take the most inhumane attitude and throw out all of these aliens. The objection which was raised to section 3 by all the opponents of the section before the committee was that they felt that it gave too much power to an interdepartmental committee.

Recognizing to a certain extent that objection, the committee in their final meeting adopted two changes in section 3: First, that it shall apply only to those who came into the country prior to the enactment of the bill; second, that the interdepartmental committee shall exist for a period of 3 years only, and that after that time section 3 shall be absolutely of no further force and effect.

I appreciate the argument made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] that once an organization is created there is the possibility that it may continue. However, in the consideration of section 3 we do have to recognize the fact that the policy of this Government from the time of its beginning has been one of friendliness toward immigration. We have built up our country upon the basis of immigrants. All of us look back to somebody who was an immigrant—a grandfather or grandmother or great-grandfather or great-grandmother somewhere back in our family history. This country has been developed by immigrants. Comparatively few years ago we in this country changed our policy. We reached a point in our economic development where it was necessary to change our policy. Our labor supply became such that we could not leave the gates open any longer, and we closed them.

As a part of this change of policy and a difference of attitude of the people of this country toward immigration we have in this country today many persons who have come in illegally. We may call them criminals if we desire. They have violated the entry law. In my personal practice I have had a large number of persons come to me—and I never specialized in immigration work—who have said, "I thought I was in this country legally. I went up and tried to be naturalized, and I find that I am not here legally. I did not do a certain thing which I should have done when I came in. What can I do about it?" I have had to tell them that they probably would have to go out and come back into the country again. Before the enactment of the quota laws there was no difficulty about that, but since the enactment of the quota laws there has been difficulty.

We have changed our policy, and we have in this country today, so far as the efforts of the Department of Labor are concerned, 2,862 known cases of persons whose families would be subjected to very extreme hardship if deportation should occur. I do not think there is anybody here, I do not care what his attitude may be upon the question of immigration, who feels that there should be deportation in a case where a father came into this country 11 years ago, he has two or three children born after that time, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, or 6 years of age; they are citizens of this country, and he, because of the fact that he failed to comply with some provision of the immigration law, finds himself now subject to deportation. He may be sent back to Italy, but the children cannot go to Italy. They are citizens of this country. The wife and family stay here; the father is sent back to Italy, and they become public charges.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] pointed out a certain number of these cases and, as I remember, he talked probably 5 or 6 hours about three or four of them where, according to the Senator from North Carolina, the persons were not of good moral character. They have been guilty of certain violations of law. I have here the answer of the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization to the arguments made by the Senator from North Carolina, in which he denies those statements, but I am not going to attempt to put the matter upon that basis. I think we may rest assured that with all the diligence of the opposition to this bill, and the fact that the list of cases has been available in the House for a considerable period of time, with all the ability and diligence of the Senator from North Carolina, he brought to us all the cases which were subject to criticism.

Let us assume that out of the 2,862 cases there were 28 cases where mistakes were made. They have not that many. I do not know how many cases the Senator discussed, but something like four or five or half a dozen cases. Assume, however, that 1 percent of the total number were wrong. Let us assume that in his investigation the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization made a mistake in 1 percent of the cases. That does not argue that the other twenty-eight hundred and thirty or forty should be subjected to hardship because of the fact that the Commissioner made a mistake in the few cases I have mentioned. I do not say that he admits having made a mistake. He answers directly the arguments made by the Senator from North Carolina; but I do not propose to be diverted, and I do not think we should be diverted from the issue by getting into a discussion as to who is right about that. Let us assume that in 28 cases, persons who were guilty of crime did get on this list of 2,862. That is simply a percentage of error upon the part of the administrative department, and we have to accept that. The Senator has pointed out only four or five or six of them, assuming that he is correct about it.

The Senator from North Carolina said day before yesterday, however, that this would mean that millions of persons would be entitled to come in. I asked him how. "Well", he said, "because if this hardship-case alien is permitted to stay here, his family can come in." It is true that his family would have a preference in coming in, but it would simply be a preference under the quota. The only persons entitled to come in as the result of that, under section 4 of the old act are nonquota immigrants, who are defined as follows: An immigrant who has an unmarried child under 21 years of age, or the wife of a citizen of the United States or the husband of a citizen of the United States by a marriage occurring previous to June 1, 1928.

Calling your attention to the fact that it is the fact of having a wife or a child here in this country who is a citizen, the only persons who could come in would be the children of these 2,862 who were born in foreign countries prior to the time the immigrants got here. I think it must be agreed that if the Senator from North Carolina is anywhere near correct in his contention that this would permit millions to come in, he must conclude that these gentlemen, the 2,862 of them, were certainly very prolific before they left their home lands in order to have millions of children waiting to come in now. [Laughter.] There is nothing whatever to that argument.

Let us assume, however, as I do, that the Commissioner of Immigration has made a mistake. The pending bill merely provides that an interdepartmental committee will then pass upon the 2,862 cases, and that for a period of 3 years, in respect to the cases which are discovered by the Immigration and Naturalization Service, this interdepartmental committee will have a discretionary right to pass on them. As I said, I do not believe even the Senator from North Carolina would want us to deport all of these cases. One argument that is made is that Congress should not delegate this authority to a committee, to the administrative branch of the Government, but that we should pass on each case in the Congress as a separate matter.

It seems to me that all we need do is to consider what would happen if that were the practice. Suppose there should be introduced in the Senate 2,862 bills right now to determine whether or not those people were to be allowed to remain in this country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I may say that both in this branch of the Congress and in the House of Representatives a large number of bills are pending to deal with some of these cases, separate bills, introduced by Representatives and Senators.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I thank the Senator. If the contention of the opponents is correct, that we should have separate bills, I appeal to any Member of the Senate as to what would happen. Senators know how much consideration these cases would get if tomorrow we should have 2,862 of these bills dumped in and referred to the Committee on Immigration. There would be dozens on dozens of cases referred to each member of the committee, the bills would come before the Senate, and it would be absolutely impossible to clean up the situation by that method. The purpose of the pending bill is to clean up the situation during the period of the next 3 years.

As I have said, in the committee as it met there were many divergent views. There were many things in the bill of which I did not approve. The Senator from Georgia presented many objections to the bill, the committee accepted a number of very valuable suggestions he made, and the amendments which are in the bill are very largely the result of his suggestions.

There is a condition under which there are in this country this number of people. There is talk about breaking down immigration, and about the patriotic societies objecting to it, that it is something which will destroy America, and all that. No honest, candid discussion of this subject can present that point of view, because certainly nobody can claim that the permission to a department to deal humanely with 2,852 people is going to break down the standards of America. If the opponents of the bill think that America is on such tenuous ground that the enactment of a measure of this kind is going to destroy it, I do not think they have very much confidence in the future of the country.

Going briefly through the other parts of the bill, section 4 is the provision relating to an alien who is in this country legally; he may come in as a student, for example, get a temporary right to come into the country, and then may wish to change his status from that of a temporary resident to that of a permanent resident. Under the present procedure he has to go from this country back to his own country and reenter, come in under the quota. That is silly; it is foolish. If I am an immigrant in this country, coming even from Canada, and I desire to change my status, there is no reason in my having to go back to Canada. If I am from a quota country, there is no sense in making me go back, because the quota can be charged just as well by having my status changed here as by making me take the trip back home and come to this country again. That is the situation with which section 4 deals. It would not increase the number of immigrants who might enter. It would charge them to the quota. It merely provides that instead of making a foolish and unnecessary trip, an immigrant who has entered legally and is in the country legally, may change his status by simply making application, and, on the granting of the application, having his status changed.

Section 5 refers to the registry of aliens and would give to those who desired to register and who entered prior to July 1, 1924, the same right as that possessed by those who entered prior to July 3, 1921.

Section 6 is simply procedural, having to do with the burden of proof.

Section 7 is simply a provision for fees.

Section 8 is a provision which gives to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization the power to pick up criminal aliens. At the present time the Department estimates that some 2,500 aliens a year are escaping detention because of the fact that they are not able to pick them up. They see some alien whom they suspect, and they have to get a warrant, and during the time taken to do that the alien disappears. This measure would give to certain designated employees of the Department the right to pick up the aliens and hold them for not more than 24 hours, and immediately report to the Commissioner of Immigration. It is a strengthening of the law rather than a weakening of it.

Section 10 is simply a routine provision.

Section 11 sets up an interdepartmental committee, which, under section 3, can exist for only 3 years.

Section 12 is purely a procedural matter.

Section 13 is the only immigration feature of the bill. When the quota laws were enacted it was provided that certain preferred quotas should be given for those engaged in agriculture, the thought being that we needed agricultural labor in this country. It has been found that that condition no longer exists, and the last section of the pending bill merely repeals that feature of the law and is a further restriction upon immigration.

Stripped of all the talk about "American", about patriotic organizations, and things of that kind, stripped of all that talk, the bill gets down to some very practical facts. Under it we could deport 20,000 people immediately. We could pick up annually 2,500 criminal aliens in this country, who, the Department says, are not subject to being picked up at the present time. Under it we could send out 2,300 a year more than we can under the present law. It would be a strengthening of the deportation law.

Section 3 does not provide that these people shall remain in this country, but it does say that in interdepartmental committee, which can consider all the facts in relation to those who are not criminals, who are of good moral character, and who come within certain classifications, shall have the right to say to them, as some similar agency in every other country in the world has a right to say to such people, "We will not separate your families. We are not going to subject you to these conditions."

As I said before, there are some of the cases, undoubtedly, in which the Commissioner of Immigration has been in error. The purpose of the bill will be to submit the findings in those cases to the interdepartmental committee, a committee consisting of a representative of the Department of State, a representative of the Department of Labor, and one of the Department of Justice, and let this country get in line with all the rest of the countries of the world in humane treatment of those who desire to enter the country.

Just one other word. Personally, I believe that the bill in its ultimate effect would result in a decrease in the number of aliens in this country. The Senator from North Carolina has a bill here, and I am very much in favor of many of its provisions. It is an immigration bill. The committee is perfectly willing to have a hearing on it, and to give the Senator an opportunity to be heard. But to send the pending bill, which has been thoroughly considered, back to the committee in order to get it mixed up with an immigration bill just is not proper legislative procedure, and there is no logic to it. If the Senate does not believe in the pending bill, it can vote it down, but certainly it should not attempt to send it back to try to get some sort of a hybrid bill which would be half immigration and half deportation. There is no reason why we should attempt to do that.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, assuming that a vote is about to be taken on the pending question, I wish to make a statement with respect to my position. In view of what the RECORD shows to be the attitude of the committee with respect to my amendment—that is, that they will accept the amendment—I shall, of course, not vote to recommit the bill to the committee, but my position must be understood to be exactly what it was yesterday, when I stated, as appears at page 5871 of the RECORD:

> I say frankly I favor the Reynolds bill over the bill reported by the committee, even with my amendment adopted. But I say also that if the Reynolds substitute should not be accepted by the committee, I would vote for the bill reported by the committee, provided my amendment should be adopted, because of those two things, namely, increasing the power of the Government to deport criminals and giving the power of clemency to the Government to protect hardship cases where the person involved is not a criminal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina to recommit the bill.

Mr. McNARY and Mr. KING rose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator from Oregon desire to address the Senate?

Mr. McNARY. No, Mr. President. I thought a vote was about to be taken. I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, Senators have evinced no particular interest in the bill. However, I shall yield for a quorum call.

Mr. WALSH. I raise the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chavez	Holt	O'Mahoney
Ashurst	Clark	Johnson	Overton
Austin	Connally	Keyes	Pittman
Bachman	Coolidge	King	Pope
Bailey	Copeland	La Follette	Radcliffe
Barbour	Couzens	Logan	Reynolds
Barkley	Davis	Lonergan	Robinson
Benson	Dickinson	Long	Russell
Bilbo	Dieterich	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Black	Donahey	McGill	Sheppard
Bone	Duffy	McKellar	Shipstead
Borah	Fletcher	McNary	Steiwer
Brown	Frazier	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	George	Metcalf	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Gerry	Minton	Townsend
Burke	Gibson	Moore	Truman
Byrd	Glass	Murphy	Tydings
Byrnes	Hale	Murray	Vandenberg
Capper	Harrison	Neely	Wagner
Caraway	Hatch	Norris	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	Nye	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS in the chair). Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of a statement made a few moments ago by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], I deem it proper to present the facts with respect to what has occurred in connection with the consideration of the pending measure. I might add that though it is not germane to the bill, I do not think that the Senator's statement to the effect that he had been limited to 3 hours for a discussion of the bill should pass without comment and without the presentation of what I regard as the facts in connection therewith.

The bill has been before the Senate for a long time. It has been discussed upon a number of occasions by the Senator from North Carolina, and no effort whatever has been made to deny him or any other Senator every opportunity to discuss the bill. On the 13th of February the Senator from North Carolina occupied more than an hour and a half in discussing the question of immigration. On the 17th of March the Senator offered a resolution dealing with immigration, and addressed himself to the same for an hour. On April 3 the Senator consumed approximately 3 hours in discussing the so-called Kerr-Coolidge bill, and on April 4 he devoted more than 2½ hours to a discussion of the bill. On April 21 he discussed the bill for 2½ hours, and on April 22 he occupied the floor in a discussion of the bill for substantially the same period.

Today the Senator referred to his motion to recommit the bill and then occupied the floor for perhaps one-half or three-quarters of an hour. An examination of the RECORD upon the days referred to, will, I believe, furnish convincing evidence that the Senator has spoken upon the bill for at least 12 hours.

In my opinion the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] gave evidence of their purpose to prevent a vote upon the bill even if it was necessary to filibuster to bring about that result. My friend from Pennsylvania, who sits on the other side of the Chamber, stated to me but a few days ago, when pointing to two large volumes on his desk, that he intended to speak for 2 days and to avail himself of the books mentioned. Perhaps he was jesting. However, his statements to me then and subsequently led me to believe that it was the purpose of the Senators referred to to prevent a vote upon the pending bill. During the addresses of the Senator from North Carolina he read for several hours what he claimed to be facts in regard to several aliens who would be the beneficiaries of the bill before us if it should become law. I could not refrain from believing at the time he was challenging attention to these cases, that he intended to defeat the bill. Statements were made by him indicating that the debate upon the measure before us would be continued until the Senate, by reason of the pressure of business, would feel constrained to displace the pending measure and proceed to the consideration of other bills.

In the discussion today the Senator claimed that he was limited to 3 hours in which to discuss the bill. I cannot help but believe that the Senator desired the inference to be drawn from his statement that an improper limitation had been imposed upon him and that he desired the public, and the people of North Carolina and patriotic organizations of the United States, to believe that he had been denied an opportunity to discuss the bill. I leave it to the Senate and the RECORD to determine whether any effort has been made upon the part of the proponents of the bill to deny the Senator from North Carolina, or any other Senator, the fullest opportunity to point out the weaknesses or the virtues of the bill before us.

The Senator from North Carolina alluded to the fact that the tobacco bill was before the Senate the other day and that he was forced into an embarrassing situation, which resulted in his consenting to restrict to 3 hours any further arguments upon his part on the deportation bill. May I be permitted, in view of the fact that the Senator has elaborated his view regarding that incident, to give what I believe are the facts, or at any rate my recollection of the facts.

The deportation bill was under consideration and, as I have stated, has been before the Senate upon various occasions since February 13. Senators know that toward the closing hours of the session there are many important bills which should be considered. Senators upon both sides of the aisle have appealed to the leader upon this side of the Chamber for opportunities to take up their bills, and in every possible way he has conformed to their wishes and undoubtedly has often subordinated his own views in order to meet the desires of his colleagues.

We know that as we approach the end of the session—and God speed the day when we may adjourn—there will be greater pressure to pass pending measures. After the deportation bill had been before the Senate for several days, and the Senator from North Carolina had spoken for many hours—and I am not criticizing him—and the bill was still under consideration before the Senate, and the desire, at least upon the part of the proponents of the bill, without interfering at all with legitimate debate, was to secure a vote on the bill, the Kerr tobacco bill was brought before the Senate.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Will the Senator agree that he stated that unless I agreed to 3 hours on the immigration bill he would filibuster on the tobacco bill?

Mr. KING. No; that was not my statement.

Mr. REYNOLDS. May I ask the Senator what he did state?

Mr. KING. If the Senator will wait until I shall have concluded my observations I think he will be satisfied with the accuracy of my statement. The junior Senator from North Carolina and his colleague, as I recall, conferred with a number of Senators favorable to the pending bill, with a view to ascertaining whether the deportation bill could be laid aside in order to consider the tobacco bill—a measure which was regarded as of great importance to North Carolina and other tobacco States.

I regarded the tobacco bill as one presenting legal questions, as well as those of economic importance. It seemed to me that the importance of the questions involved merited several hours for proper consideration. The Senators from North Carolina stated that it was important that the tobacco bill be taken up and passed that day; indeed, the junior Senator stated there would be a meeting at Raleigh, N. C., at 2 or 3 o'clock that afternoon and he was anxious to have the bill passed by that hour if possible, but certainly before the meeting adjourned. I told him that I, too, was desirous of having the tobacco bill considered, and, so far as I was advised, passed after due consideration, but I stated that as the deportation bill had been laid aside upon a number of occasions for consideration of other measures I did not feel warranted, without the consent of the members of the Committee on Immigration, to consenting to have it again laid aside for the consideration of any other measure, particularly in view of the fact that there was evidence in part based upon the position of the Senator that the debate on the deportation bill would be prolonged perhaps for an indefinite period.

Both Senators again conferred with me and I stated that if the debate upon the deportation bill was to be a filibuster then I would not consent to lay aside the deportation bill for the purpose of taking up any other measure. I spoke only for myself as a member of the committee. I further added that if the filibuster continued against the deportation bill it might provoke a filibuster or retaliation with respect to the tobacco measure, as well as other measures. That statement by me was based upon the attitude and statements of the junior Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], that the deportation bill would be defeated if it was within their power. I then stated that as the junior Senator from North Carolina had debated the deportation bill for several days, it seemed to me that if he had 2 or 3 hours more he ought to present his views upon the measure, and that with such an understanding, an understanding as to the time which would be devoted to the tobacco bill, I should have no objection to laying aside the deportation bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KING. I think the junior Senator from North Carolina and the senior Senator from North Carolina stated that that would be satisfactory.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Let me asked the Senator a question.

Mr. KING. Very well; I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. If the junior Senator from North Carolina had failed to accept an agreement to speak 3 hours, may I inquire what the Senator from Utah would have done about the tobacco bill?

Mr. KING. We did not reach that contingency. If the Senator had said, "I am going to continue this filibuster and talk indefinitely", I am not sure what would have been the result.

Mr. REYNOLDS. May I ask what the Senator would have done?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I submit an inquiry? If gentlemen saw fit to make an agreement, what difference can it make after the agreement has been made?

Mr. KING. None; and I should not have adverted to it except for the implied criticism of my friend from North Carolina when he had the floor a few moments ago. It is always well to have the facts before us.

Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] has just delivered an unanswerable argument in favor of the pending bill. It seems to me that those who had the privilege of hearing it will find it impossible to vote against the bill. The facts presented by him refute the arguments submitted by the opponents of the measure, and demonstrate that opposition to the bill is without merit and is founded upon a misunderstanding of the bill and the objects which it seeks to accomplish. Efforts have been made by those opposed to the bill to convince not only the Senate, but the country, that the measure we are considering is an immigration bill, and that it will undermine our restrictive immigration policy and open the gates of our country to an influx of aliens. I do not want to be critical, but I respectively submit that the campaign waged against the bill and the propaganda spread throughout the country have not been free from insincerity and have aroused wholly unjustifiable fears upon the part of many patriotic American citizens. The opposition to the bill has not infrequently rested upon the assumption that those who supported it were, perhaps, lacking in devotion to American ideals, if not to patriotic impulses. Undoubtedly, the erroneous and fantastic statements which have been circulated are responsible for much of the opposition to the bill. Members of several organizations who have indicated opposition to the bill, have been misled as to its purposes and to the results which will follow its enactment into law.

As I have stated, it is not an immigration bill but a deportation bill. Instead of the measure being injurious to labor or harmful to the American people, it will prove highly advantageous and beneficial to every field of activity and every branch of industry. Instead of liberalizing or broadening our immigration laws, it provides further restrictions; it will remove from the United States at least 20,000 aliens who are found in all parts of the United States, many of whom are competing in the fields of labor with American citizens. For a number of years the Department of Labor has urged a measure of this character in order that thousands of aliens who under existing law cannot be deported may be removed from our shores.

Mr. President, I am persuaded that those who are familiar with the bill and understand what it will accomplish will heartily support it. No one can charge that the Department of Labor, which has been so zealous, particularly under this administration, in protecting the American labor and all who are engaged in our industrial life, would urge a measure that would prove in the slightest degree inimical to the American people, and particularly to American labor. The Department of Labor is proving a faithful guardian of the rights, not only of labor but, so far as it is within its prerogatives, the rights of American citizens. If this bill shall be defeated, then labor can justly charge the opponents of the bill with the retention in the United States of at least 20,000 aliens, many of whom have criminal records, and some of whom will compete with American citizens in the fields of labor and industry.

The proposition is squarely presented: Shall 20,000 undesirable aliens be deported, or shall they remain in the United States? Shall approximately 2,800 aliens who may be deported under existing law—not because of crimes or because they are undesirables—be permitted to have their cases reviewed by a competent board for the purpose of determining whether they shall be permitted to remain in the United States? And as a part of the latter proposition, and as a necessary corollary to it, whether four or five thousand children born in the United States of American mothers shall be left without support because their fathers, under the strict and rigid application of existing immigration laws, may be deported?

The problem before us presents the question as to whether American mothers of these thousands of children shall be deprived of their husbands and have the burden cast upon them of attempting to feed and clothe and educate their children. It is obvious that this bill does not deal with immigration; it deals with present and immediate problems—problems involving the lives and welfare of several thousand people, many of whom are American citizens. The deportation of a limited number of aliens who are not charged with crime, who are industrious and honest, and who are supporting their wives and their children, and who are a part of the industrial life of the Nation—this is one of the questions before us. The other question is that of obtaining authority to remove from our shores approximately 20,000 persons who are violators of law and whose presence is inimical to the peace and welfare of American citizens.

Those who oppose this bill in effect vote to keep these 20,000 aliens in the United States. Those who oppose this bill vote to deprive five or six thousand children of the support and companionship of fathers who have been in the United States for many years; whose wives and children are American citizens and who by their industry have not only supported their families but have found a place in the social and industrial life of our country.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to permit a few questions?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand the bill, aside from the last section, it merely deals with the method of treating certain aliens who are subject to deportation from this country. Am I correct?

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. WALSH. The Department of Labor has through the years discovered that there are aliens who originally entered this country illegally, and that economic, social, and domestic conditions have arisen which would result in grave hardships being imposed if the present deportation laws were carried out and the aliens in question were deported.

Mr. KING. As I understand the Senator, he accurately states the situation. He might add, however, that many of the aliens referred to were only guilty of a technical infraction of the law.

Mr. WALSH. And this bill is before us by reason of the fact that the Department of Labor believes that it is in the interest of charity——

Mr. KING. And humanity and justice——

Mr. WALSH. Yes; and humanity and justice and economy, not to impose the rigid provisions of existing law in certain cases. Is that correct?

Mr. KING. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Among these cases are some similar in degree to the following. A man who originally entered this country illegally has married an American girl; they have had American children, varying in number; the American woman and the American children would be left without a father if the existing law, unmodified, were enforced and the alien father deported.

Mr. KING. They would become public charges, the mother and children—American citizens—and dependent upon their husbands and fathers—would be left unprotected, and the public would have the burden of supporting them.

Mr. WALSH. Yes. Some of the opposition to this measure is based on fear that the discretionary power that is granted under this bill might be improperly exercised.

Mr. KING. That fear has been expressed by some, but, in my judgment, it has no validity. The commission to be set up to examine the cases presented would consist of men of character who would not permit any unworthy alien to remain in the United States.

Mr. WALSH. There has to be some tribunal or agency to discriminate between the worthy and the unworthy cases growing out of the illegal entry of aliens into this country.

Mr. KING. Absolutely. I may say that we now give to our consuls abroad, some of whom do not have sufficient experience and adequate knowledge of economic conditions and the psychology of the people here and abroad, the discretion to pass upon applications of aliens who seek visas. Our consular representatives may now determine whether the applicant possesses all of the requisites to enter the United States. They decide whether the applicants for visas will become public charges. One consular agent may say that a man must have $50,000 before he can secure a visa, while other consular agents may say he need have but $10,000. That arbitrary discretion is vested in our consular representatives abroad, and it has been felt by some persons that they have not exercised it wisely in all cases. I mention that merely to indicate that in many of the activities in connection with the Federal Government discretion must be lodged somewhere.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that the Department of Labor has presented to the House—and it has been referred to here in the debate—some 2,800 cases of deportable aliens whom they label as meritorious.

Mr. KING. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Or, rather, as deserving——

Mr. KING. Of consideration.

Mr. WALSH. Of consideration, and that, in all probability, those aliens ought not to be deported because of economic and humanitarian conditions that would arise if they were deported.

Mr. KING. The Senator is correct; that is to say, the House has in its control the files in every case embraced within the 2,862.

Mr. WALSH. The able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] had an opportunity to study these cases, and on one occasion he exposed on the floor two or three of the cases, at least, that did not appear to me to be meritorious. That fact has raised in the minds of some Senators some doubt as to whether or not this discretionary power will be exercised wisely. What has the Senator to say about those cases? Are they merely isolated cases or are they representative types?

Mr. KING. The Senator from North Carolina asked for the files in 48 of the cases—and I have them here—and from the files he selected he mentioned five cases, and, while perhaps this is not an orderly method of presentation of the subject, yet, since the Senator has propounded the question, I will state the facts in connection with each of these cases.

Mr. WALSH. I should be glad to have the Senator do that later during the course of his address to the Senate. In the meantime I should like to ask him one or two more questions, and then I will end my inquiries. How long is this discretionary power to be exercised?

Mr. KING. For 3 years.

Mr. WALSH. Is the discretionary power to be applicable to aliens who are discovered to be illegally in this country after the passage of this bill?

Mr. KING. Not if they enter the United States after the passage of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I want to thank the Senator, and I hope I have not interfered with his address to the Senate. I thought that many of the Senators could get at the gist of what is involved in this case by a few interrogatories such as I have made.

Mr. KING. The Senator has not interrupted me. I have no set address and arose only to submit a few observations, based upon some of the unwarranted and inaccurate statements made by the opponents of the measure, with which the country has been flooded in regard to the character of this bill.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is most gracious and generous, and I am grateful to him.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in connection with some of the questions which were asked by the Senator from Massachusetts, I should like to have the information, if it is available, as to what is the maximum number of persons unlawfully in the country who might be permitted to remain if the provisions of this bill should go into effect and the discretion sought to be vested in the interdepartmental committee should be granted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am unable to definitely answer the Senator's question. After a careful and searching investigation it has been discovered that there are 2,862 persons whose deportation has been stayed because of reasons which were regarded as sufficient, and in order that Congress might, as it was believed it would, provide some relief in their behalf. As I have stated, these stayed cases presented strong reasons for further consideration—such consideration as is provided in the pending bill. Appeals have been made to the Labor Department by prominent American citizens, including some Senators and Congressmen and officials in various States, in behalf of many of these 2,862 aliens. These appeals have largely rested upon humanitarian grounds, as well as upon established facts that the aliens involved had committed only technical breaches of immigration laws or regulations. The Labor Department, after a searching examination, has reported only 2,862 aliens who would probably, if this law were passed, avail themselves of its provisions and be permitted to remain in the United States.

I am informed by a representative of the Labor Department that Mr. Doak, when Secretary of Labor, stated that there were not to exceed 100,000 aliens in the United States who were subject to deportation. Since then, thousands of this number have voluntarily departed and 10,000 more have been deported. During the past 3 years the Department of Labor has scoured the country for the purpose of discovering the names and abodes of all aliens in the United States. A large force of competent representatives of the Department has been engaged in this task. Many of them for years have been acquainted with immigration problems, and have learned of the whereabouts of a large number of aliens. As Senators know, the Department has been exceedingly zealous in searching out those who are subject to deportation, and, as I have stated, have caused to be deported several thousand during the past 3 or 4 years. I should add that the Labor Department for a number of years prior to 1933 did not lack in diligence in invoking the deportation laws of our country. I cannot help but believe, however, that a considerable number of the 20,000 aliens who should be deported ought to have been apprehended prior to their obtaining a status which makes them immune from deportation under existing law. The Labor Department during the past 3 years has been diligent and aggressive in its efforts to learn the whereabouts of aliens and to discover those who were subject to deportation. In its aggressive campaign, the 2,862 cases which have been referred to during the discussion, were classified, and their residences and status determined.

My information is, however, that some on this list were persons whose identity and status had been ascertained under a previous administration, and whose deportation had been stayed because of reasons that would appeal to persons of humanitarian instincts. My attention has been called to a number of Chinese, 70 and 80 years of age, whose years were numbered, and whose names and whereabouts were known to the Labor Department, perhaps for 15 or 20 years. My information is that a number of illiterates subject to deportation were permitted to remain. They were old and infirm, but were cared for by relatives who were American citizens, and they could not under any circumstances become public charges. It has been known that there were some political refugees in the United States subject to deportation, and others who, because of humane and entirely valid reasons, were not deported. It is known that there are a number of persons among this 2,862 who could not reenter the countries of their birth; Turkey would not admit a number of Armenians who were born in Turkey, so that efforts to deport them would be unavailing.

I think the testimony before the committee and the facts which have been developed in connection with this bill prove that the Labor Department has been most diligent in enforcing the immigration laws, and in deporting aliens.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then, according to the statement, the bill would contemplate the deportation of approximately 20,000 criminal aliens?

Mr. KING. Of those who have been discovered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of those who have been discovered, and permit to remain in the country a maximum of 2,862 who have been discovered and whose cases are regarded as meritorious?

Mr. KING. That is correct; but it is possible a few more cases may be discovered. But as I have stated, after a vigorous campaign conducted by the Labor Department to discover aliens in the United States, only 2,862 have been found to date whose cases are worthy of consideration and review for the purpose of determining whether they should be permitted to remain in the United States.

If this bill shall become law, each of the persons within the list referred to, must pass the scrutiny of the Board, and must meet all the requirements of section 3 of the measure before us.

Mr. President, I call attention to the testimony of Colonel MacCormack, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, before the Senate Immigration Committee. He stated in substance that when he took office it was found that only about 8½ percent of the aliens deported were deportations of criminals; that under the law criminals were permitted to escape because the mandatory provisions of the law did not reach them. He further stated that in dealing with noncriminals the law was mandatory and exceedingly severe. He stated that a number of bills had been introduced in Congress to correct the situation, but none had been passed. He then stated that the Department had found that in the United States there were 20,000 alien criminals who had committed crimes within the past 5 years who could not be deported, but who could be deported by the Government if the bill before us were enacted into law. He added that during the past 5 years an average of between 1,800 and 1,900 criminals were annually deported, and that if this bill is passed the entire 20,000 can be deported.

In his testimony at page 16 of the hearings, he referred to some of the so-called hardship cases. With reference to persons who had infringed the law by some technicality, he stated that in some cases to deport such persons would mean that the family would be "left behind in the United States." He added—

> That it is not an uncommon thing to deport the husband to one country, his wife to a second country, and his child or children to a third country. If these children had been born in the United States they would be left here.

He stated that there is no country in the world that has ever acted so harshly as to separate families in the manner indicated. He added, however, that under this policy the Department has been obliged in some cases to take children from their mothers. He also stated that a child was brought into the United States from Canada in his mother's arms:

> The mother entered the country legally. The child was not registered at that time, or at any rate there was no record of legal entry into the United States. The father had entered the United States illegally and was arrested and deported. In the examination of the case we found that the wife had legally entered the United States but the child in his mother's arms had illegally entered. Under the present law, mandatory in character, deportation was required. The child was put on trial for having entered the country illegally in his mother's arms, and the child was ordered deported, taken from the mother and ordered to be sent to Canada to be placed in the poor farm.

The record of the 2,862 cases will reveal many hardship cases as cruelly tragic as the one just referred to.

Colonel MacCormack further testified that if the persons in the 2,862 group are deported they will leave nearly 7,000 members of their families in the United States, 4,600 of whom are American citizens and most of whom would become public charges.

Of the 2,862 cases which have been stayed, 98 percent would involve the separation of families, and, as I understand the testimony and the facts, those in this category subject to deportation have not been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude; none are anarchists or Communists; none are persons of the so-called immoral classes. The great majority are cases of aliens who have entered the country illegally and involve regulatory provisions of the law as distinguished from the provisions which relate to the inherent undesirability of the individual alien.

I am repeating when I state that the primary reason for not deporting those in the class just referred to is because of the hardship it would work on the relatives left behind (most of whom are American citizens), and also upon the public. Deportation in these cases would not only create suffering and hardship for the innocent wives and children, but would impose financial burdens upon the United States and the States. It should also be noted that most of the aliens within this category who would be deported, after the separation of families and after they had sojourned in the countries to which they were deported, would be entitled to return as nonquota or preference quota immigrants. Hence, their deportation would be largely futile, and could only result in the enforced interruption of the family life and well-being during the interim.

In the reports submitted by the committee are a number of typical cases of aliens subject to deportation who would be entitled to consideration under the bill. I ask that without reading, excerpts from the report may be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The excerpts are as follows:

One case concerns an alien but 4 feet tall and physically deformed—a hunchback. Her father, a rabbi, came to this country from Hungary 11 years ago. Later, his wife and four other children followed him. The alien did not reach the United States until 1929, when she came as a student. She has now completed her studies and must leave the country or be deported. Members of the family in this country are all employed. She has no near relatives in Hungary and no one to look after her there. The money which otherwise would be spent in supporting her in this country would have to be sent abroad and probably in an increased amount.

Another case is that of a man who came to the United States with his father, when a child, and has lived here continuously ever since. In 1924 he was arrested and deported. He later entered the United States without an immigration visa and without inspection. He has married an American woman and has two children. In 1933 he attempted to enter the country legally by proceeding to Canada and applying for admission in the regular manner. This attempt to regularize his status merely had the effect of causing his arrest in deportation proceedings. It developed at the hearing that he not only supported his family but also a homeless woman and her two American-born children.

Still another case concerns a 9-year-old boy, now subject to deportation. He was brought here as an infant by his mother who entered legally, but who, somehow, failed to register the entrance of her child. The father is under sentence of deportation to Rumania—the child to Canada. The mother, having entered legally, may remain in the United States. If she can find the means she may accompany her husband or her child, provided that Canada or Rumania will permit her to enter.

Mr. KING. Among the 2,862 persons are aliens who were legally admitted to the United States as nonimmigrants. Some were students or visitors who later were entitled to a nonquota preferential immigrant status. Among such cases is that of a Russian girl who fled to Manchuria where she met an American woman who agreed to finance her medical studies in the United States. Before completing her studies her patron was unable to continue, or withdrew, her support, and the girl thereupon married an American farmer. The husband and wife and their child, born in the United States, are happily married. Deportation proceedings have been instituted against the woman because she had not maintained her student status. The Commissioner of Immigration reports that:

* * * the whelming majority of the stayed cases have no charge against them other than that of having entered or remained in the country illegally. * * * Many who have crossed our land borders without proper inspection did not know the requirements of our immigration laws. This is especially true of children brought here to join relatives or friends.

The Commissioner, in his letter to the chairman of the Committee on Immigration of the Senate, under date of January 27, 1936, gives a number of illustrations of cases where aliens are subject to deportation, principally upon technical grounds. I ask permission without reading to have excerpts from the Commissioner's letter inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The excerpts are as follows:

Deportation in the two following cases is mandatory on the sole ground of illegal entry.

FAMILY WOULD BE DISTRIBUTED OVER THREE DIFFERENT COUNTRIES

This is a case in which the present law would send the father to one country, the mother to a second, while the children remain in the United States. The alien father of this family came to Canada from Ireland in 1920, and 4 years later married a Canadian girl. The couple entered the United States illegally and during their residence in this country four children have been born. With deportation proceedings pending against them, this couple faces not only separation from their children but from each other as well. Canada will not receive the father, since he is a native of Ireland. The mother is a native of Canada and must be returned to that country. And they are the parents of four native-born American-citizen children, who in all probability must be left behind in the United States and separated from both their parents, and, in any event, must be separated from either their father or their mother.

MOTHER TO BE SEPARATED FROM HUSBAND AND CHILDREN, ALL CITIZENS

A Canadian woman, the mother of three children born in the United States, is subject to deportation because she went back to Canada to care for her sick father. She took her children with her and remained with her father 2 years because he had no one to care for him. Meanwhile her husband stayed in this country, where he had employment and contributed to his family's support. Finally he went to Canada to bring them home, but found that while he could bring in his three American-born children without difficulty, it would be necessary to obtain a visa for his wife and to pay a head tax for her. He did not have the money to do this, and returned to the United States, taking the children with him. The wife entered illegally and, because of her lack of the proper documents and her failure to pay head tax, is deportable despite her marriage to an American citizen and her three American-born children.

HONEYMOON TRIP TO CANADA BASIS OF DEPORTATION

An alien who has lived in this country 9 years went to Canada on his honeymoon. A year after his return he contracted tuberculosis and was treated in a State institution. He would not be subject to deportation but for a judicial construction that if an alien steps foot across the boundary, even momentarily, his return to the United States shall be considered the date of his entry. As the alien in question became ill within a year after his return from Canada, he was construed to have become a public charge within 5 years of his entry and is, therefore, subject to deportation. He has recovered and is supporting his wife and her father and mother who live with him, but there is no discretion in the existing law to relieve the hardship and injustice which deportation in a case of this character would cause.

FACES DEPORTATION AFTER 32 YEARS' RESIDENCE

A Canadian lived in the United States for 32 years, established a good reputation, and reared a family of five American children. He spent Christmas with his 75-year-old mother in Canada. Shortly after his return he suffered a mental disorder and was confined in a State institution. He is subject to deportation on the technical ground that he became a public charge within 5 years after his entry. Notwithstanding his 32 years' residence in this country, his filial visit in Canada renders him subject to deportation.

The following cases are illustrative of the deportations caused by the interpretation that an alien who has been a public charge for as much as a single day is mandatorily deportable.

GIRL WHO CONTRIBUTES TO FAMILY'S SUPPORT DEPORTABLE AS PUBLIC CHARGE

The first case is that of a girl who came to this country when 11 years of age. At 15 she suffered a nervous break-down and was treated in a State institution for a time. She recovered and now helps to support her family, who are legal residents of the United States. Deportation in this case is likewise necessary under the present law, as the interpretations are that if a person is treated in an institution maintained by public funds for even a day without paying for the treatment, he or she becomes a public charge, even if prior and subsequent thereto the alien has been self-supporting and the support of others.

NURSE DEPORTABLE BECAUSE OF TEMPORARY TREATMENT TO EXTENT OF $47

A Canadian nurse living in Pasadena, Calif., contracted tuberculosis and was treated for a brief period in a State institution. The total cost of the treatment was $52. She could pay but $5 at the time and did so, but was reported to us as having been a public charge to the extent of $47, requiring that proceedings be instituted for her deportation.

Deportation is often mandatory on grounds that are purely technical.

AGED FATHER SUBJECT TO DEPORTATION AFTER NEARLY 50 YEARS' RESIDENCE

This is the case of a man who lived here nearly 50 years, married, established his home, and brought up a family. In 1930 he went to Canada to look for work, failed to find it, and decided to return to the home of his sons. He was penniless, and crossed the border on foot without being inspected by the immigration authorities. He was detained, and despite his 50 years' residence in the United States is subject to deportation.

SEARCH FOR WORK IN CANADA MEANS YOUTH'S DEPORTATION

The alien lawfully entered this country with his mother when he was under 16. In 1932, because of the depression, he lost his job and decided to seek work in Canada. After 14 months there, he returned to his home in Astoria. He did not undergo inspection when he reentered and was apprehended near Mooers, N. Y., by the immigration border patrol. He must be deported to Scotland. The alien professes that he is ignorant of the formalities incident to admission.

PASSING THROUGH CANADIAN TERRITORY ON TRAIN CAUSES DEPORTATION

One of the most farcical of these cases is that of the secretary of a Ukranian benefit organization. He had entered without inspection before 1924 and, under the law, was not subject to deportation as long as he remained in the country. He attended a convention of his society in Rochester, traveling via the Michigan Central, which passes through Canadian territory. He never left the train in Canada, but nevertheless we must consider this a departure from the country and a reentry rendering mandatory his deportation and separation from his legally resident wife and children, two of whom were born in this country.

The family separations inevitable under the present law appear especially cruel in such cases as these:

DAUGHTER OF UNITED STATES VETERAN FORCED TO RETURN TO POLAND

An alien was left in Poland when her father came to this country about 20 years ago. In 1932 she came to join her father, traveling on a nonquota visa. Previously, through coercion, the alien had married.

She never lived with her husband, however, and the marriage was annulled by ecclesiastical authorities but not civilly. Because of this marriage she was not entitled to a nonquota status. She was admitted as a temporary visitor but cannot be permitted to remain permanently. The father is a naturalized citizen of this country. He served in the Army from 1913 until 1919 and saw action in France. He has a business in Homestead Park, Pa., and is a respected member of the community.

HUNCHBACK GIRL MUST BE SEPARATED FROM FAMILY

Another case relates to an alien but 4 feet tall and physically deformed—a hunchback. Her father, a rabbi, came to this country from Hungary 11 years ago. Later, his wife and four other children followed him. The alien did not reach the United States until 1929, when she came as a student. She has now completed her studies and must leave the country or be deported. Members of the family in this country are all employed. She has no near relatives in Hungary and no one to look after her there. The money which otherwise would be spent in supporting her in this country would have to be sent abroad and probably in an increased amount.

PLEDGE TO DEAD WIFE CAUSES DEPORTATION

A German who entered as a seaman in June 1924, who was not subject to deportation, was asked by his dying wife to take her body to Germany for burial. He did so. The fulfillment of his pledge to his dead wife brings him within the deportation net as constituting a new entry. He will leave behind him a legally resident wife and American-born child. We can take into account neither his fine character nor his family situation.

DEPORTEE LIVED HERE SINCE CHILDHOOD, SUPPORTS TWO FAMILIES

Another case is that of a man who came to the United States with his father when a child and has lived here continuously ever since. In 1924 he was arrested and deported. He later entered the United States without an immigration visa and without inspection. He has married an American woman and has two children. In 1933 he attempted to enter the country legally by proceeding to Canada and applying for admission in the regular manner. This attempt to regularize his status merely had the effect of causing his arrest in deportation proceedings. It developed at the hearing that he not only supported his family but also a homeless woman and her two American-born children.

Deportation inflicts special hardship on the young. The child who is deported is returned to a country of which he knows little or nothing and where there is frequently no one to care for him. From his standpoint he is being banished rather than deported.

NINE-YEAR-OLD BOY MUST BE DEPORTED

A 9-year-old boy is now subject to deportation. He was brought here as an infant by his mother who entered legally, but who, somehow, failed to register the entrance of her child. The father is under sentence of deportation to Rumania—the child to Canada. The mother having entered legally may remain in the United States. If she can find the means, she may accompany her husband or her child, provided that Canada or Rumania will permit her to enter. At the best she will be separated from one of them.

BOY 12 YEARS OLD TO BE SEPARATED FROM MOTHER

Another case is that of a Syrian boy, now 12 years of age. When he was 4, his father died and his mother emigrated to Mexico with him. She became seriously ill and sent for her brother who lived in the United States to take care of the child. He took him to his home in the United States without obtaining a visa for his admission. The mother later married an American citizen and entered the United States legally. Someone reported the child to us and we have been obliged to issue a warrant of deportation.

Since coming to this country the boy has attended school, where his record is excellent. Leaders in the community have protested against the cruelty of separating him from his family and sending him back to a country of which he knows nothing and where there is no one to care for him.

TWO MOTHERLESS LITTLE GIRLS FACE SEPARATION FROM FOSTER PARENTS

Two sisters, 9 and 10, natives of Canada, were brought to this country by their mother when infants, when she entered this country illegally in search of her husband who had deserted her. A year after the mother's entry she died. The children's father, who has since been deported, brought them to Lebanon, Pa., to the home of their uncle and aunt, who have cared for the motherless little girls as though they were their own children and wish to adopt them. Under the present law the deportation of these two children is mandatory.

These are the types of cases in which we believe and have recommended that there should be the possibility of exercising administrative discretion. These people are not criminals; they are not anarchists or Communists; they are not of the immoral classes. They are for the most part simple, honest folk, who, by the investigations of our own officers and of the welfare agencies, have been found to be respected, hard-working members of their communities and good citizenship material.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further inquiry?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Am I correct in my understanding also that the interdepartmental committee, consisting of a representative of the Department of Labor, a representative of the Department of State, and a representative of the Department of Justice, cannot prevent the deportation of any alien unless it is found that "the alien is of good moral character and has not been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude"; secondly, unless the alien "has lived continuously in the United States for a period of not less than 10 years"; and thirdly, unless the alien "has lived continuously in the United States for at least 1 year and has living in the United States a parent, spouse, legally recognized child, or, if a minor, a brother or sister, who has been lawfully admitted for permanent residence or is a citizen of the United States"?

Those conditions limit the authority and power of the interdepartmental committee, do they not?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Upon what information does the Senator base his statement to the effect that there are 20,000 aliens in the United States today who are subject to deportation?

Mr. KING. I base it upon repeated statements made by the Department of Labor, by Commissioner MacCormack, Mr. Shaughnessy, and other representatives.

Mr. REYNOLDS. May I ask the Senator why those aliens have not been deported?

Mr. KING. Because they cannot be under the law; and if the Senator had read the evidence and read the reports, he would have discovered the reason why they have not been deported.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will state to the Senator that I have read the evidence and I have read the reports. May I ask the Senator where these 20,000 alien criminals are now?

Mr. KING. They have been located and classified; many of them are in large cities such as New York, Chicago, Detroit, and San Francisco; they are scattered in various parts of the United States. With respect to the first question, I invite the Senator's attention to the hearings and to the supplemental report submitted with the substitute bill. The report states that a survey of the principal cities by the Immigration and Naturalization Service, with the cooperation of chiefs of police and directors of public safety, indicates that there are at least 20,000 alien criminals who are not subject to deportation under the present laws, who would be rendered deportable under the provisions of this bill. An alien convicted of a violation of the narcotic laws in any State, Territory, insular possession, or the District of Columbia under existing law cannot be deported. There are many persons convicted of narcotic violations under State laws; the records show that there are approximately 2,000 such cases.

The report shows that aliens who have had as many as 30 separate convictions, and others who have spent a great deal of their time in this country in prison, and aliens who have been guilty of serious offenses cannot, in many cases, be deported under the present law. By pleading guilty to a lesser offense, which will not call for imprisonment for 1 year, they are not subject to deportation; and, likewise, if given a suspended sentence or a sentence below the one required under present law for deportation. Persons who smuggle aliens into the United States are not deportable. The Immigration and Naturalization Service have a record of more than 500 cases in which aliens have been smuggled into the United States—persons who will be subject to deportation under the bill before us—but the aliens who smuggled them in are not; and there are 500 such persons who would be subject to deportation if this bill becomes a law. Racketeers and gangsters convicted of carrying concealed weapons may not be deported, due to the requirement that deportation must depend upon conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude. A person stealing toys to give to a child may be deported because that is technically a crime involving moral turpitude; but under existing law one who is convicted for carrying concealed weapons cannot be deported because it is held that a conviction for such an act does not involve moral turpitude. Senators know that there are many aliens who have been convicted of carrying concealed weapons, but, as stated, they cannot be deported for that offense.

Mr. President, further replying to a question submitted to me by the Senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], a few moments ago I stated that after the most searching and thorough examination, made by hundreds of representatives of the Immigration Service and the Labor Department, they have been able to discover 20,000 persons who should be deported, but who, under existing law, may not be deported. They also discovered 2,862 persons whose position was such as to call for some clemency—for the exercise of some humanitarianism.

Let me give an illustration of one of the cases adverted to.

A young woman living in Pennsylvania—the State of one of the Senators who is opposed to this bill—had a brutal father, whose cruelty resulted in the passing away of the mother. The young girl, 18 or 19 years of age, was left with two small children.

Because she could not give them adequate care, she placed them in a children's home. She obtained work and contributed from her meager wages to the support of the children. Shortly thereafter she married an alien who resided in the city in which she lived. He entered the United States legally but remained beyond the period prescribed by law. He was industrious, was carrying on a profitable business, and was in every way a law-abiding citizen. He took the children from the children's home in which they had been placed and supported them, and also his wife, in a home which he provided. He is under the ban and will be deported unless the rigors of the present law are modified. Permit me to furnish another illustration of the justice of amending the present law. If Senators will turn to page 174 of the Senate hearings they will find a statement by Miss Evelyn Hersey, executive secretary of the International Institute of Philadelphia, Pa. I read from her testimony:

> I am executive director of a social agency of Philadelphia which has worked for 17 years now for the assimilation of the alien and the newly arrived resident in Philadelphia.

She went on to state the social activities and humanitarian activities in which she was engaged, helping to feed and to clothe alien immigrants, and to have them oriented as they come into the United States and become citizens. During this depression she has given her entire time to looking after those who are in need and in want.

Let me read further from her testimony:

> I would like especially to speak of section 3 very briefly from the point of view of a practical worker in a local community such as you gentlemen come from. I am not a national organization representative; I am a representative of a local organization that walks up and down the streets daily and sees these people.
>
> I was asked to and got in touch with some 25 of these famous 2,862 cases, and to me some of these people are not names, they are faces; I know them, I know their wives, I know their children, I know how terror stricken they are about their present situation, and how terrible they feel about their present status.
>
> Just before I came I pulled out of my file, just hit-or-miss, 5 of these cases of the 2,862.
>
> Senator RUSSELL. How many of them are there in Philadelphia?
> Miss HERSEY. I cannot answer that officially. I would say, to my knowledge, I think there are something under 100. I had some of the more difficult ones about whom there was some question, that they wanted me to look into, where there were some social problems, to see what could be done.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a little information?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I have listened to some of the arguments here. I have not heard all of it. I am wondering if the Senator from Utah can tell us, approximately, how many aliens in the United States would be subject to deportation under the provisions of the substitute reported by the Senator from Utah to Senate bill 2969, if it were very vigorously enforced?

Mr. KING. As has been frequently stated during the discussion, after searching examination by the Department of Labor to ascertain the number of aliens in the United States, whether subject to deportation or not, they have discovered 2,862 whose status is such as to differentiate them from the remaining aliens, 20,000 of whom are subject to and should be deported, but the records of these 2,862 present humane and practical reasons, it is believed, why they should not be deported. As I have stated, thousands of aliens have been deported and nearly 2,000 are being deported each year. I repeat, that the status of 20,000 aliens is known and that they should be deported, but under existing law all efforts to deport them would be frustrated. In my opinion, the Department of Labor is vigorously enforcing the immigration laws, and even those who are most hostile to aliens and most insistent upon stringent immigration and deportation laws, admit that the Department of Labor is aggressively enforcing the law to rid the country of undesirable aliens.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will forgive me for interrupting him. I merely desire some information.

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to give the Senator any information I possess.

Mr. BONE. I am wondering if the Senator can tell us whether that represents somewhere near the maximum number; or is it the Senator's viewpoint that there may be a much greater number than that who are subject to deportation?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think I covered this matter in my former answer. However, I may add that thousands of aliens have departed from the United States during the past few years, many of them voluntarily, and several thousand of them because of proceedings instituted by the Labor Department. As I have indicated, a vigorous campaign has been conducted by the Labor Department for the purpose of ferreting out every alien in the United States. My understanding is that they have been very successful in discovering the whereabouts of aliens. They have discovered 20,000 whose records are such as to demand deportation. It is quite likely that other aliens will be found who should be deported and who, if this pending bill is enacted into law, will be deported.

In searching for aliens the Labor Department, as I have stated, has found 2,862 cases which, because of humanitarian and practical reasons, warrant consideration. They are what is called worthy cases, and possess such appealing qualities as to not only justify, but require, special treatment. That view was recognized by the House when it adopted a resolution August 23 of last year in which it was stated that during the two preceding years the Department of Labor had stayed the deportation of more than 2,000 cases technically subject to deportation, whose deportation would involve the separation of many families, and leave approximately 7,000 dependent relatives here, approximately 5,000 of whom were wives and minor children. The resolution also stated that the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization on June 18, 1934, had unanimously adopted legislation urging the continued stay of deportation pending such time as the Congress required for a further opportunity to study the problem. The resolution further provided that in order that Congress might have adequate time to consider legislation the Secretary of Labor would be requested to continue the stay of deportations until March 1936, where the aliens were of good character and so forth.

As I have indicated, the Department has discovered 20,000 aliens who should be deported, and it is ready, if this bill shall become law, to launch a vigorous campaign for the deportation of these aliens, as well as any others that may be found subject to deportation.

Mr. BONE. When citizenship has been granted to a man who afterward became a confirmed criminal and went into the underworld of our great cities, and into those activities which are familiar to all of us who have practiced law, I have often wondered why steps were not taken to cancel his citizenship and deport him.

Mr. KING. A bill of that character is not before us.

Mr. BONE. I understand that.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Washington is a good lawyer, and his suggestion or question presents an interesting legal problem. I have heard it stated that such a law would be invalid. I express no opinion as to the authority of Congress to deprive a person of the rights and immunities of citizenship by an act declaring that his naturalization papers are canceled.

Mr. BONE. It is not an unusual thing to cancel citizenship, because that has been accomplished in our own district courts.

Mr. KING. Where it is obtained by fraud?

Mr. BONE. Yes; where there is some mental reservation on the part of the applicant for citizenship which can afterward be demonstrated at a hearing.

Mr. KING. I am inclined to think that where a person swears falsely to obtain citizenship and obtains his naturalization papers, they may be canceled upon proof of his perjury.

Mr. BONE. There probably would be no fraud where a man subsequently went into a life of crime.

Mr. KING. No. However, the question raised by the Senator cannot be determined now. I have been diverted, however, from the testimony of Miss Hersey, secretary of the Philadelphia Institute, who is devoting her life to humanitarian work, and to aiding aliens as well as impoverished citizens born in the United States. She says:

> Out of the 5 that I pulled out, just hit-or-miss, there were 22 individuals involved, 18 of whom were American citizens. I know that this is a small number, statistically speaking, but I was interested in the way they stacked up. Eighteen of these dependents were citizens, and 20 of these dependents, to all estimates that I could make, as an honest social worker, looking into resources, and so on, would be dependent on the community if these 5 men were deported.

These 5 men who will be deported if this bill fails, have families dependent upon them, and 18 are American citizens, all born in the United States.

Five fathers, 20 American children.

> They were the breadwinners. There were small children, reasons why the mother would have difficulty in supporting them. So Philadelphia would have to support those 20 people if these 5 were deported.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Those aliens wrongfully in the country, and liable to deportation within the innocent classes to which the Senator referred, are subject to deportation at any time.

Mr. KING. Absolutely.

Mr. ROBINSON. But unless the law is changed as is proposed in this bill, many criminals, by reason of statutes of limitations that have operated for their protection, will remain here, even though they may have been guilty of crimes of violence and other crimes of moral turpitude.

Mr. KING. The Senator has stated the matter accurately. Let me state what the result will be. If this bill is not passed, 20,000 criminals now subject to deportation will remain in the United States, and more than 5,000 children, American citizens, and their mothers will be thrown upon the public for support. So by passing this bill the fathers will be permitted to support their wives and 5 or 6 thousand children. If we fail to pass it, the communities in which they live will have them to support; and if we fail to pass it, the 20,000 aliens with criminal records, who should be deported, will remain.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. KING. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the Senator has referred to 20,000 aliens who might be subject to deportation. I merely desire to get these figures in mind, as to whether it would be possible to deport 20,000 people who are of a criminal or quasi-criminal nature, who have done things which, in the normal course of events, would subject them to deportation. I understood the Senator to say, in answer to my first question, that some 2,800 had been brought together in this category.

Mr. KING. Yes. The 2,862 referred to have no criminal records, and are not in the same class as the 20,000 who have criminal records.

Mr. BONE. It is merely a case of illegal entry?

Mr. KING. That is correct, as I understand the facts. But under the amendment which we have just accepted, offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], only those who do not have criminal records would have the benefit of the legislation, and their records could be further reviewed by the interdepartmental committee.

Mr. BONE. If there is anything in section 3 which we might legitimately object to, something which we think might invite the doing of something that would be a grievous wrong, is it not possible for us to make some slight amendment to section 3 which would overcome the difficulty? I am not suggesting the desirability of a change, but it has been mentioned on the floor a number of times that possibly under section 3 some grievous wrong might be done. Certainly it is possible to find some language which all might agree on, if it is desirable to make a change.

Mr. KING. I cannot conceive of any grevious wrong, or any wrong, which would or could result from the operation of the section referred to. Under existing laws these 20,000 aliens are protected from deportation, and unless this bill, or some similar bill, is enacted into law they will remain in the country.

Mr. BONE. Does the Senator from North Carolina want to have everybody of alien birth deported, or does he think 20,000 is enough to deport?

Mr. KING. Some who desire to defeat the bill apparently want to deport every unnaturalized alien. At any rate, if this bill were defeated, the result would be that the five men to whom Miss Hersey referred would be deported, and their wives and 18 children, all of whom are American citizens, would be deprived of support and probably would become charges upon the community.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I should like to finish reading this testimony, of the witness, but I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Does the Senator contend that these 2,862 are all of good character?

Mr. KING. If they are not, the committee will indicate that fact. If they are not of good character they cannot claim immunity, and will be deported.

I may say to the Senator that Colonel MacCormack testified that after they had gone over the cases again and again they did find a few, in excess of the 2,800, which they could not conscientiously place in this category, and they were thrown out, and will be deported if they have not already been deported and this proposed law would not save them.

I desire to save the American taxpayers from the necessity of taking care of five or six thousand little children and their mothers, who, if the breadwinners are deported, will become charges upon the communities or States.

Mr. President, let me finish with this statement I started to read four or five times, and have been compelled to make a detour because of interruptions, of which I make no complaint.

> That is just practical, not a sentimental point of view, as far as the community is concerned.
>
> Senator KING. Were those five breadwinners, so far as you could learn, reasonably good citizens, working?
>
> Miss HERSHEY. Yes.
>
> Senator KING. Law abiding and industrious?
> Miss HERSHEY. Yes; in fact, I was very much surprised when I went through this list. When you hear them discussed they sound so far away. They are decent, ordinary, hard-working men, making a struggle to look after their families, with ordinary human problems such as every man has. They include a tall, lanky, dark-haired steeplejack, who works very hard, at long hours, and so on; a painter, a mechanic, a man who works in a radio place, and I cannot think of what the other man does.

Senator KING. They have been here a good many years?

Miss HERSHEY. Oh, yes; all of them. I think none of them, of this particular five, had been here under 9½ years. Of course, there were a few of them that have been here slightly less.

But as to this group of five I happened to pick out, I would like to make the point of view of the community; what is it going to do to the community when we take out this group of people?

In the first place, there are all the friends and relatives that we have to support and look after. In the second place, there is the feeling and the hardship involved. In the third place, practically what does it mean?

Some of these men are going back to their old country to try to save during a year and a day until they can write to the consul there to get permission to return. They are going to try to get enough money to come back to their families. In the meantime, we have supported their families, and they have struggled on, and you are back where you were in the first place, if the man gets back, with the waste of that 12 months or 14 months and the money that could have gone into the support of the family spent in traveling across the ocean and back again.

In the case of Germany and Italy—some of these people are Italians—in Italy those men are going to have to find their way into the Italian Army, and we are going to have those wives and children here forever. Frankly, it is a very serious situation socially.

For instance, take the young couple that I saw, with three small children. The young woman is a Roman Catholic. She does not believe in divorce. Her husband is separated forever from her. What is she going to do? What is he going to do, just socially speaking? It is a pretty difficult situation from the point of view of the community just as well as the family.

Mr. President, I wish I had time to read more of the testimony of Miss Hersey as well as the testimony of other persons who appeared before the committee.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not quite get the answer of the Senator to the question about the statute of limitations. I was on the other side of the Chamber, and I could not hear the Senator's reply to some question about the statute of limitations expiring.

Mr. KING. I do not recall having heard the words "statute of limitations", or the suggestion of it. The nearest to it I can think of was the question propounded by the Senator from Washington as to whether or not, after the persons had obtained their citizenship papers, if they should be guilty of crime their citizenship could be revoked.

Mr. DAVIS. I refer to a question that was propounded by the distinguished leader of the majority just a few moments ago.

Mr. KING. I do not recall anything about the statute of limitations.

Mr. DAVIS. It referred to some limitation. I will get the question from the Official Reporter.

Mr. KING. Very well. The Senator from North Carolina, in his address yesterday or the day before, called attention to the case of Harry Carstans. He claims that he was an illegal entrant, and ought to be deported. The fact is that Mr. Carstans was investigated by the Department. I read from the information furnished by the Department in regard to that case. I am calling attention to this because it shows the assiduity of the Department of Labor in searching out all persons subject to deportation.

The principal file in this case is in New York in connection with habeas corpus proceedings. From the record now in this office it appears that a warrant of deportation was issued; that a request for a stay of deportation was denied; that thereafter Carstans instituted habeas corpus proceedings in New York City; that the writ was dismissed by the district court in New York; which action was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

It further appears that Carstans was not delivered to the Immigration Service at the termination of court proceedings. The court bond has been declared breached. There are indications in the record that Carstans has proceeded to Canada, although it is not definitely known where he is at present.

The Senator from North Carolina calls attention to the case of Francisco Chavez. The Department says regarding that case:

Chavez was found to be subject to deportation because he was not in possession of an immigration visa when he entered.

It appears from the record that he had married an American-born woman who had lost her citizenship through marriage to an alien, but who had never left the United States, and that he had deserted her 2 months before the institution of deportation proceedings.

Chavez was authorized to depart voluntarily without issuance of warrant of deportation. It later developed that he had resumed living with his wife and action was suspended.

The Galveston district office have reported November 13, 1935, that they had closed the case, as Chavez could not be found and had apparently returned to Mexico in June of that year.

So he is out of the United States.

Another case is that of Marie Kolacek. She had lived in this country since she was a mere child. She was found subject to deportation on immoral charges. Deportation was at one time deferred before a plan had been formulated to care for certain aliens whose deportation would result in extreme hardship to members of their families lawfully within the United States. Because of the grounds of deportation, the stay was later revoked and efforts were made to effect this woman's deportation. The Immigration and Naturalization Service was unsuccessful for the reason that passport facilities were not available. The country of Marie Kolacek's nationality refused to recognize her as a citizen because she had married a citizen of the United States. There is presently outstanding a warrant of deportation against this woman.

I called attention the other day to one of the cases mentioned by the Senator from North Carolina which he lingered upon for a long time, and that was the Grenier case.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, relative to that case there seems to be a difference of opinion between the Senator and myself. I should like to make a suggestion in respect to that case. Whether or not it could be done I am unable to state. Based upon records I have, I contend certain things, and the Senator from Utah contends other things. I may be wrong. I do not really know whether I am or not. I should like to ask that the original files be sent here from the department.

Mr. KING. I shall be very happy to ask that that be done. May I tell the Senator what the facts are? The Senator had, perhaps, some warrant for what he said. This young man, Grenier, told a fantastic tale in order to prevent deportation.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Was his statement made under oath?

Mr. KING. I do not know whether it was under oath or not. The fact is that he was never a French citizen, was never in the war, and never stole an airplane.

He was only a young chap, 20 years of age. When he was investigated looking to deportation he made up this fantastic story that he had fled from the French army in an airplane into Italy. The fact is that he belonged to the Greek nation, came here with a Greek name, but he changed the name to Grenier.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, would the Senator contend that if he came to this country and perjured himself in order to avoid deportation, that after having committed perjury he should be permitted to stay here?

Mr. KING. I am not going to pass on that question. It will be left under the bill to the committee created by the bill. He was a boy 20 years of age. I have known, and the Senator as a lawyer knows, of many good men who under the threat of serious harm have not been careful about the truth. And in the courts they have not always respected their oaths and some of them later have been indicted by the grand jury because of their failure to state the truth.

I have here a copy of the letter of the French Ambassador to the effect that Grenier never was in the French Army. They have no record of him at all.

The Senator referred to another case. I may say to the Senator that I have examined scores of these cases, and I should be glad to show them to the Senate. This is, shall I say, one of the worst cases out of the scores that I have examined. The Senator dwelt upon that case with great earnestness.

The Branch case is one of a negro laborer without friends or influence. Fifteen years ago he married a woman in Canada who deserted him after 6 months. Seven years later, after the legal presumption of her death had arisen, he entered into a common-law marriage, which was permitted in the place where the marriage was entered into, in the State of New York. He followed this with a ceremonial marriage. Not only was there the common-law marriage, but there was a ceremonial marriage. He had a child during his common-law relationship, which died. Another child was born of his legal marriage and still lives. The charge that his child is an illegitimate one is, of course, incorrect.

The charges that he smuggled his mistress into the United States is equally without the slightest basis in fact. His common-law wife and the ceremonial wife never was in Canada. The woman involved was first his common-law wife and then his wife, as stated, by the ceremonial marriage. The wife was born in Tennessee, a citizen of the United States. The child was born in the United States. This is one of the cases that are rather the most revolting of the cases which I have examined out of the entire 2,800.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I have just gotten from the reporter the question by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON. But unless the law is changed as is proposed in this bill, many criminals, by reason of statutes of limitations that have operated for their protection, will remain here, even though they may have been guilty of crimes of violence and other crimes of moral turpitude.

Mr. KING. The Senator has stated the matter correctly.

Mr. KING. They came in here under existing laws which would prevent deportation.

Mr. DAVIS. No statute of limitations exists since the act of 1924. Prior to the act of 1924, if I understand it correctly, if a person remained here 5 years illegally he could not be deported, but since the passage of the 1924 act the statute of limitations has been set aside, and he can be deported even if he has been here for 24 years, provided he came into this country illegally.

Mr. KING. Of course, if it is put upon the ground of when he may be deported, the act of 1924 practically legalized certain entrants up to that time, and I am speaking of anterior to the passage of the act.

Mr. DAVIS. Prior to 1924 the aliens had the right to register, and if they were not criminal aliens, they then would get a certificate that permitted them to remain in the country and make application for citizenship.

Mr. KING. If the Senator means they had to register, he is wrong.

Mr. DAVIS. They did not have to register; no. They were permitted to register by paying a fee of $20, was it not?

Mr. KING. I think it was $18.

Mr. DAVIS. No; they paid a fee of $20 at that particular time, but the present fee is $18. It has been reduced $2 since the 1924 act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the report of the committee states accurately the terms of the bill, and the injustices which would result and the things that would be accomplished. It makes deportable 20,000 persons, as I have indicated. Let me read from the report:

Racketeers and gangsters convicted of carrying concealed or dangerous weapons are not subject to deportation. This is due to the requirement that deportation be for convictions of crimes involving moral turpitude. A man who steals a toy to give to his child may be deported because that is a crime technically involving moral turpitude—

My attention has been called to a case of this character. A young man in a foreign country, when he and some of his playmates were getting ready to respond to the call of their country for military training, young men, had a little celebration and they purloined two or three chickens and cooked them and ate them in their little feast. The boys were all of good character. The boy in question came to the United States legally. When he applied for citizenship papers they asked him if he had ever been charged with any offense, and he said yes, and he told them about this little chicken episode. That was a crime involving moral turpitude, the stealing of a chicken by him and his associates. However, his own country regarded it merely as a little play activity upon his part and that of his associates and did not even prosecute him, but he is subject to deportation, and if we do not pass this bill he will be deported, although he has a wife and, I think he has two children, is a resident of this country and a good law-abiding citizen who cares for himself and for his family.

I could spend hours, Mr. President, calling attention to scores of these cases indicating the hardship and brutality which would result if we shall not pass this bill. If we are interested in American institutions, if we want to be patriotic, using the words of the Senator from North Carolina, it seems to me that we can show no higher evidence of our patriotism than in passing a bill to deport 20,000 criminals, though in so doing we will protect five or six thousand little children and their mothers, all of whom are American citizens, and let their fathers remain in the United States, where they are guilty of no crime, where they are breadwinners, and where they have earned the confidence of the communities in which they live.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that all of the arguments of humanity and legality are in favor of this bill. I desire to tell Senators if we do not pass this bill it is quite likely we will get no bill. These 20,000 criminals will remain. These five or six thousand little children will be deprived of their fathers, of their care and of their protection, and they will be thrust upon the public for the public to support. Where are the humanities, where are the equities, where is the injustice in this matter?

Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina desires his bill to be considered. He has only to indicate it, and the committee will consider it. But this is not an immigration bill. The trouble is that the public has been confused. There has been an improper and unjust propaganda. Many so-called 200-percent Americans have tried to frighten the people and to deceive them as to the character of the bill which is before the Senate. They have been led to believe that this was a measure to open the flood gates for immigration. The only provision in it with respect to immigration is that it restricts more countries. Under the present law, persons may come in if they are qualified for work upon the farms. That is repealed. So we may not appeal to foreigners to come in to work upon our farms, they, of course, having the preference in the quota. That part is repealed. That is the only feature in the bill that might be denominated of an immigration character.

It is essentially a deportation bill, not an immigration bill. The matter has been confused and confounded and the public has been led to believe that it is a measure which would broaden our immigration policies and permit millions of people to come to the United States. Of course that is absurd. Restrictions now are imposed, and it may be in the near future we will further restrict the quotas of immigration. When an immigration bill is before the committee and before the Senate then we can consider the question of immigration, but not during the consideration of a deportation bill.

Mr. President, if this bill shall be recommitted, so far as I am concerned that would end consideration of legislation of this character during this session. May I say that the Secretary of Labor reports to us that if a similar bill had been enacted into law 2 or 3 or 4 years ago, as the Bureau of Immigration desired, 8,000 or 9,000 of the 20,000 criminals the Department of Labor finds to be in the United States would have been deported, and if we do not pass this bill those 20,000 will remain and we will have the question before us again. It seems to me that wisdom, prudence, justice, and a proper regard for the economic condition of our country compel us to vote against recommitting the bill to the committee and to pass the same at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. DAVIS obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. DAVIS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. May I inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania if he intends to address the Senate at some length?

Mr. DAVIS. For about 20 or 30 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was wondering if it would be agreeable to the Senator from Pennsylvania to suspend and permit the District of Columbia appropriation bill to be brought before the Senate for consideration?

Mr. DAVIS. I would rather proceed now if I may, although if the Senator thinks it is more urgent I should be glad to accede to his request.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall not insist.

Mr. DAVIS addressed the Senate. After having spoken for 40 minutes, he said: Mr. President, I am willing to yield now, provided I may go on in the morning; and I ask that my speech be withheld so that it might be continued at that time.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I did not expect to speak upon this bill. Rather I preferred to ask what I thought were pertinent questions, to bring to the attention of other Senators such information as I have. For the information of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and at his request, I brought the books to which he referred in order that he might interrogate me as to matters pertaining to the immigration law over a period of 15 years.

STATUS OF IMMIGRATION LAWS

March 4, 1921: On this date the restrictive immigration and deportation laws were:

The Chinese Exclusion Act.

The general immigration laws of 1917.

The Anarchist Acts of 1918 and 1920.

The passport law.

There were minor laws of limited application, principally modifications, but of sufficient importance to take the time to describe.

Chinese Exclusion Act: This, with amendments, has existed so long and is so generally understood as to need no comment. The passport and special anarchist laws referred to are adequate, in my opinion, on those matters so far as they can be controlled.

1917 act: This is the basic law setting physical, mental, educational, and moral standards, and contract labor restrictions; provides the machinery for administration of everything but the Chinese and Quota Acts, including admission and deportation.

Most of this act was a codification of earlier laws, the important additions being the reading test and barred zone.

The 1917 act, with a few technical exceptions, was not and is not difficult of enforcement. Most hardship cases arising out of it and coming to attention during the period from 1921 to 1931 were satisfactorily disposed of under the several limited powers of discretion granted. Most of the really difficult cases were those resulting from failure of administration of laws from 1912 to 1921, which included the period of the World War.

The highest record of immigration was in 1907, with about 1,300,000 admitted, but the average for the 10 years preceding 1914 was well over a million a year.

A few figures on immigration rejection at ports, and deportation, immediately before the World War are interesting. In the following short synopsis is given total immigration, total rejections, and total deportations upon warrants of deportation. Of the total deportations following are the figures showing aliens deported of the criminal and immoral classes:

I repeat the statement that there is ample power vested in the Secretary of Labor now to deport most of those in that list of 2,800 which has been presented here by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS].

I invite attention to these statistics in order that the Senator from Utah may know that there has been ample power vested in the Department of Labor.

In 1913 immigration amounted to 1,197,892 persons who came into this country. There were rejected at the port 19,938. There were deported 3,461. Of that number, 551 were of the criminal class.

In 1914 immigration admitted into the country amounted to 1,218,480. There were rejected 33,041 and deported 2,088. Included in the latter number were immoral and criminal classes to the number of 862.

In 1915 the immigrants numbered 326,700.

It will be noted there was a reduction in the number coming into this country at that particular time on account of the war. The number of immigrants was 326,700. The number rejected was 24,111. There were deported 1,053, including of the immoral and criminal classes 471.

In 1916, the war being on at that time, there were admitted into this country under the immigration laws 298,826; rejected, 10,383; deported, 2,435, including immoral and criminal classes to the number of 249.

In 1917 those admitted under the immigration laws numbered 295,403; rejected, 15,028; deported, 1,853, including immoral and criminal classes to the number of 376; deportations suspended, 694, including immoral and criminal classes, 98, and insane, 347.

In 1918 the immigration was 110,618; rejected, 7,297; deported, 1,569, including immoral and criminal classes to the number of 199; deportation suspended on 1,045, including immoral and criminal classes to the number of 119; and insane to the number of 575.

In 1919 the immigration into the United States was 141,132; rejected, 8,626; deported, 3,068, including immoral and criminal classes to the number of 322. Deportation that year was suspended in the case of 182.

In 1920 the immigration was 430,001. Senators will notice that the war then was over, and immigrants began to come in. There were rejected 11,795; deported, 2,762, including immoral and criminal classes to the number of 477; and anarchists, 314.

In 1921 the immigration was 991,942; rejected, 13,779; deported, 4,517, including immoral and criminal classes to the number of 1,447; and anarchists, 446.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he leaves his statistics?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask unanimous consent, and especially the consent of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to have inserted in his remarks at this point in the RECORD two tables—table A, aliens admitted to the United States under the provisions of the Immigration Act of 1924 during the past 5 years; and table B, aliens deported from the United States during the past 5 years.

Mr. DAVIS. I had intended to insert those tables in the RECORD later on. However, I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the tables will be included in the RECORD at this point in the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The tables are as follows:

TABLE A.—Aliens admitted to the United States under the provisions of the Immigration Act of 1924

Total	186,853	142,147	127,785	134,652	144,942	736,379
Total, all admissions	280,679	174,871	150,728	163,904	179,721	949,903

[1] Natives of nonquota countries include persons born in Canada, Newfoundland, Mexico, Cuba, Haiti, Dominican Republic, Canal Zone, or independent countries of Central or South America. The separate classification for their wives and children shows only those who were born in quota countries, but come in under the man's nonquota status.

NOTE.—The official figures for new immigrants admitted for permanent residence always differ slightly from figures developed as above. This is because in establishing these figures, it is necessary to take into account laws prior to the 1924 act in the classification, even though all admissions actually occur under the provisions of the 1924 act. The official figures for immigrants admitted for permanent residence are: 1931, 97,139; 1932, 35,576; 1933, 23,068; 1934, 29,470; 1935, 34,956; 5-year total, 220,209.

Grand total	29,861	30,201	30,212	16,889	16,297

Mr. DAVIS. The table of statistics presented by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] gives the number of aliens entering this country by Executive order which I recommended to President Hoover at the beginning of the depression in 1930.

If I remember correctly, 150,000 was the total number coming from Europe at that time, which was practically reduced to 10 percent of that number. This Executive order became effective at the time when unemployment was growing with great rapidity.

That Executive order, as I understand it, is still in effect.

Mr. President, from the table from which I have been reading it will be noted that prior to the World War deportations after entry amounted to 3,461 and 2,088 for the fiscal years ended June 30, 1913, and June 30, 1914, respectively, no part of which was during the war; and during those years, of those deported, only 551 and 862, respectively, were aliens of criminal and immoral classes. Immigration in both of these years was on a high level.

Beginning in 1916, because of war conditions, deportation was suspended in a considerable number of cases, including for 3 years 294 of the criminal and immoral classes and 1,316 insane persons. There were also included some epileptic, feeble-minded, and imbecile aliens not classified as insane.

One of the most difficult problems after the close of the war was ridding the country of the insane and other mentally defective aliens, as well as those of the criminal and immoral classes, whose deportation was stayed. It will also be noted that during the fiscal years 1920 and 1921 there were deported 760 anarchists, and during 1921 the largest number of aliens of criminal and immoral classes theretofore deported in any one year of our history, amounting to 1,447.

During the fiscal year 1921 immigration almost reached the million mark and indicated conclusively that, unless some restriction were placed upon numbers, all previous records of immigrants admitted would be broken in 1922 and subsequent years.

I now desire to have placed in the RECORD the immigration and deportation figures from 1922 to 1935.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Year	Total immigration	Rejected	Deported with warrants		Expulsions without warrants	Total expulsions
			Total	Criminal and immoral
1922	309,556	13,731	4,345	709	----------	----------

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to read just a few of these figures.

It has been charged that under the present law we cannot deport these aliens. I believe I have had as much experience as any other administrative officer in the deportation of aliens. I have said on the floor of the Senate, and I say again, that the hangman's job is an easy one compared to that of Secretary of Labor when he has to enforce the deportation law, especially with regard to certain cases that arouse all the sympathy that is within a man's soul.

I remember the case of a smuggled alien's family, and I think it hardened me a little bit when we had a report on that particular family. In one of our Midwestern States this family had smuggled in one of its children who could not pass the medical examination at the port. The child was smuggled in, and they sent it to a school. The child had scalp disease. When we found this out and brought in the child for examination, and put it in the bureau of health, we found that the child had transmitted that loathsome disease of ringworm of the scalp to nearly all the children in that schoolroom in the public school to which she was sent.

Then I began to think in terms of the children legally here. When we had to deal with the insane and with those persons requiring medical attention I began to lose some of my sympathy for cases of that particular kind and to think in terms of the children we had in the schools of America. I believe we ought to enforce law, especially the part of it pertaining to medical inspection, with all the power of the Government.

It is said that this law cannot be enforced. Let me read to you some figures; and I am reading them because the distinguished junior Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] made a statement with reference to the administration of the act during the time I was Secretary of Labor.

In 1922, the first year for which I made a report to Congress, the total immigration was 309,556. We rejected at the ports 13,731 aliens who came under the classification that was inserted in the RECORD by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. We deported that year criminal aliens to the number of 709.

I am not going to read the total of each and every year during that time; but the total number of aliens who came in during that particular time was 3,434,696. There was practically no organization of the immigration staff when I assumed the duties of Secretary of Labor. The immigragration staff had to be reorganized, from top to bottom. We rejected at the ports from 1922 to 1932, 192,346 persons. We had a total of rejections or aliens deported with warrants of 125,601. We had criminals who were deported during those particular 10 years to the number of 17,795. The number of expulsions without warrants was 94,334. Those aliens were given the right to leave without cost to the Government, because it costs from $100 to $200 to deport every alien who is in the United States illegally, or who comes here and is unable to pass inspection. We deported without warrants 94,334, and the total expulsions were 185,221.

Mr. President, I wish to say a word in reply to what the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] said about the Republicans being negligent in their duty. I made the recommendation when I was Secretary of Labor, and I brought the records here to support my plea, that the Congress of the United States provide for the enrollment of aliens. I recommended that in 1922, but when the 1924 act was passed it gave the right to all those aliens who were illegally here, if they could pass the regular test, the right to enroll in a sort of way, and by the payment of a fee of $20 they were enabled to get a legal status as the first step in becoming citizens. That law was passed upon the recommendation of the Secretary of Labor at that particular time.

The Secretary of Labor also called to the attention of the Congress the fact that we ought to have an enrollment of aliens because at that particular time the illegal immigrants were coming across the Mexican border by the thousands, and we did not have jails enough to put them in. We had to shoo them back just like chickens.

Mr. President, there are some parts of the pending bill I like; but there ought to be something to put a stop to the possibility of insulting aliens in this country by saying to them, "You are here illegally, and have not anything to show that you have a right to be here."

When I became Secretary of Labor, I found that the naturalization law permitted the Secretary to issue a certificate to the alien upon his arrival showing he was legally in the United States. I presented the matter to the solicitor of the Department and he concurred, so instead of permitting them to be taken off ships like sheep, we issued to each alien a certificate to take with him to show that he was legally in the United States, so that those who had charge of the immigration law would not cause someone who did not understand our language and customs any inconvenience when they were investigating those who were legally here.

Mr. President, I desire at this point to insert in the RECORD a table showing the number of immigrants admitted, rejected, and deported during the years 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920, and 1921, with comment on the tables submitted.

There being no objection, the table and comment were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1913:
Immigration	1,197,892
Rejected	19,938
Deported (including immoral and criminal classes, 551)	3,461
1914:
Immigration	1,218,480
Rejected	33,041
Deported (including immoral and criminal classes, 862)	2,088
1915:
Immigration	326,700
Rejected	24,111
Deported (including immoral and criminal classes, 471)	1,053
1916:
Immigration	298,826
Rejected	10,383
Deported (including immoral and criminal classes, 249)	2,435
1917:
Immigration	295,403
Rejected	16,028
Deported (including immoral and criminal classes, 376)	1,853
Deportation suspended (including immoral and criminal classes, 98; insane, 347)	694
1918:
Immigration	110,618
Rejected	7,297
Deported (including immoral and criminal classes, 199)	1,569
Deportation suspended (including immoral and criminal classes, 119; insane, 575)	1,045
1919:
Immigration	141,132
Rejected	8,626
Deported (including immoral and criminal classes, 322)	3,068
Deportation suspended [1]	182
1920:
Immigration	430,001
Rejected	11,795
Deported (including immoral and criminal classes, 477; anarchists, 314)	2,762
1921:
Immigration	901,942
Rejected	13,779
Deported (including immoral and criminal classes, 1,447; anarchists, 446)	4,517

[1] Deportation suspended because of war conditions.

From the above tables it will be noted that prior to the World War deportations after entry amounted to 3,461 and 2,088 for the fiscal years ended June 30, 1913 and 1914, respectively, no part of which was during the war, and during those years, of those deported only 551 and 862, respectively, were aliens of criminal and immoral classes. Immigration in both of these years was at a very high level.

Beginning in 1916, because of war conditions, deportation was suspended in a considerable number of cases, including for 3 years 294 of the criminal and immoral classes and 1,316 insane persons. There were also included some epileptics, feeble-minded, and imbecile aliens not classified as insane. One of the most difficult problems after the close of the war was ridding the country of the insane and other mentally defective aliens as well as those of criminal and immoral classes whose deportation was stayed.

It will also be noted that during the fiscal years 1920 and 1921 there were deported 760 anarchists and during 1921 the largest number of aliens of criminal and immoral classes theretofore deported in any year of our history, amounting to 1,447.

During the fiscal year 1921 immigration almost reached the million mark and indicated conclusively that unless some restriction were placed upon numbers that all previous records of immigrants admitted would be broken in 1922 and the subsequent years.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, during the course of my remarks the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] was permitted to insert some statistics in the RECORD, and they show that in 1933 the total immigration amounted to 23,000. There were rejected at the ports 5,527. There were deported as criminal aliens 2,712. There was a total of aliens admitted, all told, of 24,737.

We are confronted today with the problem of acting on a measure under which it is expected that within 3 years the aliens illegally in this country will be rounded up. They cannot be rounded up with the present force in 3 years. It cannot be done, Mr. President, in 3 years. We have no adequate enforcement law. I contend, therefore, that the law will not be enforced, except at tremendous expense.

As I was about to point out, when I was Secretary of Labor, it was necessary to establish a border patrol on the Canadian and Mexican borders. We had to establish new officers under the Immigration Service in every port of this country. Practically all appointees are under the civil service. It was necessary to make new districts. We were confronted with a disorganized force with which to enforce restricted-immigration law.

Mr. President, this law cannot be enforced with a border patrol of five or six hundred men. If I remember correctly—and I am speaking from memory—there was one patrolman to every 400 miles.

As I have already pointed out, our idea was to have the alien, after he had been here a year, go with his passport to the county clerk or the postmaster or someone designated by the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, and to pay a small part of his fee, $1, on enrollment day, and that dollar would have paid the running expenses of the Immigration and Naturalization Bureaus.

Mr. President, I predict now on the floor of the Senate that this measure could not be enforced with the present staff. I have appeared before congressional committees begging for money to enforce the law, and I could not get it. I am not going to say that the Republicans refused to make the appropriations or that the Democrats refused, because most of the men on the other side of the Chamber were voting for it, while on my own side of the Chamber they did not approve it.

O Mr. President, I wish to repeat that the hangman's job is a gentleman's job compared with the job of the Secretary of Labor in these hardship cases. I have sympathy for these 2,800 people. I would have no objection to extending the great warm hand of friendship to them if I believed for a moment that that would end the matter; but it would not. It is so easy to get across the border, it is so easy to enter this country through the seamen's law, it is so easy to enter in so many ways, that if this measure shall be enacted, in 3 years there will be a demand for more legislation, for an extension of the time for some sympathetic soul who wants to come in, perhaps some mother with a sick child and a dozen others will sneak in because we let our hearts go out to the mother and her child.

No man has more sympathy with the alien than have I. I am an alien-born myself. I came into this country as a child, holding to my mother's apron strings. I see all of these aliens coming in, and I know that if we permit them to come in, sneaking in under the immigration law, cheating their way in, and then being given citizenship, we might just as well repeal the Immigration Act, leave the doors wide open, for all to come in.

The idea of an interdepartmental committee is all wrong. It is the job of the Secretary of Labor, under the law, to do what is here proposed to be turned over to a committee. The Secretary has a board of review of five or six important men, many of them with good legal minds, many of them with hearts as big as any heart in this Chamber, and I think the responsibility ought to be there, and not elsewhere. I have enough faith in the people to know that you may fool the people once in a while, but you will never be able to fool them all the time.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DAVIS. I should prefer not to yield now, unless it is for some very important question. I am now going to discuss the bill. Does the Senator from New York desire to put something in the RECORD?

Mr. COPELAND. I desire to ask the Senator a question, but I do not wish to divert him. I do not see why we have to be so distressed over the pending bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I will tell the Senator in a few moments, if he will just wait.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. I shall be glad to wait, because I should like to find out why Senators should be so distressed over the bill. I have not been able as yet to ascertain.

Mr. DAVIS. For the time being I am answering the question asked by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH].

It has been said on the floor of the Senate that the American Federation of Labor is not opposed to the bill. To make sure of that, I called up President Green, of the American Federation of Labor, this afternoon. The part of the bill to which he is opposed is the only part of the bill to which I am opposed. It is something to which I was opposed when I was Secretary of Labor.

I am now going to discuss the bill.

Section 1 (1) is in keeping with the recommendations in the reports of the Secretary of Labor for 1925 and 1927. I desire the Senator from New York to pay particular attention to this, because I know he is a home-loving man; he is kind; he is generous; and any sympathetic plea touches his heart. He is interested in the matter from that particular point of view.

Section 1 (2) makes it possible to deport an alien for a legitimate fisticuff. I desire the Senator from New York to pay particular attention to this point. I have discussed this matter with men who served in the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and what I am now about to say is what they have reported to me concerning the bill. Section 1 (2) makes it possible to deport an alien for a legitimate fisticuff, for the most trivial offense, even though the court finds it justified by refusing to impose sentence. It must be remembered that pleading guilty to a very minor charge results in conviction, though the court finds the act justifiable.

Section 1 (3) carries out the purpose of the recommendation of the Secretary of Labor to Congress made in 1925.

Section 1 (4) provides deportation of any alien who is convicted of carrying any dangerous weapon—whatever that may be—even though he is not sentenced. The same comment applies to section 1 (2). If a judge is prejudiced against an alien and fines him for the most trivial offense, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, if he lives up to his oath of office, will have to deport the alien.

As I see the matter, Mr. President, the worst part of it all is that there is no appeal from the Commissioner's action. He will be the dictator of American immigration laws.

Those are the sections to which I am opposed.

Deportation may be had, in the cases I have just referred to, even though the crimes are not sufficient to justify a court in passing sentence. Discretion is left in the hands of a committee which may be composed of clerks or representatives of the Secretary of Labor. How much attention is the Secretary of State going to give to the work of the interdepartmental committee? How much time is the Attorney General going to give to it? How much time is the Secretary of Labor going to give to it? With the power vested as it is, there is no responsible head of the committee. If the power is to be lodged anywhere, let it be lodged with the Secretary of Labor. Let us not be influenced by consideration of who shall be Secretary of Labor. Whoever he or she is, he cannot go far wrong.

The recommendations of the Secretary of Labor in 1925—and I say this for the benefit of the Senator from Washington—eliminated the qualification "involving moral turpitude", and, instead, made an alien deportable for (1) any offense for which he is sentenced to imprisonment for a year or more, or (2) conviction of several offenses for which the total of one or more previous sentences amounts to 18 months or more.

The Secretary of Labor, as I pointed out, already has a board of review under the direction of a responsible officer; namely, the Secretary of Labor himself. This board was created in 1922 by the then Secretary of Labor. The board sits to determine whether or not under the law there is a right to deport. I say that under this bill we are delegating to one person the power to enforce the immigration law in matters of this kind, especially under the bill as it first came out.

Section 2 of the bill proposes to allow judges to make recommendations against deportation within 6 months, instead of 30 days, provided the Interdepartmental Committee approves the judges' recommendations. It also proposes to give effect to pardons upon the same condition of approval by the committee.

What is then going to happen to the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives? They will be asked to intercede with these judges. We shall be traipsing down to the Secretary of Labor. I should not want to be Secretary of Labor under such circumstances, and have to listen to the appeals that are going to be made to him.

Increasing the period of judicial recommendation seems just in view of the intended addition of very minor crimes or misdemeanors to the deportation penalty; but it should be remembered that these crimes will for the most part be State offenses. If any right is given the State to recommend against deportation for a violation of its own statutes, why should that action be reviewable by a Federal committee, which may be composed only of minor officers in a department?

Section 3: It will be noted by this section that the committee can use its discretion only if the alien has lived in the United States 10 years or has a certain relative or relatives in the United States, and is an alien not ineligible to citizenship, and has not been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude. In other words, even with proper family connections, if the alien comes within section 1, he cannot remain or be registered, although in section 1 the committee may restrain from deportation. Here obviously is an ambiguity.

From year to year from 1922 to 1931 the Secretary of Labor advocated the registration or enrollment of aliens in order that they might be assisted to citizenship. At no time, however, has it been deemed expedient to force an alien to become a citizen.

Subdivisions (c) of section 3 and (b) of section 5 should be eliminated. It must be remembered that an alien is subject to a check on his deportment. If given facilities to become a citizen and he is naturalized he may become a good citizen, but an alien driven to naturalization under threat of deportation is a menace to our Government.

Section 4: This provides for adjustment of status and quota for persons of preference or nonquota status in the United States and those admitted as students under proper conditions.

Comment: This is in substance what has previously been requested in asking for administration discretion. On several occasions requests for authority to adjust hardship cases were submitted. See especially the report of the Commissioner General, 1927, page 23.

Section 5 (a): This is to register aliens arriving prior to July 1, 1924. This was specifically requested in the Secretary of Labor's report of 1926 and in subsequent requests.

Subdivision (b) requires registrants to become citizens or be deported. See comment after section 3 (c).

Section 6 is administrative and provides for charging quotas with adjustments.

Section 7 changes fee for registration from $10 to $18.

Section 8 authorizes the Secretary of Labor to designate officers throughout the service to issue warrants of arrest.

Comment: This is not unreasonable. It is a request frequently discussed during all years past with the chairman of the Immigration Committee of the House. Heretofore it has been deemed advisable by Congress not to heed the requests. Instead, it will be recalled, additional assistants to the Secretary of Labor were granted.

Section 9 authorizes detention of aliens without warrant for 24 hours.

Section 10 authorizes rules and regulations.

Section 11 states the interdepartmental committee shall be representatives of the Departments of Labor, State, and Justice. It does not state who they shall be or how appointed.

Comment: If the Secretary of Labor is not the proper authority in which to vest discretion, why not have a legitimate court?

Section 13 abolishes preferences for agriculture. This has been dead for years, and its fallacy officially called to the attention of Congress by the Secretary of Labor in his annual reports of 1927 and 1928.

Mr. President, I desire to present and have printed in the RECORD a letter in the nature of a digest of the pending bill submitted to me by one who served the Department of Labor for 12 years, and served at a time when the reorganization of the Department was being made with respect to the change from open to restrictive immigration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

FEBRUARY 20, 1936.

Senator JAMES J. DAVIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: After making a study of S. 2969, attached, with a view of preparing amendments, it is my candid opinion that I would not undertake to amend it. The bill as a whole is vicious and should be defeated.

Section 1 relates to subjects covered in whole or in part by statutes. This section is intended to convey the impression that the present laws are grossly inadequate to meet conditions. The truth is that if the law extends the authority to cover violations of State narcotic laws and for carrying concealed weapons, etc., as provided for in this section, the increase in the number deported would be negligible.

Section 2 refers principally to the right of judges to prevent deportation. The judges already have this right, but seldom exercise it. From my 10 years' experience in deciding immigration cases, I know that this right was exercised in so few cases as to present no administrative problem. The only purpose I can see in the proposed provisions in this bill is to give time to those interested in the deportable alien to intercede in behalf of the alien and in this way thwart the deportation order.

Section 3 is very cleverly designed to create a further loophole in our restrictive immigration laws. The request is based upon the much-abused use of the slogan "to relieve unusual hardship cases."

The responsibility for the enforcement of our immigation laws now rests squarely upon the shoulders of the Secretary of Labor, a high and responsible official of our Government. This is as it should be. For 10 years you carried this responsibility and I assisted, and we know that while hardship cases arose, yet they were few in number in comparison with the thousands passing over our desks. We know also that we were able to handle all of the "unusual hardship cases" in a just and humane way.

The number of hardship cases submitted in the committee report obviously includes cases that would come under the provisions of this proposed legislation and are not cases arising under the present law. There would be no such array of cases if the present officials had performed their duty as required under their oath of office.

Section 5 primarily extends the date for registration of aliens who are here illegally from June 1, 1921, to July 1, 1924. If this was all, there would be no particular objections, but that is not all. Paragraph C of this bill, as well as other sections, undertakes to force citizenship upon various classes of aliens.

Citizenship is the greatest gift we have to offer those of foreign birth. Surely this great gift should not be forced upon reluctant aliens. What value do the sponsors of this kind of legislation place upon citizenship? Apparently they hold it in light esteem and consider it of no value.

Citizenship should only be bestowed upon those seeking it of their own initiative. What kind of a citizen will an alien become who has been forced to take this step lest he lose his right to remain here?

Section 11 creates a so-called interdepartmental committee, composed of representatives of the Departments of Labor, State, and Justice.

This committee is to administer all discretionary authority. This appears to be the main objective of this bill.

This bill in one form or another has been before Congress for the past several sessions. Originally the discretionary authority was to be lodged in the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization. Congress refused to grant such authority to the Commissioner, and now this same discretionary authority is asked for an interdepartmental committee. It is a cheap subterfuge.

Note the wording of the paragraphs creating the interdepartmental committee. Nothing said as to who is to select the representatives. No tenure of office mentioned. No responsible officers are named to be members. Nothing to indicate the number. No limit as to number. If this bill should become a law, this committee will be composed of subservient clerks, and we will have the spectacle of a committee of irresponsible clerks handling this great and vital matter with the real administrators hiding behind its skirts.

If Congress wishes to take the responsibility for the enforcement of our immigration laws away from the Secretary of Labor, it should create an immigration court composed of a definite number of judges to be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate. Fix their compensation. Define its jurisdiction and remove its members out from under the influence of politics.

This bill should not become a law. It is my sincere belief that there is no real need for such legislation; that the laws already on our statute books provide ample authority for the deportation of the undesirable aliens in our midst, after they are once apprehended.

The one thing needed is a mandatory registration law for all aliens in this country. This for the purpose of enabling immigration officers to locate those who have no right to be and remain here.

This bill is an obvious attempt to broaden the authority of an executive who is irking under the necessity of enforcing the laws as they now stand.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, for the information of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD a digest of the several reports of the Secretary of Labor from 1921 to 1930 on immigration, with some general comments on the immigration law from 1921 to 1935.

There being no objection, the digest and comments were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADMINISTRATION LEGISLATION AND RECOMMENDATIONS DURING AND AFTER 1921

1921: The first proposal by Congress to limit immigration by numbers was vetoed by inaction of President Wilson in the closing days of his administration.

During the special session of Congress called by President Harding limitation by quota was enacted by the Congress and became law June 3, 1921, just 28 days before the close of the fiscal year. Consequently its effect is not shown until 1925.

It was anticipated that 350,000 immigrants would be admitted under it and the horribe condition then existing in the physical plant at Ellis Island eliminated. An estimate of $1,008,000 to recondition the place was asked, of which $123,470.75 was submitted to the Congress by the Bureau of the Budget.

1922—Admissions—Laws: The backbone of the immigration laws, which furnishes most of the physical, mental, and moral standards for immigrants, is the act of 1917. There has appeared little need for changing that act. In 1922 there was added to the classes of deportable aliens those convicted under certain provisions of the narcotic laws. In that respect this was strengthened again in 1931 upon requests of the Secretary of Labor, several times contained in annual reports.

The year 1922 saw the first full year of operation of the then temporary 3-percent restrictive law. In that year immigration dropped from nearly a million (1921) to 309,556. Immigration from Canada and Mexico was little affected.

Deportations: It will be noted that deportations began to increase following the war, in 1922 amounting to 4,345, of which 709 were of criminal and immoral classes. There were real hardship cases then. In the Secretary's report of 1922 is found the following:

"By a course of firm conduct and impartial dealing, the Department has succeeded in eliminating from the country a majority of the mental defectives that had accumulated, and progress is being made in eliminating the others. It makes one's heart bleed with compassion to deal with many of these unfortunates and makes an officer wish that he might trade places with a hangman."

At pages 98 and 99 will be found more details on the handling of hundreds of mental cases suspended in the previous administration, including over 900 insane, in addition to other less serious mental cases. Rejections did not show a decrease until economic adversities beset us, and until after July 1, 1924, both at sea and land ports there was no way of preventing aliens applying whether quota was open or closed. While fines were placed upon steamship companies, there were always some who were willing to take a chance of getting their passengers in under the line. Hence the greatest steamship races in history took place in that year.

Appropriations for enforcement were cut so that at the ports personnel was reduced nearly one-half. At the same time, as noted in the Secretary's report for 1922 (p. 85), the quota law, while reducing immigration vastly increased the work of the ports. Administratively the Board of Review in Washington was created to expedite the handling of appeals under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of Labor.

Recommendations for selection of immigrants: The first quota law exempted from restriction not only natives of the Americas but also residents of 1 year. The amendment of 1922 changed that to natives and residents of 5 years, but even then immigration outside of quota grew, and greater opportunities for fraud offered. Fraudulent documents of birth and residence were numerous.

In the report for 1922 the passport system then in use was condemned. It stated:

"The passport system at the present time, with reference to immigration, ill adapted to our needs. * * * Those qualified to enter should be selected on the other side and given our certificate of qualification. To accomplish this purpose legislation should be enacted providing for the examination abroad of prospective emigrants."

1923.—General comment: No new laws were given for enforcement in this year, yet notwithstanding the further restrictive amendment to the quota act of 1921, in 1922 immigration increased to more than half a million. Rejections also increased from 13,731 to 20,619 with formal deportations amounting to 3,661, of which 717 were of criminal and immoral classes. It will be noted that constantly the aim was to rid the country of the most highly undesirable. That deportation was not still further accelerated was caused by the failure of Congress to realize the enormity of the task then imposed by trying to keep out the increasingly large number of "gate crashers."

The annual report of 1923 again called attention to the need for funds and enforcement officers. A codification of all alien laws, including specific amendments, was requested. While no codification has ever been made the 1924 act—requiring visas, giving American consuls the authority to refuse, and providing some penalties in the fiscal year 1925—were beneficial. A recommendation was also made for the enrollment of all aliens so that their identity and status could always be determined without embarrassment to them.

1924.—General comment: In this year nearly three-quarters of a million immigrants were legally admitted. More than 30,000 were rejected and over 6,000 (nearly twice the previous year), including 864 criminal and immoral aliens, were deported.

This was an enormous job, considering that restriction had by this time set up well-organized movements of smuggling and surreptitious entries. Still no substantial relief by appropriation was granted, and again definite plans were presented.

Molded after the pattern presented by the Secretary of Labor to the House Committee on Immigration, the Immigration Act of 1924, requiring immigration visas, enlarging the penalties to steamship companies, and further restricting by numbers to 2 percent, this law in the following year had marked effect. Tentative agreements were, in the fiscal year 1924, had with appropriate offices of some European countries that they would consent to a preliminary examination of aliens by American consuls to determine admissibility. While the 1917 act authorized the making of agreements of this character, it had until that year been announced by members of the Immigration Committee of the House and officers of the Department of State that no government would ever consent to this control of immigrants from abroad. But it was done, and the act of 1924 was drafted after the consents were had.

Enrollment of aliens—Compulsory naturalization: Again in 1924 a recommendation for enrollment of aliens was submitted. As previously asserted, and as I still am firmly convinced, when an alien immigrant is within our gates, we should provide a program of Americanization. I do not, however, believe in compulsory naturalization.

1925—General comment: The fiscal year of 1925 was notable for several reasons. It was the first year of operation of the 1924 Immigration Act, the present basic law for numerical limitation. Immigration was reduced to 294,314, and rejections at seaports dropped because of the discretion given to consular officers in granting visas. Land-border rejections, however, were still high, because penalties, such as to steamship companies coming to seaports, were not generally applicable.

Border patrol: The second notable event was the granting by Congress of an appropriation of $1,000,000 for a land-border patrol. Previously hundreds of miles of border without officers to prevent offered opportunities for wholesale crossings. While the 500 patrol officers thus provided was but a nucleus of a really effective enforcement agency, it helped a great deal.

Deportations increased: Deportations by warrants increased to 9,495, including a larger number of criminal and immoral persons, namely, 1,015.

Recommendations: In the 1925 report of the Secretary of Labor was incorporated a review of some of the previous and new recommendations for legislation. These included the enrollment plan, a codification of alien laws, a strengthening of deportation laws to include in principle some of the changes which are now requested by the present Secretary of Labor but, at the same time, giving to aliens every reasonable protection against overzealous administrators. The program of deportation recommendations had been incorporated in a deportation bill, H. R. 11796, which passed the House but not the Senate. Fourteen classes were included, of which, however, two had only recommended in principle and not in the broad language provided. If that program had been followed, it would be unnecessary to consider any of the proposals now presented for a deportation program, and with which I am not wholly in accord. Pages 115 to 117 of the report of the Secretary for 1925 contain this deportation program.

Technical advisers: In that year also preliminary arrangement for a trial of physical and mental examinations before issuance of visas was agreed to, and generally put into effect in later years. This technical adviser service to consulates has probably done more than any other one thing ever did do to improve the quality of immigrants received.

The uniting of families: The uniting of families by certain preferences was also recommended, and in subsequent years this program was adopted by Congress.

1926—General comment: The fical year 1926 was the most satisfactory in the administration of the immigration laws. The technical adviser service abroad was in working order, and the number of rejections at seaports was almost nil because of the preliminary precautions taken in examinations abroad. Yet 304,488 immigrants were admitted, and all had to be properly documented before application for admission.

However, because of pressure on the land borders, and because of the practice which had from time immemorial existed in permitting persons in Canada and Mexico to cross daily to work in the United States, the work of examination was no less difficult.

Over 20,000 were rejected.

Deportations on warrants increased to 10,904, including 1,286 criminal and immoral—a new record.

The border patrol in that year became an effective organization, and I believe that the upward trend in illegal entrances of aliens was halted.

Relieving hardship cases: Prior recommendations were renewed, together with new ones relating to the more humane aspects of regulation, including methods of preventing separation of families and an allotment of a few visas for hardship cases to the Secretary of Labor. As pointed out in the 1926 report (p. 120), every immigrant inspector and each member of the Board of Review was being trained to the principle that, as they were dealing with the rights of human beings, every principle of equity should be available to the alien as well as to the Government, to the end that no one should suffer unjustly in the administration of this most difficult set of laws.

1927 to 1930—General comment: During these years the number of immigrants admitted did not vary appreciably, being from 335,175 to 241,700, and with the assistance of the border patrol deportations became more and more effective. Also, a policy was adopted to encourage the departure of aliens, not of the criminal and immoral classes, without warrants of deportation. Total expulsions amounted to 26,674 in 1927, 31,671 in 1928, 38,796 in 1929, and 28,018 in 1930. Of these an average of over 12,000 were on formal warrants, and deportation of criminal and immoral classes increased from 1,579 in 1927 to 1,841 in 1928, 1,856 in 1929, and 2,456 in 1930.

Recommendations: Included in recommendations in the annual report of 1927 were suggestions for reuniting families, preventing separations, and a certain amount of discretion in administrative authority. As in several years past, also, penalties for surreptitious entries were requested. The 1928 report also reiterated these needs. The uselessness of the preference granted by the 1924 act in favor of immigrants skilled in agriculture was also pointed out.

Canadian border crossings for labor: During these years was evolved a policy of forbidding the entrance as business "visitors" aliens residing in foreign contiguous territory, to labor in the United States. On April 1, 1927, an administrative order was put into effect barring from such crossing aliens who were not legally admitted residents of the United States. A program was worked out, however, whereby, through the cooperation of the State Department, worthy cases of nonresident aliens secured proper visas.

This restriction, however, was a blow to the large number of aliens residing in Canada, because they could not qualify for admission as immigrants, and yet enjoyed the privilege of working here. It was fought in court, and finally, on April 8, 1929, the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the viewpoint of the Secretary of Labor. In the report of 1928 is stated:

"If its (the Supreme Court) decision is against the Government, then the present restrictive immigration law will no longer be of any effect as a protection to the wage earners of the United States against alien labor of foreign countries."

This instance shows how effective can be an administrative action:

Legislation of March 1929: On March 2 and 4 of 1929 a part of recommendations were approved. The act of March 2 authorized a voluntary registration of certain aliens who arrived before June 3, 1921; and the act of March 4 made criminal the surreptitious entry of an alien, his return after deportation, and made deportable some criminal aliens that previously it had been impossible to reach. These acts, however, were more stringent than requested, and were later modified, upon recommendation, to relieve some of the extreme hardships created. In the meantime certificates of lawful admission were provided incoming immigrants, another step toward the ultimate registration of all aliens.

The operation of the border patrol, and the coordination of activities of the Immigration Service, with the additional help of penalties provided, made it possible in the annual report of 1932 to report (p. 15) that "illegal entries over the boundaries have been materially checked" and "that the purposes of immigration laws are reasonably well carried out."

1931 to 1933—General comments: During these years, except for the volume of immigration, the results of enforcement were similar to the immediately preceding years. However, the reputed "drives" to round up aliens believed to be subject to deportation resulted in little difference in actual expulsions and deportations, in 1931 being 29,861; in 1932, 30,201; and 1933, 30,112; practically all the deportations in the fiscal year 1933 occurring prior to March 4 of that year. It will be noted also that the level of deportations of criminal and immoral classes have remained at about the same level of about 2,500 up to 1935.

1934 and 1935—General comment: While no reasons are assigned, during the period from July 1, 1933, to June 30, 1935, deportations and total expulsions declined by about 50 percent, from an average of 19,500 formal warrants in the 2 preceding years to an average of about 8,500 in 1934 and 1935, with total expulsions with and without warrants declining by some 14,000 a year. These are not accounted for in the total of some 2,800 cases said to be now held in abeyance as accumulated over the period of more than 2 years.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the restriction of immigration has been a serious problem to my knowledge over a period of more than 40 years.

I remember very well the agitation for restrictive legislation against orientals, which was passed in 1882, and at that time the people of America believed that a solution was had of their immigration problems.

This was not true, however, for, while the restriction of orientals brought a slight reduction in agitation, there immediately began a more serious problem during the late eighties and early nineties in the development of the major industries of the country. There was a press for cheap labor and the corporations went out into the farming communities and through the countryside in central Europe to recruit the common labor which could not be found in the United States. So great was the competition in the securing of this labor that agents were sent abroad and railroads and steamship lines were subsidized by industry to such an extent that in many instances the fare of an immigrant from central Europe to Chicago was as low as approximately $10, and this amount was frequently advanced by the employers to be deducted from the wages after the immigrant's arrival. The conditions on ships were such that every available inch of space was used for steerage, and it was a common expression that immigrants in the holds of ships were referred to as being packed like sardines in a box.

The wages which were paid to these immigrants thus recruited were very low, and it can be easily seen that the corporations which were formed with large issues of common stock had to make their profits out of the cheapness of the labor which they imported in this manner.

The immigrants who came to do this work were from every part of central Europe, and in communities where I have lived I have heard every language of Europe spoken where English was little, if any, understood. These immigrants came in colorful groups as they arrived at our shores in their native costumes. They were of the plain kind of countryfolk, generous in spirit, noble in thought, hardy, and with great endurance. They came with one thought in mind, and that was to find a better place for themselves and to help build a great Republic for their posterity.

To get a full and complete picture of these great migrations one has only to read the reports and recommendations, both of the majority and minority, of the Immigration Commission, referred to as the elder Roosevelt Commission, and headed by the late Senator from Vermont, Walter P. Dillingham.

Keen partisanship grew out of this situation because developing industry felt it needed to continue this importation of cheap labor, and it became a partisan issue. Those who believed that the country could only prosper by continued unrestricted immigration were very persistent. During this period between the eighties and up to the time of this Commission's report, the wage earners began to feel the very slimness of their wage and began to demand the American standard which they saw about them. Naturally strikes resulted, and to break these strikes the same corporations used the additional supply of what we might call "raw labor", which was coming in in large numbers at that time. In fact, one of the earlier of our immigration laws is the contract-labor law, which prohibited the contracting for this labor abroad, but this was of little effect when the bars were down and the migrations had started, with the cost of railroad and steamship passage being so low as to present no obstacle to the migration of these millions of people.

The peak of immigration was reached just before the World War when nearly a million and a half immigrants were admitted, but the World War gave us the only breathing spell or any restriction upon immigration that we had after the great migration started. Because of the disturbed conditions in Europe and the unavailability of ships for immigrants we had a breathing spell, during which the 1917 Immigration Act was formulated and which gave us the first real standard by which to bar immigrants and impose restrictions on immigrants from certain oriental countries and the educational or reading test which was applied to all those who thereafter sought entry.

Following the war, however, immigration immediately resumed in great numbers, and we were well on our way to reach or pass the peak previously marked before the war. Nearly a million immigrants entered in the year from July 1, 1920, to June 30, 1921, and it was reported that millions and millions of immigrants—residents of wartime Europe—were breaking up their homes and flocking to ports seeking passage on ships as soon as they were available after being released from wartime service.

This condition brought to attention the necessity for a numerical restrictions of immigration. The first restrictive act was rushed through at the first special session of Congress called in 1921, and the 3-percent restrictive law was passed. Against this restriction there were numerous exceptions, and the total of immigration dropped considerably and gradually increased until it reached again the three-quarters of a million mark.

There was a real battle to get the 3-percent restrictive act, and the battle continued until the passage of the 1924 act, which is the basic restrictive law at the present time, the wisdom of which I believe is now clear to all.

Mr. President, during the time I was administrator of the immigration laws, I tried to temper justice with mercy. My sympathies are naturally with the immigrant who is legally here because I came here myself as an alien boy of 7½ years. This country has treated me well, and now that it has placed me in a position of trust I want to return the benefit to the best of my ability.

Like all other aliens, we came here to improve our condition. During that time aliens were coming to this country because there was a great demand for their services. When they came, they brought with them a knowledge of skills and technical aptitudes which has helped to make this country strong. There was much in the lands they left for which they have a true and natural affection. They came here because of the opportunities of the average man on American farms, in mills, mines, and factories. At the time we came here there was a great demand for workers, and American agents had been sent abroad to recruit labor for American agriculture and industry. Immigrants poured in by the millions. They added color and strength to American life.

Now the need for labor has been replaced by the need for employment. Therefore, it was necessary to change the immigration policy of the country so that the millions of unemployed now within our borders may have the right to work.

This country has ever been regarded as a refuge for the persecuted of other lands, and we have sheltered thousands of men and women who found the Old World customs oppressive to them, and how fortunate are all of us who came to this country as we now enjoy a freedom of speech and the guiding of individual conscience that is denied to many in the lands of their birth. While they have a policy of restrictive immigration, I trust that those who come under this policy will be the noble men and women whose ideals of democracy, constitutional government, and protective genius naturally draw them to this land. Under the limitations of immigration now in effect we may expect that those who come to us will bring with them those things necessary to help give employment to the unemployed.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I ask to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks at this point a digest which I have prepared relative to the three sections of the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Section 1 (1): I am wholly in accord with the provisions of this subsection.

Section 1 (2): This subsection still embodies the vices which the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization alleges exist in the Act of 1917 through the inclusion of time limitations. There is precisely the same temptation for an alien to plead guilty to a lesser offense than that for which he is charged involving moral turpitude in order to escape the penalty of deportation. As the Commissioner says, there is an inducement to have a case nol-prossed. Cases are nol-prossed, of course, through the exercise of political pressure in order to prevent an habitual alien criminal from being deported. An alien may be released on bail which he can jump, or he may be given a suspended sentence. Under this subsection as it now stands, there is a particular temptation to secure the exercise of political pressure in order to get a suspended sentence, because the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization is granted discretionary power to exempt the alien from deportation under such conditions. There remains under this provision the same temptation to secure a recommendation from the judge or magistrate against deportation as in the present law, although to be sure under S. 3969 section 2 gives discretion to the Secretary of Labor as to the desirability of accepting this recommendation. In other words, we still have under this subsection a large amount of discretionary power, and what is worse, we no longer have a provision that aliens with a long record of crime, against whom it is not possible at the moment to bring deportation proceedings because the last offense involving moral turpitude occurred over 5 years ago. It may be pointed out in this connection that here again is a vast temptation to use political pressure to secure a conviction for a crime of lesser moment than that charged in order to escape deportation, and under this subsection that temptation is continuing throughout the entire residence of the alien in the United States. Under the existing statute, if by chance any alien committed a second offense involving moral turpitude, he is mandatorily deportable at any time after his entry into the country. The subsection as now drawn, therefore, grants amnesty to a vast class of habitual criminals who can continue to prey upon the community so long as they avoid an offense involving moral turpitude. (Senators will please read from Fruit of the Family Tree, pp. 8, 16, 186, and also read the report of the Commissioner of Immigration to accompany list of stayed deportation cases dated Jan. 15, 1936, H. Doc. 392.)

Section 1 (3): It is preposterous to continue the embodiment of the provision in this subsection that in order to secure deportation the Government shall prove that an illegal entry was induced, assisted, or aided for the purpose of gain. There is no reason in morals or in law why an alien should be exempt from the penalties to which a citizen is exposed by being an accessory to the commission of a crime. It is a very grave crime to promote illegal entry into the United States, because a reference to section 22 of the Immigration Act of 1924 discloses the character of crimes an alien commits in order to secure entry into the United States by illegal methods, and the penalty imposed by Congress for the perpetration of the crime of illegal entry under the provisions set forth in section 22 carry a penalty of $10,000 fine or 5 years in jail. At the very least the act of March 4, 1929, section 2, provides that any alien who hereafter enters the United States at any time or place other than as designated by immigration officials, or eludes examination, etc., shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 1 year or by a fine of not more than $1,000. In order to bring an alien within the provisions of the statutes as this subsection is now drawn, the promotion of illegal entry would have to become a habit, because it is only upon proof that illegal entry has been promoted on more than one occasion that the alien becomes mandatorily deportable.

Section 1 (4): I object to this subsection for two reasons. First, it contains the vicious limitation as to time which has been discussed in connection with subsection 1 of this section; and secondly, it gives broad discretionary power to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization to release the alien if he thinks it to be in the public interest; that means in substance that the alien is released if enough political pressure can be exercised to save him from deportation. In connection with this subsection I want to call your attention to the fact that in the Uniform Crime Reports, issued by the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice of the United States (last issue), it will be noted that the rate of arrests of aliens for criminal homicide exceeds that of the native-born persons.

Section 2: This section extends the period of time during which the judge may make a recommendation that an alien convicted in his court be not deported as a consequence of such conviction. The obvious result, if indeed it is not the purpose of this extension of time, is to permit the alien to muster political pressure whereby a recommendation for exemption from deportation may be forced from the judge. The provision in the section that the recommendation of the judge must be accompanied by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization is meritorious to the extent that makes it incumbent on the persons exercising political pressure to force attention on the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, in addition to the judge. It is hardly conceivable that if the alien can secure a recommendation that he be not deported from the judge that the Secretary of Labor will nevertheless deport him.

Section 3 (a): This section relates to the 2,862 aliens whose deportation has been suspended by the Department of Labor in defiance of the existing statutes, and which, of course, extends amnesty to all aliens of a similar class who may be subsequently apprehended. The grant of discretionary power conferred by this section extends for 3 years and it not only makes possible a grant of amnesty to any alien illegally entered in the past, but who falls within the scope of its exemption, but also grants amnesty to prospective violators of the law for a period of 3 years. It is, of course, inevitable that when such a provision as this is written into the law the alien blocs will force all the political pressure they can assemble in the next 3 years for its indefinite extension, and leave the Congress no peace or establish any permanency in our immigration policy. The beneficiaries of this provision are those who have successfully hidden themselves in the community for 10 years, or have succeeded in escaping detection for 1 year, and have living in the United States a parent, spouse, legally recognized child, etc. Inasmuch as probably 80 percent of the aliens in the United States have a relative belonging to one or other of the classes mentioned in this subsection, the vast scope of this discretionary power is at once apparent, but worse than that it holds out to the alien the temptation to recognize an illegitimate child or adopt a child in order to escape deportation. This section raises directly the question as to the moral character of an alien who illegally enters the United States. The Department of Labor and the Commissioner of Immigration in particular has repeatedly set forth the view that illegal entry is not in itself any evidence of bad moral character, although, as has already been pointed out, certain classes of illegal entrants are subject to the penalty of $10,000 fine and 5 years in jail, or the lesser penalty under other circumstances of $1,000 fine or 1 year in jail. Section 3 is strongly objected to by the Federation of Labor, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. (See testimony of Hushing before Senate committee.)

Section 4 (a): Inasmuch as aliens who have entered the United States illegally and who may or may not legalize their position in the United States under the provisions of this section are entitled to the privileges of the National Security Act, and also inasmuch as the provisions of the Executive order of May 20, 1935, prescribing rules and regulations for the enforcement of the Emergency Relief Act is so drawn as to make it impossible now to exclude the alien legally entered or illegally entered from the benefits of the Emergency Relief Act, we are holding out through this section a tremendous bonus to any alien abroad to enter the United States, legally, if possible, or illegally, if not possible, in order to enjoy benefits not conferred in any other country in the world upon the foreigner.

Section 4 (b): I regard the provisions of this section as vicious, inasmuch as it puts a premium on an alien using the easier method of entering the United States by declaring himself to be a temporary visitor in order to avoid the more stringent requirements for entry under the quota. It is inevitable that an alien once in the country under the provisions of this section, which is closely linked with section 3 in its application, can evade the restrictive provisions of our immigration statutes much more easily than if he subjected himself to an examination abroad. The Government is deprived of an opportunity to have the consul pass judgment at the moment of application for entry as to whether the immigrant would qualify as a quota immigrant or for a preference within the quota. Furthermore, the provisions granted under this section are distinctly unjust to the honest and law-abiding alien who seeks to enter for permanent residence in accordance with the provisions of the existing statutes. We further object to this section on the grounds that it confers on the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization the right to change the status.

Section 5: The purpose of this section is to establish the legality of entrance of any alien who entered the United States prior to July 1, 1924, of whom there is no record of entry. It has been estimated that this provision, which has been embodied in a series of bills offered from time to time in Congress, would legalize the entry of some 250,000 illegal entrants who entered between 1921 and 1924. There is no possible method of ascertaining the number of direct beneficiaries under this section, but it must be borne in mind that every beneficiary whose entry is legalized acquires the privilege, upon establishing citizenship, of bringing in nonquota immigrants who are relatives. There can be no question but what the enactment of this provision would increase the number of immigrants coming into the United States during this period of depression.

Section 6 (a): My position in regard to this section is that the burden of proof should be upon the alien in every matter which arises in connection with the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

Section 6 (b) and (c): Being dependent upon sections 3, 4, and 5, in my opinion, should be deleted along with those sections. At any rate, any immigration act which Congress would pass should require that the burden of proof be borne by the alien. Of course, it is recognized, if Congress yields to the alien bloc by enacting these sections, provisions such as are embodied are necessary.

Section 7: Is dependent upon the action which Congress may take in respect to section 4.

Section 8: I approve section 8 as is embodied in my bill.

Section 9: I approve section 9 as is embodied in my bill.

Section 10: The reckless abuse of power by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization in the course of the past 2 years and 8 months convinces me that in any grant of power to make rules and regulations, there should be added a proviso that these rules and regulations must be wholly in accord with the fundamental purpose expressed in the act and be wholly opposed to grant of broad discretionary power by way of rules and regulations.

Section 11: Provides for the establishment of an interdepartmental committee and stands or falls on the proposition that a grant of discretionary power be given to it.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent relating to the procedure of the Senate. The request which I am about to make is approved by the leader of the minority, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside; that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill; that when the Senate shall have concluded its labors today it adjourn until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow, and after the conclusion of routine morning business and until the hour of 2 o'clock tomorrow the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request submitted by the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, is it contemplated that at the conclusion of today's business the Senate shall adjourn until noon tomorrow?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to add to his request that after the conclusion of the call of the calendar the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4023?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will state to the Senator from Florida that my request as now submitted is rather a lengthy one, and I have not had an opportunity to confer with the leader of the minority as to the feature suggested. I shall cooperate with the Senator from Florida in order to secure early consideration of the bill to which he has referred. I should not at this time like to include it in my request for the reason I have indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request submitted by the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, under the agreement just entered into, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the agreement the Chair lays before the Senate the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11581) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will state the first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 8, after the word "addition", to strike out "$2,700,000" and insert "$5,700,000", so as to read:

That in order to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, any revenue (not including the proportionate share of the United States in any revenue arising as the result of the expenditure of appropriations made for the fiscal year 1924 and prior fiscal years) now required by law to be credited to the District of Columbia and the United States in the same proportion that each contributed to the activity or source from whence such revenue was derived shall be credited wholly to the District of Columbia, and, in addition, $5,700,000 is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be advanced July 1, 1936, and all of the remainder out of the combined revenues of the District of Columbia, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "General expenses—Executive office", to increase the appropriation for personal services under the building inspection division from $113,360 to $122,860.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 2, after the word "services", to strike out "$37,390" and insert "$43,690", and in line 3, after the words "in all", to strike out "$37,690" and insert "$43,990", so as to read:

Plumbing inspection division: For personal services, $43,690; two members of plumbing board at $150 each; in all, $43,990.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 10, after "(40 Stat., p. 653)", to strike out "$11,000" and insert "$18,000", so as to read:

Smoke regulation and control: For personal services, equipment, instruments, supplies, transportation, and other contingent expenses necessary for the enforcement of the act entitled "An act to prevent the fouling of the atmosphere in the District of Columbia by smoke and other foreign substances, and for other purposes", approved August 15, 1935 (49 Stat., p. 653), $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, at the end of line 26, to increase the appropriation for personal services under the collector's office from $45,900 to $47,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of corporation counsel", on page 5, line 10, after the word "services", to strike out "$99,520" and insert "$104,120", so as to read:

Corporation counsel, including extra compensation as general counsel of the Public Utilities Commission, and other personal services, $104,120.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 17, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "$500" and insert "$1,000", and in line 20 to strike out "$39,900" and insert "$40,400", so as to read:

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL BOARD

For personal services, streetcar and bus transportation, telephone service, not exceeding $1,000 for the purchase of samples, not exceeding $100 for witness fees, and other necessary contingent and miscellaneous expenses, $40,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Coroner's office", on page 5, line 24, to strike out "$10,180" and insert "$10,600", so as to read:

For personal services, including deputy coroners, in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, $10,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Utilities Commission", on page 7, line 12, after the word "services", to strike out "$69,000" and insert "$75,000", so as to read:

For two commissioners, people's counsel, and for other personal services, $75,000, of which amount not to exceed $5,000 may be used for the employment of expert services by contract or otherwise and without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Surveyor's office", on page 8, line 8, after the word "services", to strike out "$73,260" and insert "$80,000', so as to read:

For personal services, $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 11, after the figures "$2,500", to strike out the colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That the amount to be expended from the appropriation herein for personal services, Surveyor's Office, shall not exceed an amount greater than the estimated receipts for the fiscal year 1937 from the work of such office", so as to read:

For rebinding and repairing record books in the office of the Surveyor of the District of Columbia, showing properties in the District of Columbia, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Department of vehicles and traffic", on page 9, line 23, after the word "services", to strike out "$69,600" and insert "$74,640", so as to read:

For personal services, $74,640.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 56, line 2, after "justices", it is proposed to insert "marshal, $3,600, whose appointment is hereby authorized"; and on page 56, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "$111,800" and insert in lieu thereof "$115,400."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On behalf of the committee, I offer an additional amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 65, line 18, after "$85,000", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That pay patients may hereafter be admitted to the Children's Tuberculosis Sanatorium for care and treatment at such rates and under such regulations as may be established by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, insofar as such admissions will not interfere with admission of indigent patients.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On behalf of the committee, I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. —. Paragraph (7) of section 1 (b) of the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(7) Service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On behalf of the committee, I offer an additional amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 8. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to make and enforce regulations to require any person in charge or control of any lot of land, improved or unimproved, within the District of Columbia, fronting or abutting on a paved sidewalk, whether as owner, tenant, occupant, agent, lessee, receiver, trustee, executor, administrator, or otherwise, to remove and clear away or cause to be removed and cleared away any snow, ice, and sleet from any said sidewalk in front of or abutting on said lot of land; and, in case the snow, ice, and sleet on such sidewalk shall be frozen so hard that it cannot be removed without injury to the pavement, to require such person in charge or control of any such lot of land to cause said sidewalk to be made safe by strewing the same with such suitable material as the Commissioners may prescribe and to require such person in charge or control of any such lot of land to thoroughly clean said sidewalks of snow, ice, sleet, and such material as soon thereafter as the weather shall permit, and to provide penalties for the violation of such regulations not to exceed $25 for each such violation.

The act entitled "An act providing for the removal of snow and ice from the paved sidewalks of the District of Columbia", approved September 16, 1922, is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. On behalf of the committee, I offer a further amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 7. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered, in their discretion, to secure and to install, at no expense to the said District, mechanical parking meters or devices on the streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces in the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction and control of said Commissioners; and said Commissioners are authorized and empowered to make and enforce rules and regulations for the control of the parking of vehicles on such streets, avenues, roads, highways, and other public spaces, and as an aid to such regulation and control of the parking of vehicles the Commissioners may prescribe fees for the privilege of parking vehicles where said meters or devices are installed.

The Commissioners are further authorized and empowered to pay the purchase price and cost of installation of the said meters or devices from the fees collected, and thereafter such meters or devices shall become the property of said District and all fees collected shall be paid to the collector of taxes for deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of said District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. GLASS, Mr. COPELAND, Mr. NYE, and Mr. KEYES conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I think the law provides that a member of one of the legislative committees shall be on the conference committee. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] be appointed to represent the Senate legislative committee on the conference committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

WALES ISLAND PACKING CO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 753) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Wales Island Packing Co.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. VAN NUYS, and Mr. BORAH conferees on the part of the Senate.

INTERNATIONAL MERCANTILE MARINE CO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 788) for the relief of the International Mercantile Marine Co., which was, on page 1, lines 6 and 7, to strike out "to reimburse said company" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

COMPAGNIE GENERALE TRANSATLANTIQUE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 790) for the relief of the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, which was, on page 1, lines 6 and 7, to strike out "to reimburse said company" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ART METAL CONSTRUCTION CO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1138) for the relief of Art Metal Construction Co. with respect to the maintenance of suit against the United States for the recovery of any income or profits taxes paid to the United States for the calendar year 1918 in excess of the amount of taxes lawfully due for such period, which were, on page 2, line 1, to strike out "1935" and insert "1936", and on the same page, line 5, to strike out "1935" and insert "1936."

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate concur in the amendents of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Asst. Surg. Edward C. Lutton to be passed assistant surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to rank as such from March 6, 1936.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn, pursuant to the order heretofore entered.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, April 24, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 23, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, author of our existence, the hope and inspiration of every perfect thing, look upon us, we beseech Thee. Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him; for he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust. We wait, Father in Heaven, and appeal from Thy justice to Thy love. Confessing the sins we once cherished, we lift our hearts to Thee; Thou hast loved us, and will love us to the end. We pray Thee, let us know how good it is to distill goodness, sympathy, and the gladness of God from a self-centered life. Give us the courageous eye of faith which alone sees right; it overcomes evil tendencies and is truly all in all. Grant that wise cooperation of the Congress may secure the survival of the best. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendment, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 12098. An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BULOW and Mr. WHITE members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments", for the disposition of executive papers in the United States Civil Service Commission.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, after several weeks of preparation, we have now reached the point where the House is to take up for consideration and action what I regard as probably the most important piece of legislation to be considered at this session, the new tax bill.

Under the special order of the House, 16 hours has been provided for general debate on the bill, the debate to be confined to the bill. After conference with the Speaker of the House and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, we have reached the decision that it is most important for us to go through with the consideration of this bill without interruption, and therefore I want to give notice that I trust no Member of the House on either side will submit any request for special consideration to speak or for permission to speak out of order or for special time outside of the consideration of the bill as now provided.

I think it only fair that I should make this statement, because we want to treat everybody fairly and impartially, but we consider it most imperative to consider and pass this bill as expeditiously as possible and I hope, therefore, that all Members on both sides will be governed accordingly.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman's statement mean that the conference reports on the various appropriation bills will not be considered until after the tax bill has been disposed of?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I did not make that statement because, of course, that is a matter in the sound judgment and discretion of the Speaker, and I do not know what decision he may reach about that. My main purpose was to make a statement with reference to special orders.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I have made my statement.

Mr. RICH. I should like to ask the gentleman if we are going to be notified when these conference reports will come before the House so we may have a little time to discuss them. They are very important and I think the gentleman will agree with my statement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania it is rather difficult to anticipate when a conference report is going to be called up, if any are called up, by recognition of the Speaker during the consideration of this bill. I do not know whether it is in the mind of the Speaker to make any statement with reference to that matter at this time or not, but my statement was made purely for the reason I have stated with reference to special requests to address the House.

Mr. RICH. I appreciate that, but if we had a day fixed when we knew these conference reports were coming up, I think it would be very helpful and would be in the interest of the welfare of the country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I cannot at this time give the gentleman any assurance whatever with reference to that matter.

THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION AND THE WELFARE OF THE AMERICAN NEGRO

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, the interests of the colored people have been and will continue to be best served by the Democratic Party, the party that stands for the common man, for human rights above property rights; and the leader of that party, Franklin D. Roosevelt, has given that race the greatest opportunity ever afforded under any administration.

From the close of the Civil War up to 1932, the Negro vote went to the Republican Party, but how much consideration did the race get for that allegiance? During the decade from 1920 to 1930 the colored farmers of the Nation lost 3,785,757 acres of land, and not one thing was done by the Federal Government to save these farm homes, the most part of which was good, rich farming land.

In contrast to that deplorable loss is the saving of 36,758,484 acres to colored farmers through the recovery program of President Roosevelt and the Democratic Congress. The colored farmers have access, on an equal footing, to relief afforded by the Farm Credit Administration, the Department of Agriculture, the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, and kindred agencies for financial aid. More than that, there are men of their own race to whom they can appeal. Prof. H. D. Hunt is with the Farm Credit Administration, while T. M. Campbell, of Tuskegee, and J. B. Pierce, of Hampton Institute, are the colored representatives with the Agriculture Department.

Mr. Roosevelt has appointed more Negroes to responsible governmental positions than the last three Republican administrations combined. Under this administration Dr. Thompkins, an outstanding Negro physician and a lifelong Democrat, has been appointed Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia. Robert L. Vann, lawyer and publisher, has been appointed Special Assistant Attorney General, with offices in Washington; L. A. Oxley, of North Carolina, is special assistant and adviser in the Department of Commerce; E. K. Jones, of New York, is special adviser in the Department of Labor; Lester A. Walton is Minister to Liberia; Theopholius Mann and William F. Hastie are special solicitors in the Department of the Interior; Forest B. Washington is adviser on Negro affairs to Harry L. Hopkins; Earl R. Moses is assistant statistician in the Bureau of Research. While these are individual honors, the colored citizens generally have benefited by the Roosevelt policies. In every law passed by Congress for direct relief or otherwise the Negro shares equally with his fellow citizens, and in addition to these material benefits, a new understanding and sympathy have drawn the two races together, and former prejudices based on color are being dissipated.

Under the emergency measures put into effect by President Roosevelt in 1933 and enacted by Congress large sums of money have been spent for relief and economic rehabilitation of both white and colored; there has been no color line there; no discrimination as to creed, or race, or sex. Home owners' loans have been utilized by colored citizens as well as whites to save their homes. The Public Works Administration, the Civil Works Administration, the Works Progress Administration, and similar agencies assumed their obligations to aid the Negro as no less pressing than their duty to the white. Regulations of the National Recovery Act insured them against discrimination in wages and hours. The Agricultural Adjustment Act applied to all farmers regardless of color, and was the means of saving thousands of Negro farmers from foreclosure and ruin.

In addition to these temporary agencies, housing projects are being constructed throughout the country. Nineteen of the total of forty-seven projects will be predominantly tenanted by Negroes, and at least five others will include Negroes, making a total of one-half of all of these projects for the use of colored people, and resulting in thousands of Negro families having decent homes in which to live and rear their children. Negro architects and a fair proportion of skilled and unskilled Negro labor is being used in the construction of these buildings, and at the same wages as given whites.

The Negro must have more and better education than he has received in the past, and a larger proportion of the race must receive the fundamentals of a public-school education; they must receive the fullest possible educational opportunities. Largely as a result of the activities of Dr. Ambrose Coliver, special assistant to Harry L. Hopkins, the school terms for colored children in the South have been lengthened 2 months and the salaries of over a thousand school teachers were increased. Thousands of needy colored students have received from $8 to $20 a month each so they could continue their studies in 120 colored colleges. Hundreds of colored teachers, both men and women, received $100 a month for conducting adult classes in the drive to stamp out illiteracy. As a result of this drive it is estimated that at least half a million colored citizens and their children have been benefited.

Howard University and Freedmen's Hospital, Washington institutions, have received $2,000,000 from public-works funds for improvements and betterments. Wendell Phillips High School, in Chicago, was completed through an allotment of $500,000 from the same source.

Can those who are maliciously attacking the present administration point to comparable activities during the past three administrations? Ever since the Civil War the Republican Party has had the Negro vote pretty much in its vest pocket, and to a greater extent than many people realize, owes its long tenure of power to that very fact. In nearly every election during the last 20 years the Negro vote has represented the balance of power in such important States as Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and not infrequently, in Missouri. The Negro voter has been of tremendous service to the Republican Party, but newer generations of Negroes who have had the benefit of a better education now wonder whether they still owe their gratitude to the party that has exploited their race for 70 years. They are awakening to the realization that under a Democratic administration they are receiving recognition of their social and economic rights as never before. In 1932 thousands of Negro voters finally came to the conclusion they had paid to the Republican Party whatever debt of gratitude was due from them and voted for the Democratic Party, which has fulfilled its promise of equal opportunity under the law.

The Honorable ARTHUR W. MITCHELL, a Negro and a member of the Democratic Party, representing a congressional district in Chicago, introduced during the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress a bill providing for the creation of a permanent commission for the study of problems connected with the needs of the Negro. The proposed commission will consist of five members, appointed by the President, and at least three of them must be Negroes.

The duties of the commission shall be to study the economic conditions of the Negro; to study the labor problems in which the Negro is fundamentally interested; to stimulate and encourage thrift and industry among the Negroes of this country; to promote the general welfare of the Negro in industrial pursuits and to encourage his general uplift; to work out plans looking toward the solution of the different problems confronting the Negro race of the United States; to consider all questions pertaining to the Negro that may be referred to said commission by any department of the United States Government, and report a suggested solution of any and all problems that may be presented to the commission by any officer of the United States, the Governor or attorney general of any of the States, or labor department of any State in the United States; to recommend what may be necessary for the stability of labor in the different States; to discourage subversive doctrine and propaganda; to work toward the formulation of a policy for mutual understanding and confidence between the races; to report to Congress through the President of the United States all their acts and doings and to make such recommendations for the solution of any problem or problems affecting the Negro that they may deem advisable.

Mr. MITCHELL hopes that one important result of the studies to be made by this commission will be the formulation of a labor policy which will foster a better understanding between the two races. I share that hope. Too long have we looked with indifference upon the efforts of the Negro to raise himself above the plane in which the race existed at the end of the War between the States. Too few of us realize the marvelous progress made by the Negro in this brief period of 70 years. This bill, which has the endorsement and support of the large majority of good thinking people of both races, promises to meet a real need of the Nation, and to substantially safeguard and advance the interest of the largest minority group of our citizens, a group which has been true to our country and has always answered the call of the country in the most patriotic manner, but which group has been sadly and most shamefully neglected when it comes to sharing in full benefits of what we call American citizenship rights and opportunities.

And I wish to say a word of tribute to our colleague, the Honorable ARTHUR W. MITCHELL, the first Negro Democrat in Congress. His conception of duty to his congressional district, his State, and the Nation has shown him to be a leader among his race, and one of whom they can justly be proud. His breadth of vision and understanding, his fine grasp of current problems, and his unswerving devotion to the Democratic cause make all who know him hope that he will be returned to Congress, and thus be enabled to continue the fine work which he has so ably performed during the past 2 years. It requires genuine courage, in the light of the history of this Republic, for an American Negro to be a Democrat, and ARTHUR MITCHELL possesses that courage, thereby reflecting credit upon himself, his race, and the Democratic Party.

During the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, $3,000,000 was authorized to be spent by the Federal Government in connection with the Texas centennial celebration, most of which will be returned to the Government through amusement taxes. One justification, at least, for voting for this measure was that it affords a means for the display of the advancement of the Negro people of this country. It is my understanding that through this appropriation by Congress the Negroes will be given an opportunity to construct a building, designed by Negro architects and built by Negro labor, and in this building will be exhibits of the arts and sciences depicting the advancement of their race. It is my hope that thousands of Kansas Negroes, and thousands from other States, will avail themselves of the opportunity to attend the Texas centennial celebration and participate in this demonstration. It gave me great pleasure to cast my vote in favor of the appropriation in order that this exhibition might be possible.

From all this, I feel that the Roosevelt administration has given fair return to the Negro voters who supported it in the last two elections. For the first time in the history of the Nation the economic and social welfare of the colored citizens have been given the same consideration as all other citizens. The Negro Democrat looks to the rising sun of the future, and is not unaware of the living present. His opportunity today is equal to that of Booker T. Washington, the wisest spirit ever born of African blood.

OUR AIR-LINE PILOTS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill (H. R. 11399).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, the 650 pilots of scheduled air-liners in the United States are the best trained group of civilian airmen in the world. The kind of flying they are doing, day and night, summer and winter, through all kinds of weather, is unequaled anywhere; but this vast store of knowledge and experience is going to waste insofar as our national defense is concerned.

I recently introduced a bill, H. R. 11399, which provides that these men shall be a part of the Army Air Corps Reserve and will be given a month's training at an Army field once a year. This bill would make it possible for these pilots to keep posted on latest military developments and enable the United States to tap this source of supply in time of emergency.

With the training that they already have, these pilots could start out with a fleet of bombers, travel long distances to reach their objective with unerring skill and precision, regardless of the weather—whether snow, rain, or fog—that might intervene.

The experience and ability which these men have attained can be acquired in no other way except on the air lines. Collectively, they are familiar with every airport, every airway, and practically every foot of terrain in the United States and Alaska. The military value of these men is inestimable from every conceivable standpoint.

Most of them have already acquired all the Army had to offer in the way of military flying experience prior to taking up their duties on the air lines, for many of them, perhaps the majority of them, are graduates of our Army, Navy, or Marine Corps schools. After they leave the military service, with an experience of about 300 hours of flying, and become attached to some air line as copilot their real training for civil flying has just begun. Before they can qualify as a first pilot they must have attained 1,200 hours of solo flying or twice that amount of time as a copilot. (The copilot is permitted to log only half his actual time in the air.) As a rule, this apprenticeship on the air lines requires 3 to 4 years, during which time they are continually absorbing a knowledge of their profession from the old-timers who preceded them. Before they can become a full-fledged air-line pilot they must pass a rigid examination imposed by the Department of Commerce, which entitles them to a license known as a scheduled air transport rating, commonly referred to as an S. A. T. R. The qualifications for this rating are very severe.

In the first place, as we have seen, the pilot must have 1,200 hours of solo flying, of which 500 must have been spent in cross-country flying and 75 hours must have been spent in solo night flying over lighted airways. He must take a written examination on the Department of Commerce regulations governing scheduled operations of interstate air-line services and practical and theoretical use of directional radio and other available airway aids to navigation, including tests in meteorology with weather analysis and forecasting. He must also demonstrate his ability to fly blind by instruments. This flight test is given by an inspector of the Commerce Department. The plane used for this test is equipped with a hood so that the pilot may not see anything but his instruments. He is then required to execute a number of difficult maneuvers; and when the inspector has him completely lost, he must orient himself on the radio beam and with the help of his instruments and his radio navigate to the airport, locating himself at 200 feet over the edge of the field.

The air-line pilot of today seldom stops for weather, unless it happens that the airport of his destination is closed in. It is a common occurrence for him to take off and fly blind for hours at a stretch, or to fly above a fog for his entire run, then locate himself by instruments and radio at his destination and come down through directly over the airport.

It is only when radio or instruments fail that the pilot is in any serious danger; but, even then, the knowledge he has of his route and the judgment he has acquired through many hours of flying come to his aid, and, given an ample supply of gasoline, he can usually find his way to some alternate airport. It is in the emergencies when the navigation aids fail and the pilot is thrown on his own resources that his years of experience and knowledge of his route place him head and shoulders above the average pilot. It has often been stated that flying is 10 percent machine and 90 percent man. This still holds true. Navigation aids and especially radio have not been perfected to a point where they are infallible, but through long years of experience the air-line pilot is able to judge with accuracy the degree to which he can rely on them. Before he starts on his trip he studies the weather charts, and he knows beforehand the extent to which rain or snow will hinder the reception of the radio beam; he knows also that beam courses occasionally shift around at night. This is known as "night effect" and results in what are known as multiple courses. All of these characteristics and peculiarities of the particular beam he uses are known to him from constant use. It is not merely, as some think, a matter of relying entirely on one particular aid. The pilot must use all of them; he must know the weaknesses of each; and here is where personal skill and judgment enter in. This is the kind of knowledge that cannot be obtained in any other way except by constant flying and constant use of the available aids.

None of the military airmen can possibly approach the degree of efficiency of the air-line pilot unless they are permitted to go out and do the same kind of flying, day in and day out, and become thoroughly familiar with the quirks and idiosyncracies of radio beams, gyro compasses, automatic pilots, and all the other mechanical devices used on modern air lines.

Today, as in the past, the human element is of most importance in the safe operation of the air lines.

Flying instinct, which is developed to the highest degree in the air-line pilot, and which cannot be learned from textbooks, is a definite factor in both military and civil flying. This is the quality that saves the day when mechanical aids go wrong. It is this same quality which will turn defeat into victory in future aerial warfare. The air-line pilots are a national asset with definite military value. Why not take advantage of it?

H. R. 11399 provides the means to the end desired by all who believe in adequate national defense.

DEFENSE WITHOUT EXPENSE

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill (H. R. 5529), which passed the House a year ago and is now pending before the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, everybody wants peace. Everybody complains about the expense of adequate preparedness. We remember that the Democratic platform of 1932 mentioned the very expensive defensive organizations, the Army and the Navy, bewailing the fact that this expense is "fast approaching a billion dollars a year." The appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, will very probably realize this billion dollars. Adequate defense for such a large and powerful Nation is necessarily expensive.

Our defensive forces, especially in the air, are still inadequate. We must be defended, and under our high cost system it is necessarily expensive.

But, Mr. Speaker, a most important feature of adequate preparedness may be had absolutely without expense. All thinkers upon modern warfare agree that war can be properly conducted only by the combined economic, financial, agricultural, and moral forces of the Nation. In other words, the whole Nation must be at war if victory is to be achieved. The few men at the front doing the fighting are a very small fractional part in numbers of the total population that must be furnishing those men with munitions, implements of war, and supplies of food, clothing, medicine, shelter, and so forth. The eminent British military critic, Liddell Hart, in the magazine section of the New York Times on March 15, 1936, summarizes the situation in these few words:

> Moreover, the complexity is augmented by the increasing dependence of the fighting forces upon industrial resources. As a consequence all the countries are developing schemes of economic mobilization as a necessary foundation for their military, naval, and aerial mobilization.

Mr. Speaker, I hope it may not be presumptuous for a Member of the House of Representatives to speak on a bill which has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate. I refer to H. R. 5529, which passed the House more than a year ago by an overwhelming vote. I am not sure how many voted against it, but I think very few. Of course, there was much discussion and difference of opinion as to details during the week that the bill was before the House, but in the end practically all Members voted for the bill, thus approving it as a whole.

STOP PROFITEERING

H. R. 5529, the bill to take the profits out of war, consists of only about four pages and only nine short sections. The language is general, comprehensive, and therefore elastic in application so as to fit conditions that may arise but cannot now be properly anticipated in detail. It is true that section 8 was drawn hastily and might properly be amended by adding these words:

> Excess war profits are hereby defined to be that part of the profits of any person, firm, or corporation earned in any fiscal year during war which exceeds the average profits of such person, firm, or corporation for the 5 fiscal years immediately preceding such war or the average profits of such person, firm, or corporation for such time as it may have engaged in business, if less than 5 years.

PASS H. R. 5529 NOW

Mr. Speaker, naturally there is great difference of opinion about the details of such an important measure. But this bill ought to be passed and passed at this session of Congress. The members of the American Legion and the ex-soldiers of the country and practically all our citizens who have thought about it at all demand its speedy enactment into law. Ninety-five percent of our population condemn unreservedly profiteering in time of war. If any Member of Congress thinks that H. R. 5529 as it passed the House is not sufficiently strong in terms to correct the evil which all admit, then let us pass the bill now before we adjourn; and at the next session let Members who wish to amend it propose amendments; and if the amendments are in the interest of preventing the evil, then I will gladly cooperate in passing such amendments.

But we ought to pass the bill now as a fundamental, organic, and comprehensive declaration of policy. We ought to notify the people of this Nation that in the event of war there shall be no profiteering, and if some excess war profits do slip through, they will be immediately gathered up by the tax collector. Furthermore, we should notify by this law the rest of the world that America will be mobilized industrially, financially, agriculturally, and morally to fight as one man in the defense of our land, for the protection of our rights, and for the vindication of our national policies. To be prepared to mobilize industry is as important in a defense program as to have an adequate Navy and an adequate Army. The three must go together. We maintain an Army and a Navy as notice to the rest of the world that we will protect ourselves and our rights. If we will pass this industrial-mobilization law, that will be further notice to the world that we are better prepared to defend ourselves. Thus we will promote peace while at the same time we will prevent profiteering. This policy of promoting peace and preventing profiteering is a part of the defense program that we can have, and should have, and must have. Furthermore, it will be without expense. It will cost nothing to pass the law. Furthermore, it will reduce the expense of any future war by 50 percent. It will be a great measure of economy. So, Mr. Speaker, let us pass the law this session. I hope that I may be excused, by reason of my zeal and deep interest in this bill, from seeming to discuss a measure pending before the Senate. It is a matter close to my heart.

CELLER ANSWERS PATMAN

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in answer to the remarks of our colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] concerning myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, in the RECORD of April 22, our colleague, Representative WRIGHT PATMAN, of Texas, says I have adopted in toto the objections to the Patman-Utterback-Robinson bill that have been set up by powerful mass-buying interests. I care not who adopts my point of view, so long as my point of view is sound. In the long run this bill, if enacted, will react disastrously to the small, independent dealer who is supposed to be helped by it.

Representative WRIGHT PATMAN states that I stand alone in my objections to the bill among the Members of the House Judiciary Committee, and cites in support thereof the fact that the minority report opposing the bill bore just one signature—my own.

I retort by asking Representative PATMAN to look at the majority report. He will find just one signature—that of Representative UTTERBACK. That does not mean that other members of the Judiciary Committee did not support the majority opinion. By the same token, members of the Judiciary Committee other than myself supported the minority report.

If the distinguished Representative from Texas wants evidence of opposition to this bill from very respectable and eminent authorities, I am very happy to give them to him.

Firstly, we have the opposition of Dr. Harold G. Moulton, of the Brookings Institution, who says:

> This bill, insofar as it would strike at all those who have heretofore been effective in reducing prices, to that extent will raise prices.

Then there is Prof. Malcolm P. McNair, of Harvard University, a rather eminent economist, who voices strong opposition to the bill and emphatically points out that it will not only raise prices to the consumer but will also force a realinement of manufacturing, with disastrous consequences to the small independent.

Prof. M. C. Waltersdorf, head of the department of economics of Washington and Jefferson College, expresses opposition to the same effect.

Prof. Shore Livermore, of the University of Buffalo, emphatically opposes the bill because it would be discriminating against all the present efficient retail distributors of the country.

From Dartmouth College, the department of economics, comes the word of Prof. William A. Carter, who expresses opposition because the bill attempts arbitrarily to classify distributors. He further holds that the bill is administratively unfeasible in regard to quantitative differentials.

Prof. H. L. Caverly, of the University of Michigan, and Dr. George Filipetti, professor of economics at the University of Minnesota, both claim the bill would run counter to reductions of cost of production and distribution, and that it would place a premium on inefficiency and would exploit the consumers.

Prof. C. C. Huntington, of Ohio State University, deplores the attempts to discourage lower prices through quantity discounts.

To the same effect are the words of Prof. T. R. Snavely, of the University of Virginia.

In my own city, we have the objections of Profs. Lewis H. Haney and Walter E. Spahr, well-known economists assigned to New York University.

Scores of other economists throughout the land are unalterably opposed to this bill. I have yet to see the name of a single well-known economist who approves it.

LABOR NOT HELPED BUT HURT BY THE BILL

This bill was originally written by the general counsel for the United States Wholesale Grocers Association, and is to take the place of the Grocery Code. But whereas a large number of N. R. A. codes attempted to fix prices, they did at the same time protect consumers, and particularly the laboring man, in the sense that there was labor representation on most of the code authorities so that there could be no exploitation of labor in the matter of hours and wages. This bill does not mention wages or hours of employment.

Economists agree that the bill will increase prices of goods to the consumer. Therefore, the standard of living of the laboring man would be reduced, because his wages, which will not be increased, will buy less. This reduced demand for goods will reduce the manufacturing volume, which, in turn, increases the cost of manufacturing. The inevitable result will be the lowering of real wages and the laying off of labor.

BILL WOULD DISLOCATE ALL INDUSTRY

The requirement of f. o. b. method of delivery—that is, outlawing all basing points—would seriously dislocate all industry. Regardless of the merits or demerits of this system of pricing, it must be remembered that another committee in Congress has been wrestling with this problem for some time and is about to report out a bill specifically addressed to this problem and based on careful and thorough study of its many ramifications. To interject such far-reaching legislation into this bill, which has had the benefit of no hearings on the subject whatsoever, since this is an entirely new provision, is most ill-advised and dangerous.

The method of pricing would have most serious and deleterious effects upon industry. It will mean that prices to the vendee will vary in accordance with distance and cost of transportation from the seat of manufacture or extraction, as in the case of coal or other minerals. All quotations must be f. o. b. manufacturing plants or mines. This restriction will localize all industry and manufacturing.

THE BUGABOO OF MONOPOLY

The Federal Trade Commission made an exhaustive report which cost the Nation $1,000,000, and in no uncertain language it denied that there is any monopoly in the field of distribution.

The allegation that monopoly is involved, or even remotely possible, in the distribution field is so obviously unsound that it hardly warrants consideration. Yet it is the allegation on which this bill is principally justified. The percentage of chain business to the total retail trade is only 25 percent, certainly far short of monopoly. Moreover, 87 percent of the chains are small sectional or intrastate chains of 25 stores or less. Sixteen thousand of the 20,000 chains in the country have but 3 stores or less. The large national chains, against which the agitation resulting in this bill is practically entirely directed, are but 8 percent of the total distribution of the country. Certainly monopoly cannot be spelled out of that. Even in the grocery field, in which the chain development has been most marked, voluntaries, or progressive independent storekeepers acting jointly in order to secure quantity discounts and other economies, have now as large a volume as the corporate chains, and their volume is growing rapidly. These and the other independents in the grocery field have now over 60 percent of the trade's entire volume. Speaking to his fellow grocers assembled in convention, the president of the National Association of Retail Grocers said only last June:

The position of the individual grocer today is sound. Speaking generally, he is meeting a public demand for distribution at absolute minimum cost, while preserving all the valuable features of our type of distribution. The independent retail-grocery business has in the last few years amply demonstrated its indestructible character by its ability to shape itself to successfully meet and absolutely check the keenest and most aggressive and ruthless competition. Without any advantage or even at a disadvantage, the independent grocer is not only surviving but is steadily forging ahead.

In the drug wholesale field, to make a comparison in a trade directly involved and urging passage of this bill, one concern—McKesson & Robbins, Inc.—alone does 30 percent of the trade's entire volume, and one association of drug wholesalers—the National Association of Wholesale Druggists—loudly proclaims in its prospectus, and solicits business from manufacturers thereon, that its members alone do 80 percent of the entire drug business handled by all the drug wholesalers in the country, and cover 97 percent of the entire 57,000 retail drug stores in the United States. Yet no suggestion is heard that monopoly exists in the wholesale drug field, while the wholesale druggists, along with a group of wholesale grocers, loudly maintain that this bill is imperative to check monopoly in the retail field, where the chain percentage is in gross, including the 130,000 completely sectionalized or localized chain stores with less than 25 stores, not over 25 percent of the volume involved, and in terms of national chain business in the fields most frequently cited, but 8 percent of national distribution. Certainly this in in reality a case of those who might actually attain a monopolistic position through organization attempting to handicap their principal competition.

So the allegation of monopoly in the retail trade is totally unsustainable, while the assertion that mass distribution may some day become monopolistic, amounts, under the circumstances, to the rankest type of sophistry. Anything might happen, but certainly among all the eventualities which might develop, few are less likely ever to happen than for the very minor percentage of the trade's business in the hands of mass distributors to expand until it becomes monopolistic. Competition is, moreover, keen in the retail field, both among the chains themselves and between the chains and the independents. It is not a matter of large capital to enter the retail business, and the danger of actual monopoly developing is therefore small indeed. Certainly, however, to legislate price increases upon the consumer with no justification whatsoever except that he may some day find himself served by a retail monopoly would not be either reasonable or intelligent. If a monopoly ever should develop, moreover, there is now on our statute books sufficient law to meet the situation.

I HOLD NO BRIEF FOR CHAINS

The chain stores are guilty of many sins. I am in favor of any provision that would stop certain predatory practices. I always was in favor of the Kelly-Capper bill for price maintenance on trademarks or copyright articles. I have spoken frequently in favor of a multiple chain-store tax bill in various States. But this bill goes far beyond the chain store. It would hurt manufacturers, large and small, and particularly the consumer. Ultimately it would hurt the independent dealer. To the latter the bill at the present time is but a snare.

In the beginning this bill, if passed, will create a maximum amount of disruption in the consumer-goods-manufacturing industry. This is no time to add to the derangement of business, particularly since we are emerging from a depression.

This bill will force the realignment of manufacturing and distributing so that the large mass buyers would be forced to buy exclusively from one set of manufacturers and the little set of fellows from another set of manufacturers. The first set of manufacturers would thus be enabled to sell mass buyers more cheaply. The small independents will be compelled to pay more for their goods. Therefore, this bill will ultimately result in the greatest disadvantages to them.

TO REQUIRE THE F. O. B. METHOD OF DELIVERY WOULD SERIOUSLY DISLOCATE ALL INDUSTRY

This bill provides that the word "price"—

Shall be construed to mean the amount received by the vendor after deducting actual freight or cost of other transportation, if any, allowed or defrayed by the vendor.

This is contained in subparagraph no. 5 of section 2. Regardless of the merits or demerits of this system of pricing, it must be remembered that another committee in Congress has been wrestling with this problem for some time and is about to report out a bill specifically addressed to this problem and based on careful and thorough study of its many ramifications. To interject such far-reaching legislation into this bill, which has had the benefit of no hearings on the subject whatsoever, since this is an entirely new provision, is most ill-advised and dangerous.

I believe the method of pricing this bill would prescribe would have most serious and deleterious effects upon industry. It will mean that prices to the vendee will vary in accordance with distance and cost of transportation from the seat of manufacture or extraction, as in the case of coal or other minerals. In other words, all quotations under the bill must be f. o. b. manufacturing plants or mines. The freight charges and railroad rates or water or highway charges must be superimposed specifically upon the basic price and clearly indicated on all invoices. This restriction will localize all industry and manufacturing.

For example, A manufactures shoes, say in New York City, and B manufactures a comparable product in St. Louis. A has been heretofore profitably selling X, his customer in St. Louis, and has been successfully competing with his competitor B, the manufacturer in St. Louis. He has been charging X the same price as quoted by B. He has done this despite the fact that he has been compelled to pay transportation charges from New York to St. Louis. The manufacturing costs of A are partly the result of his enjoying the business of X. If A is, under this bill, compelled to superimpose upon his price the transportation cost, he will lose the account of X, and B will get the business and A's costs will be increased. A ordinarily made up the transportation charges for shipping to X by means of mass production and other economies. He will be restricted in doing this under this bill. The effect therefore will be the following: A will be compelled to confine his activities to New York, and B, the manufacturer in St. Louis, will be compelled to confine his activities to St. Louis. Thousands of businesses will thus become parochial, because the circle of customers will be more and more definitely delimited. The result will be increases in manufacturing and distributing costs and a cutting off from customers of the full benefits of mass production and distribution. The consumer again will "pay the piper."

WHO OPPOSES THE BILL?

Representative PATMAN offers this query. Aside from the economists I have mentioned this bill is opposed by all voluntary groups of independent retailers, consumer cooperatives, and farm organizations, like the National Farm Bureau Federation; the Independent Grocers Alliance, alone representing 20,000 independent retail grocers; and the National Cooperative Council. At the present time the consumer cooperatives number 6,500, having a membership of over 2,000,000 individuals, 500 retail stores, 50 wholesale establishments, 1,500 farm supply houses, and 1,500 oil-supply stations. The cooperative movement is in its infancy in this country and is growing daily. The retailers have made great progress in meeting chain-store competition by pooling their orders to secure quantity advantages. Such "voluntaries" do as large a volume of business as the national chains.

There are over 100,000 independent retailers in the grocery field alone acting together in "voluntaries." This bill would hurt these "voluntaries" and in that sense would strengthen the chains.

G. ELIAS & BRO., INC.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 371) for the relief of G. Elias & Bro., Inc., which is now on the Speaker's table, and in explanation, I may say that a similar House bill was passed in the omnibus-claims bill which was considered and passed yesterday. If this consent is granted, and the Senate bill passed, I shall ask that the proceedings by which the House bill was passed be vacated.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the situation, we passed the House bill yesterday and a Senate bill had already been passed, and the gentleman is now asking to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, the Senate bill being practically the same bill.

Mr. MEAD. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to G. Elias & Bro., Inc., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $24,139.28, in full settlement for losses suffered by the said G. Elias & Bro., Inc., by reason of changes in the specifications and extra work from which the Government received the benefit but for which no pay whatever has been paid to the said G. Elias & Bro., Inc., under contracts W 535 AC–602 and W 535 AC–628 dated December 14, 1926, and January 28, 1927, with the Air Corps for furnishing certain airship parts and equipment to the United States Army Air Corps: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings by which the bill (H. R. 2674) for the relief of G. Elias & Bro., Inc., was passed on yesterday be vacated and that the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

THE REVENUE BILL OF 1936

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, I think it would be fine if the membership of the Committee had the bill read to them, because I think very few of them have had an opportunity to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read under the 5-minute rule. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I also request that I be not interrupted until I have completed my main statement, after which, if I have time, I shall be glad to yield to such questions as may be propounded.

Mr. Chairman, H. R. 12395, entitled "A bill to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes", is now before the House in response to the President's message to Congress of March 3, 1936. In proposing and supporting the pending bill, I do so with the full realization of the fact that it is never popular to impose taxes. However, I make no apology for the part I am taking in offering for the consideration of Congress the bill that is now before this body.

First, I shall discuss briefly the necessity for a tax bill at this time; and, second, the basic principles upon which the bill is predicated. Since the message of the President just referred to, the Treasury's needs for additional revenue, as well as the President's suggestions for meeting these needs, have been under consideration by the Committee on Ways and Means and have had careful study by that committee, especially by the subcommittee. In addition public hearings were held, based upon the report of the subcommittee of March 26, 1936. The present bill is the result of such consideration, study, and suggestions made in the course of the public hearings.

In the minority report it is stated:

> We have had no opportunity to examine the 236-page bill before today. We have not been permitted a part in drafting it. It was prepared by the Democratic majority behind closed doors, from which we were excluded. They must assume full responsibility for it.

True, when the work of the final draft of the bill was undertaken, the minority members were not invited. However, when the matter was first taken under consideration and at our first meeting, all members of the committee, including the minority, were invited. This meeting most of the members, both the majority and the minority, attended. At this meeting it was decided that the preliminary work could best be done by the subcommittee, and a motion was adopted to refer the matter to the standing subcommittee on revenue of the Ways and Means Committee with the request that they make a careful study of the matter and report to the full committee. This course was pursued and both the majority and minority members of the subcommittee attended and participated in the study and deliberation of the work assigned to them. Then, when the subcommittee's report was made, public hearings were held by the full committee, and everyone was given an opportunity to testify who made a request to be heard. By the time the hearings were concluded it was fully evident that the minority members would oppose any tax bill, or certainly any along the lines proposed in the subcommittee's report. In fact, this statement was frequently made by the minority members of the committee. This being true, the majority members realized that the full responsibility of the tax bill was upon them and that only useless political discussion and delay would result by having the minority members present. Therefore, we cheerfully accept the challenge to take full responsibility for the bill, and the minority must take full responsibility for opposing the raising of revenue to finance the farm program and take care of the obligations assumed by Congress for the immediate payment of the soldiers' adjusted-service certificates, and also for endeavoring to keep the ordinary Budget balanced, for which they profess such great solicitude, but oppose every effort to accomplish this purpose.

The minority report further says, "They were whipped into acceptance against their better judgment of proposals advocated by no one of experience or ability in the field of taxation." This statement must have been the result of the first lessons of the minority under the tutorship of the new "brain trust" recently employed by the chairman of the Republican National Executive Committee, as I feel certain that nothing so ridiculous and untruthful would originate in the brains and bosoms of the minority members. [Laughter.] They know full well that at no time during the present administration has our committee in any way been whipped or even urged to accept or do anything that did not conform to our own judgment. Nothing more than suggestions was offered to our committee as to how we should raise the needed revenue. Some of these suggestions were taken and some were not.

A complete refutation of that statement comes from a minority member, the gentleman from New York, an able, courageous member of the Committee on Ways and Means, Dr. CROWTHER, a man of whom the members of his own committee could not make a rubber stamp. I quote him in refutation of the statement that the Democratic members have been made rubber stamps:

> Mr. CROWTHER. I do not think that at any time since I have been on the committee—I do not think that even now, as much as the majority is being charged with it—there has been or is very much pressure from the administration that has any great effect on this committee. I do not know of a committee that has had more independence of thought, during my long experience with it, than the Ways and Means Committee of the House, or independence of action in using their own judgment.
> Their judgment has been guided largely by the knowledge that they gained from competent witnesses who appeared before us.

If any better denial can be made, if any more positive statement as to the lack of foundation for the statement of the minority members that the majority members have been whipped into line, I should like some one to formulate the language.

The necessity for substitute taxes at this time arises from the decision of the Supreme Court on January 6, 1936, outlawing or holding invalid the processing taxes levied under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and also the additional annual charge that has been placed on the Treasury through the enactment of the Adjustment Compensation Payment Act. In specific terms, the President outlined the effect on the Budget of the events to which I have just referred. In short, the Supreme Court decision adversely affected the Budget in the amount of $1,017,000,000 during the fiscal years of 1936 and 1937, and the net effect of the enactment of the Adjusted Compensation Payment Act, is to add for a period of 9 years an annual charge of $120,000,000 to the $160,000,000 already in the Budget. To meet these needs, the President requested the Congress to raise $620,000,000 annually of permanent revenue and $173,000,000 annually as temporary revenue for a period of 3 years. So it will be seen that the revenue provided in this bill is primarily for the benefit of agriculture and to finance the agricultural program recently enacted by Congress and to take care of the additional burden placed upon the Treasury recently by Congress through the enactment of the Adjustment Compensation Act. Let it be said emphatically that for neither of these two causes is the President of the United States responsible. The benefits that have come to agriculture under the A. A. A. and the policies of the present administration are so manifest and evident that I cannot see how anyone would dare to refuse to aid in carrying forward a program for the benefit of agriculture.

In this connection, I deem it appropriate to review the record of the past several years relative to the plight of agriculture. Immediately following the inauguration of President Harding in 1921, a Republican Congress under the leadership of a Republican President, machinery was set in motion, the purpose of which it was claimed was to bring the farmer back to normalcy, and, if normalcy meant insolvency and bankruptcy, which it usually does under a Republican administration, the effort was superlatively successful. All during the period of the Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover reign, the American farmer was being driven to economic ruin and despair, while the forces of greed and privilege, so abundantly protected and cared for by these administrations, were entrenching themselves, not only in the control of American industry, but in the control of Government itself. Mergers, consolidations, and the like were carried on throughout the country, driving innumerable independent and small competitors out of business, while those in control of government sat idly and complacently by, viewing through rose-colored glasses only the economic conditions of the favored few, at the same time rejecting by veto after veto almost every proposal advanced by organized agriculture and such men as ex-Governor Lowden, of Illinois. The McNary-Haugen plan, the export debentures plan, and, in fact, every proposal of the farm leaders was discarded or disregarded with the blunt statement that these proposals were unsound and unworkable, just as the opponents of the pending bill are now charging.

Any legislation that does not conform to or comport with the ideas of the high command of the Republican Party is always denounced as unsound and unworkable. We have heard that in every tax bill that we have passed.

Instead of adopting any of the proposals for the advancement of the farmers they were given the Federal Farm Board with an appropriation of one-half billion dollars and the Hawley-Smoot-Grundy Tariff Act, which, we were told by ex-Senator Watson, of Indiana, and others, would bring forth abundant prosperity, and the American standard of living would rise higher and higher on account of the work done by the then called best minds, of which they took unto themselves a complete monopoly. These best minds were doubtless similar to the new Republican "brain trust", 52 of whom have just been taken on to tell the Republicans how to write a platform, select a candidate, and doubtless criticize an equitable tax bill. This was the era when poverty was to be abolished, two cars were to be in every garage, and a chicken in every pot. We all know what happened to the farmers in those halcyon days of normalcy, prosperity, and full dinner pails. We saw the price of the farmers' products and the farmers' economic position and American life sink lower and lower, continuing in a tail spin, until President Roosevelt took over the control and righted the ship.

In that connection I would say, if it takes 52 college professors or "brain trusters" or "bone-head trusters", or whatever you call them, to tell the Republican Party how to select a candidate and write a platform, and if by any chance, if by an accident, if by any misfortune, we should be so unfortunate and should have such a calamity as the election of a Republican President, which I am sure the good sense of the American people will never allow and Divine Providence never permit—if it takes 52 to start them and write a platform and select a candidate, how many would it take to conduct a Republican administration? [Laughter and applause.]

Let us compare conditions under the Republican with that existing under the present administration. First, let us compare the record with respect to agriculture, since the revenues to be raised by the pending bill is made necessary if we are to continue aid to the farmers, to which end President Roosevelt promised there would be no retreat, knowing full well that by aiding agriculture of which about 23 percent of our population are actively engaged and an additional 17 percent are directly dependent upon, we will be helping to restore prosperity to our entire population, since added purchasing power in the hands of the farmers will inure to the benefit of business in all lines of endeavor. Our Republican friends opposing the enactment of this bill may desire to return to the old order, but I am confident the great mass of the American people favor continuing the New Deal and a square deal for the farmers.

One need only compare conditions in 1920 and 1932 with those existing today to see the beneficent results of President Roosevelt's policies.

In 1920 the gross farm income constituted 17 percent of our total national income, whereas in 1932 it was only 7.8 percent. In other words, the gross farm income dropped from $13,500,000,000 in 1920 under President Wilson to $5,200,000,000 in 1932 under Hoover, a decrease of more than 61 percent. This decrease of $8,300,000,000 was reflected in the increased number of unemployed and in the reduced pay envelope of those fortunate enough to have employment. If the farmers had had the same income they enjoyed during the last year of the administration of Woodrow Wilson, it would not now be necessary for us to make the large appropriations to administer to those in distress. In 1932 the cash income of the farmers amounted to $4,300,000,000; in 1933 $5,300,000,000, an increase of $1,000,000,000; in 1934 it was $6,200,000,000, an increase of $1,900,000,000 over 1932, and in 1935 the cash income amounted to $6,700,000,000, an increase of $2,400,000,000, or more than 55 percent increase over 1932.

To illustrate further, let us compare the last 3 years of Hoover with the first 3 years of Roosevelt with respect to the price of three of the basic farm crops—cotton, wheat, and corn.

The price of hogs, cattle, tobacco, and, in fact, all farm products shows similar and even greater increases.

In 1920 the total value of farm properties, including lands, buildings, and equipment amounted to $61,000,000,000, and in 1932 it had dropped to $34,200,000,000, a loss of $27,100,000,000, or nearly 45 percent. In 1920 the ratio of mortgage debt to farm properties was 11.8 percent, and in 1932 it had increased to 24.8 percent, and during this period thousands upon thousands of farms were lost through foreclosure and forced sale for payment of taxes, many of whom in desperation committed suicide. Under the administration of the Farm Credit agencies, the farmers have been saved approximately $55,000,000 a year in reduced interest charges.

This increase in the economic condition of American agriculture, achieved under the policies of President Roosevelt, has been one of the major factors in the improved condition of American industry and business; yet we find the Republican members voting, almost to a man, against measures designed to maintain and add to those gains.

Now let us compare the industrial and business conditions during the last 3 years of Hoover and the Old Deal, with those existing today under Roosevelt and the New Deal.

Since these statistics were compiled still greater improvement in business has been achieved, and one need only look at the signs of it in the financial page of the newspapers. I shall quote from a few appearing in recent days.

Here is one from the Washington Post of April 14, under a New York date line of April 13, showing that the—

National Industrial Conference Board estimates show an increase of 5,413,000 more persons were at work in December 1935 than in March 1933.

On the same page I find the following:

CHICAGO, April 13.—Chicago's Easter trade last week reached the highest peak since 1920, the Chicago Association of Commerce said today. Retail outlets reported sales from 10 to 40 percent above those of a year ago.

How is it, and how can it be, that more industries can run and more people can be given employment to man these industries and yet unemployment not be reduced? Of course, such an argument is absurd.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. It is my understanding that all remarks are to be confined to the bill under consideration.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Absolutely; and this bill under consideration is for the benefit of the farmer.

Mr. KNUTSON. I thought the gentleman was delivering the keynote speech of the next campaign.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am sorry that the truth is always burdensome to the gentleman.

Here is another from the Washington Post of April 20:

STEEL OUTPUT 70.5 PERCENT, NEW HIGH MARK—FRESH DEMAND INCREASES OPERATIONS 4 POINTS DURING WEEK

CLEVELAND, OHIO, April 19.—Fresh commitments for iron and steel, mainly from automobile manufacturers and railroads, have taken up some of the recent slack in new buying, with the result that steel-works operations this week advanced 4 points to 70½ percent, says Steel today.

Taking up again the matter of the tax bill, the President, while recognizing the complete authority and discretion of Congress in the formulation or imposition of appropriate taxes to meet the needs of the Treasury for permanent and temporary revenues, did invite attention to several forms of taxation, which might be employed to meet these needs. In the main, the committee has found it desirable to adopt in principle the more important of these proposals. I shall not attempt to discuss the bill in its technical aspects, as this will be taken up in detail by the able chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. HILL, and other members of the committee, who will speak later on the bill. I shall, however, address myself to an explanation of the provisions of the bill and a review of some of the reasons which prompted their selection.

First, I shall take up the measures proposed by the committee to provide during the next 3 years temporary additional revenues, amounting to $517,000,000. This will require temporary taxes, bringing in about $173,000,000 per annum. The committee was not prepared to reach a final decision as to the measures to be adopted to raise the entire amount of the temporary revenue required, especially as it recognized that its decision might be affected by conditions which might arise between now and the next session. On the other hand, it recognized that not less than one-third of the required revenue should be raised during the fiscal year 1937.

Mr. Chairman, a great deal was said about those who opposed in our hearings the tax measure, but the hearings will disclose the fact that most of this opposition arose from a misunderstanding that we were going to reenact the processing tax, and a misunderstanding of what we were going to do with the windfall tax; but after they found out what our policy would be, most of them, or many of them, seemed satisfied.

To fulfill this need, your committee has recommended that the capital stock tax be continued for 1 year at one-half the rate provided in the Revenue Act of 1935, and that a "windfall" tax be enacted to put a special levy on the unjust enrichment arising as a result of the collection from the public of excise taxes which the taxpayers upon whom they were laid did not pay into the Federal Treasury. As appears from the committee's report, it is estimated that this procedure will result in additional revenue from the capital stock tax of $83,000,000 and from the "windfall" tax of $100,000,000. This gives a total of additional revenue for the next fiscal year of $183,000,000, an amount $10,000,000 in excess of that requested by the President.

The reasonableness of the so-called "windfall" tax, in my opinion, is beyond question, and great care has been exercised in its drafting to insure that its burden shall not rest upon income or taxpayers to which it is not justly applicable. Nevertheless, there has been considerable misapprehension in respect to the nature and purposes of the proposed tax. Perhaps this can best be cleared up by stating first what it is not. It is not a tax upon the amount of any impounded taxes, nor is it an attempt to collect processing taxes which have been invalidated by the Supreme Court. The tax is an income tax imposed on unjust enrichment accruing to any person from shifting to others the burden of Federal excise taxes. The tax applies to two classes of persons, (1) those who were supposed to be liable for the tax and shifted this burden to others, but who did not pay the tax, or who paid it and obtained a refund; and (2) dealers who included the amount of Federal excise tax in the price of goods sold by them, but who were subsequently reimbursed by their vendors for the amount of the tax. It is proposed that the tax be applicable to any taxable year ending with January 1935, or at any time thereafter. The tax is thus sufficiently retroactive to cover the unjust enrichment accruing as a result of the impoundment and nonpayment of processing taxes during 1935.

As I have stated, the tax has been carefully drafted from the point of view of equity, even to the extent of risking some of the revenue which the measure is designed to produce. To this end provision has been made against double taxation of the unjust enrichment income through the means of appropriate credits for the regular Federal income and the excess-profits taxes which such income may have borne. Thus, in effect, the total tax on the unjust enrichment is only the 80 percent provided for under title III of the bill.

The bill also makes appropriate provision for refunds under the Agricultural Adjustment Act and for floor stocks adjustment. These relate largely to refunds on exports and in connection with deliveries for charitable distribution or use, and to the treatment of floor stocks on hand at the time of the invalidation of the Agricultural Adjustment Act substantially as though the tax had been terminated by order of the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions of said act. The provisions of this title relate more or less to technical matters which will be discussed by Mr. HILL.

My good friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. RICH, an ardent and able Member of the House, often asks, when we propose some measure that will require some expenditure, "Where are we going to get the money?" I will tell the gentleman where we are going to get it. We are going to get it from those who are best able to pay, and from a source where we will impose no unjust burden on anyone.

I come now to a consideration of the measure proposed to meet the permanent needs for additional revenue, estimated to amount to $620,000,000 annually. The President suggested consideration of some form of undistributed profits tax. In its report the committee has recognized the fact that the greatest defect in our present system of taxation is the fact that surtaxes on individuals are avoided by impounding income in corporate surpluses. It has recommended, therefore, a plan of taxation which taxes a corporation on the net income, but which fixes the rate in accordance with the proportion of the net income undistributed. In form title I of the bill, as reported, is a restatement of the existing income-tax law with the changes necessary to effectuate the imposition of a tax on corporations at a rate which will depend on the ratio of the undistributed net income to the entire net income; or, stated in another way, on the ratio of dividends paid to the net income. Title II of the bill contains the necessary amendments in respect to the capital-stock and excess-profits tax. These taxes will be referred to again in connection with my discussion of the permanent tax proposal.

The President, in his tax message, invited the attention of Congress to the circumstances that the form of tax which you now have under consideration—

> Would accomplish an important tax reform, remove two major inequalities in our tax system, and stop "leaks" in the present surtaxes.

Stated another way, the measure is designed to provide a more equitable system of taxation, while at the same time producing the required additional revenue. The proposal is not new, nor was it adopted without serious and earnest consideration of all available sources of revenue. Taxation is a practical matter and must be governed largely by practical considerations. It lays a heavy hand upon our citizens, and it is unfortunately true that, no matter what tax may be devised, in its ultimate effect the tax must be paid by individuals, whether they be shareholders or wage earners. However, in selecting a form of taxation, we should be careful not to impose burdens upon those who are already carrying too heavy a tax load. So far as possible, we should follow the sound principle of ability to pay. We must also bear in mind that, apart from the levy on capital, taxes can only be paid from one of four principal sources: The first is receipts from business profits; the second, wages and salaries; the third, receipts from rents; and the fourth is receipts from interest.

The preliminary questions which were debated when the need for new revenue arose were, Where ought we to look for the added money and what form ought the tax to assume? This latter question was considered especially important, since the form and character of any additional tax would determine, in a large measure, which of the several income groups of our population will chiefly bear the burden. Among the possibilities were the following: (1) A general manufacturers' sales tax. Such a tax, although productive, would fall heaviest on the members of the lower income groups. In addition, the fact that some 61 percent of the total revenue for 1935 was obtained from consumption and similar excises weighed heavily against the recommendation of additional excises; (2) reduction in personal exemptions and increase in the normal tax rate. This was not recommended, because it was felt that no increases in the existing income-tax rates should be considered unless and until we were quite sure that all important sources of tax evasion or of tax avoidance in existing income-tax laws had been eliminated; (3) a drastic increase in the corporation tax or some other plan for imposing on corporate profits a fair tax burden.

We were impressed by the figures on corporate profits, because such figures as there are indicate that there has been no corresponding great increase during the years 1934–35 in rents, farm income, and factory pay rolls. These facts persuaded us that, if we were to raise the required revenue with any proper regard to equity, it would probably have to come from corporation profits. However, the decision did not rest upon revenue considerations alone, or even in the main upon such considerations. The decision was governed primarily by considerations of equity and by the fact that through applying this principle we could raise the required revenue from sources which so far have failed to carry their proportionate share of the tax load. This was clearly stated in that part of the President's tax message to which I have already referred.

The primary purposes of the proposal to substitute for our present corporation income, capital stock, and excess-profits taxes a corporation income tax based upon the corporate earnings retained by the corporation are, first, to eliminate the present inequalities of our taxation of business profits as between incorporated and unincorporated businesses; second, to remove a very important source of tax avoidance that inheres in our present income-tax laws; and third, as a consequence of the elimination of inequalities and sources of tax avoidance, to increase the Federal revenues to the extent necessary to balance the regular Budget—that is, to balance all Federal expenditures other than those made for purposes of relief.

As already stated, the committee proposal, in accordance with the substance of the President's suggestion, proposes to accomplish these purposes by substituting for the existing corporation taxes a graduated tax on corporation incomes, the graduation being based, first, on the size of the corporation income, and second, and more fundamentally, upon the portion of the corporation's net earnings that are retained in the business.

When distributed to stockholders, corporation earnings become a part of the incomes of the individual stockholders and are subject to the graduated surtaxes. Corporation earnings which are not currently distributed in dividends now escape the surtaxes for long periods, or altogether, thereby creating an unfair discrimination. All earnings of a partnership or an enterprise owned by a single individual, whether reinvested or not, are now currently subject to surtaxes.

The earnings withheld by corporations add no less to the wealth of the shareholders than the earnings distributed in dividends; for the reinvestment of corporate earnings becomes reflected in the stockholder's share of the net worth of the corporation and in increased earning power. It is worthy of note that the process of reinvestment of earnings frequently results in very large capital gains that escape capital-gains taxes. The accrued capital gains of a lifetime, if obtained through the retention and automatic reinvestment of corporate earnings, escape all capital-gains taxation, because the law does not provide any tax on the increment between cost and market value at the time of death, the entire estate being subject only to the ordinary estate taxes, on the market value, that are paid by all estates. Thus no special compensation is received by the Federal Government for the loss in revenues suffered during the lifetime of the owner by reason of his use of the corporate form.

Shareholders in corporations that pursue liberal dividend policies are now discriminated against, because they are not permitted to reinvest tax-free the corporate earnings that they receive as dividends; whereas the stockholders in corporations that retain the bulk of their earnings are permitted under the present law to reinvest their share of the corporate earnings, in effect, without payment of individual income taxes thereon.

Further, the present ability of the controlling stockholders of corporations to choose the timing of dividend distributions without any effect upon the corporation's tax liability and without reference to current earnings is resulting in tremendous losses of revenue to the Federal Government through an unjust avoidance of taxation by stockholders of large personal incomes. The earnings withheld by a corporation would, if distributed, materially raise the surtax brackets of many stockholders, thereby putting the stockholders in the surtax brackets where they really belong. When withheld for a time and then paid out in years when the other income of important stockholders is smaller such earnings escape the higher rates to which they would have been subject. Individual businessmen and partnerships possess no corresponding choice for the timing of the distribution of earnings for income-tax purposes.

The present law discriminates against stockholders with small incomes. The corporation earnings are subject to the graduated 12½- to 15-percent corporation income tax, as well as to capital-stock and excess-profits taxes. As against these rates of 12½ to 15 percent taken out of earnings, plus the capital-stock and excess-profits taxes, amounting on the average to about an additional percent, the stockholders' dividend receipts are exempted only from the 4-percent normal tax. Under the pending bill it would be impossible for a corporation to avoid income taxes altogether, and the small stockholder would pay only the normal tax of 4 percent on his dividends or no tax at all, according to his total income, instead of in effect the present corporation income, capital-stock, and excess-profits taxes.

On the other hand, the present law sometimes favors the partnership as against the small corporation. There are many corporations whose earnings, if wholly distributed among the shareholders, would not be subject to individual income taxes averaging from 12½ to 15 percent, because the shareholders of those corporations do not fall into sufficiently high surtax brackets. The corporate form of business organization is, nevertheless, desired by numerous small and medium-sized enterprises for reasons of convenience, flexibility, limitation of liability, and the like. Discrimination in taxation against the corporate form of business enterprise, as well as discrimination in its favor, would be removed by the present proposal.

In substance, two major results would be accomplished by the proposed measure: First, all business, whether incorporated or not, would be placed on substantially the same basis for income-tax purposes; second, we would apply throughout our income-tax law the principle of taxation according to ability to pay.

In final analysis, ability to pay rests with the individual, and not with the corporation. When we tax the corporation itself we are really taxing an artificial entity representing an aggregate of individuals in almost every degree of economic condition and owning all the way from a few shares of stock to blocks representing hundreds of thousands of shares. Obviously, then, no tax (with the exception, perhaps, of a withholding tax which would be administratively very difficult) could be devised, which collected from the corporation, would equalize the tax burden with the ability of the individual shareholder to pay. This being true, we can never have equitable taxation of business income so long as we ignore the real ownership of the corporate income and continue to tax the corporation as an entity very much as if it were an individual. Ability to pay rests with the individual and the individual should be the basis, so far as possible, on which income taxation is applied.

That the proposed measure will carry out the principle of ability to pay is apparent from the fact that these additional revenues will come mainly from the real owners of business income now avoiding the surtaxes thereon. Studies supplied to the committee indicate that if corporations were to distribute to their shareholders all of their 1936 earnings, the taxable income of individuals would be increased by approximately $4,000,000,000. Of this large sum, more than 71 percent would be received by individuals with net incomes of more than $25,000 a year, and about 45 percent by individuals with net incomes in excess of $100,000 a year—individuals, in other words, who are subject to the higher surtax rates in our income-tax schedule. To the extent that corporations do not disburse their current earnings, the additional revenues will be obtained from higher corporation income taxes, corresponding as near as may be on the average to the rates that would have been paid by their shareholders if corporate earnings were fully distributed. At this time I ask that there be inserted in the record an estimated distribution of individual income as prepared by the Treasury Department.

The minority says that this will undermine business. We have taken all of the pains possible that we could, with any degree of equity and justice, to provide for corporations that may be in distress or in debt or that may need larger surpluses. I will ask the gentleman from Washington how many corporations can retain up to 40 percent of their net earnings and pass it on to surplus without paying any more or as much tax as they pay today?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Two hundred and fourteen thousand out of a total of 257,000—214,000 having an income of $10,000 or less, out of a total number of 257,000.

Mr. DOUGHTON. So those with smaller earnings will pay less tax under our plan than under the present law?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. DOUGHTON. In the drafting of this measure great care has been taken to make ample provision for the practical requirements of corporate business. Indeed, as I have stated in another connection, practical considerations have been governing throughout our consideration of this and the other tax proposals. There is no intention or desire whatever to interfere with the internal management of business enterprises. The object of this revenue measure is not to tell corporate managements what proportion of earnings they shall distribute and what proportion they shall retain. The object is rather to see that, whatever the decisions of corporate managements, the Federal Government shall not be unreasonably and inequitably deprived of necessary revenues and that the tax burden is equitably distributed. Likewise, it is not the policy of Congress to dictate whether business shall be carried on as individual enterprises or partnerships, on the one hand, or as corporations on the other hand. The present laws go a long way toward doing so by making the use of the corporate form unduly expensive for the little fellow and by offering a source of tax avoidance for the big fellow. It is proposed to remove this inequality.

Some fear has been expressed that the effect of this proposal will be to perpetuate the existing set-up of industry, so that the big will stay big and the little will stay little. This seems to imply that under the present system of corporate taxation the small corporations have equal opportunity to grow into competitive strength with the larger corporations. This would be interesting if true. The fact is that the existing method of taxation has a tendency to increase the competitive advantages of the larger corporations, of which advantages, our experience shows, they have not failed to avail themselves. We do not pretend that this tax measure will remove all inequalities. However, we do claim that it will remove two major inequalities of our tax system while at the same time removing an important source of tax avoidance.

In concluding, I desire to emphasize that the proposed new method of taxing corporation incomes provides a basis for an excellent and productive permanent revenue measure. Its merits are clear: First, it will remove great existing inequalities in the taxation of incorporated and unincorporated businesses; second, it will permit a nearer approach to establishing taxation on the basis of ability to pay; third, it will increase the Federal revenues mainly by removing important sources of tax avoidance rather than by increasing existing tax rates or imposing new taxes; and, finally, this proposal appears to be greatly superior to all alternative proposals that have been suggested. [Applause.]

Before I conclude I should like to read one statement made by Mr. Helvering, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which shows very clearly the inequality and injustice that exists now in many cases under our present corporation-tax laws. This is from the top of page 20 of the hearings:

> If, for example, a partnership composed of four equal partners earned $1,000,000, the Federal Government would receive $517,136 of those earnings in individual income taxes, assuming that the partners were single men and had no other taxable income. If these same men conducted their business as a corporation and paid themselves salaries of $25,000 each but no dividends, the Federal Government would receive only $145,656 in income taxes—a difference of $371,480. Even if this corporation distributed 50 percent of its earnings, after the payment of $100,000 in salaries, in dividends, the Federal Government would still receive $174,400 less in taxes than it would receive if the business were conducted as a partnership.

Now, if anyone can justify a system of taxation that discriminates to such a degree among its citizens engaged in business, those engaged in business as a corporation and those engaged in business as a partnership, he has a mind that works entirely different to mine. There is no equality, there is no justification whatever for a system of taxation of that kind. This needed reform has been postponed entirely too long.

In conclusion, there are two primary purposes in this bill: First, to raise needed additional revenue. We all admit that. No one will deny that it is needed.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed to the conclusion of his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Thank you. I will be through shortly.

The second purpose is to so arrange our corporate-tax laws that the Government will occupy a neutral position as between the taxpayers, or between those who pay taxes as corporations and those who pay taxes as individuals or as partnerships. In other words, the secondary purpose is to bring about a condition of fundamental equality. Moreover, in raising this additional revenue to finance the farm program and to take care of the additional expense placed on the Government by the passage of the soldiers' adjusted-service-certificate act the revenue will be raised where it will impose the least hardship and the least burden. Those are the two fundamentally sound reasons, in my judgment, why this bill should not only commend itself to every fair-minded Member of this House but to every taxpayer. We are striving for the same objective; that is, honest, efficient government as far as possible under existing conditions. I say you cannot challenge the statement truthfully and successfully that this bill is based on fundamental justice, and that any burdens imposed by this law will be placed where they will impose the least hardship.

I thank you all for your most courteous and careful consideration. [Applause.]

I had expected to refer to one other statement contained in the minority report during the limited time at my disposal, so will do so under the leave granted me to extend my remarks.

The minority report, in referring to the opponents of the President's suggestions and the report of the subcommittee during the hearings, states:

> This opposition was based wholly on the vicious character of the proposal, and not on any selfish effort to shift the burden of increased taxes to other groups.
> Among those conspicuously absent were the really big-business interests of the country who, by reason of their adequate existing surpluses, view the proposal with equanimity because it will relieve them of their present tax burden and at the same time crush their smaller competitors.

Being a Democrat, I must admit that I have not had the close contact with "the really big business of the country", so I cannot qualify as an expert on what constitutes bigness, and am at a little disadvantage in taking issue with my Republican friends.

During the hearings the committee was favored with the presence of several familiar faces who in the past have always appeared in opposition to practically every tax proposal advanced. Among them were the representatives of the National Association of Manufacturers and the United States Chamber of Commerce, whose representatives appeared in the role of spokesmen for the small businessmen of the country and as stanch opponents of monopoly. They, as usual, told us that the President's suggestions were economically unsound and unworkable and that they would drive the small corporations and businessmen out of business and create and breed monopoly. It was indeed a dismal and tragic picture they painted as to the future of those they represented.

During the testimony of Mr. Sargent, secretary of the Manufacturers' Association, it developed that their board of directors had arrived at their decision to oppose the President's suggestions prior to the printing of the subcommittee's report, they having met in New York on March 25. The directors present at that meeting reads like a membership list of the American Liberty League, whose financial angel was also one of those determining the attitude of the United States Chamber of Commerce, and who, incidentally, has just recently been identified as the financial angel of a so-called grass-roots convention recently held down in Georgia, and whose main activity to date has been the distribution of literature designed to arouse racial prejudices and hatreds.

Only 29 of the 69 members of their board of directors were present at this meeting, and who, according to the last edition of Poor's Register of Directors, are either officers or directors of 164 corporations. Seventeen of those present, according to the report to Congress on corporate salaries in excess of $15,000, received salaries and bonuses ranging from $21,000 to $125,219.92, or a combined total of $905,176.08, an average of $53,245.65 plus, and one of the companies thus represented paid its president $364,432.20. These are the small businessmen whose welfare our Republican friends place over and above the men who till the soil.

The other group of small businessmen, the United States Chamber of Commerce, after taking about 16 days to make up their minds, finally sent representatives to the hearings. They were, as usual, positive and emphatic in their opposition on the ground that the proposals were economically unsound and unworkable, and that the same would drive small corporations out of business and breed monopoly.

Before referring to the personnel of the chamber's finance committee who determined the policy and attitude of the United States Chamber of Commerce, it might be well to refer to a recent article appearing in the Washington Herald in the copyrighted article daily appearing under the heading of "The Washington Merry-Go-Round", by Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen. This article quoted Harper Sibley, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, as having said, in connection with the question as to whether or not Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Roper, would be invited to address their annual meeting to be held in the near future. Mr. Sibley was quoted as saying:

> I'm in the middle between two camps. One group, the ultra-hardshell Tories, are opposed to any overtures to the administration. The other, made up chiefly of small businessmen, are on the whole for friendly relations. But it is the first group that controls the chamber.

The finance committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce is as follows:

Fred H. Clausen, of Horicon, Wis., manager of the Van Brunt Manufacturing Co., one of 17 subsidiaries of Deere & Co.

Ellsworth C. Alvord, of the law firm of Alvord & Alvord, Washington, D. C., and former special assistant to Andrew W. Mellon, former Secretary of the Treasury.

Raymond H. Berry, of the law firm of Berry & Stevens, and chairman of the tax committee of the Detroit Board of Commerce.

W. Dale Clark, president, National Bank of Omaha, Omaha, Nebr.

Roy C. Osgood, vice president, First National Bank, Chicago, Ill.

Fred R. Fairchild, professor of political economy, Yale University.

H. B. Fernald, senior member of accounting firm of Loomis, Suffern & Fernald, New York.

Edwin G. Merrill, chairman of board, Bank of New York & Trust Co.

H. S. Wherrett, president, Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., one of the Mellon interests; and Lammot Du Pont, president of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., and chairman of board of General Motors Corporation, as well as the financial angel of the American Liberty League and the Talmadge-Kirby Grass Roots Convention.

Six of the above are identified, according to Poor's Register of Directors, with approximately 130 corporations, including their subsidiaries and affiliated companies, 5 of this committee, according to the report to Congress on corporate salaries in excess of $15,000, received salaries and bonuses ranging from $18,900 to $100,219.96, or an average of $52,065.65 plus, and 2 corporations represented by this group paid out in salary and bonus the sum of $8,211,853.74 to 216 persons. This group indirectly represent approximately 71 additional corporations, exclusive of subsidiaries, in which the members of the Du Pont and Mellon families are either officers or directors. A complete list of the corporate connections of those spokesmen for the smaller businessmen of the country say they will be driven out of business through their inability to cope with monopoly, which they say will be created if the provisions of the pending measure are enacted into law is as follows.

These spokesmen were loud in their denunciation of the President's suggestions during the hearings, but were woefully weak in offering any constructive suggestions or alternatives. One of the witnesses appearing for the chamber of commerce in reply to a question as to where additional revenue receipts could be secured suggested that Congress should require semiannual returns instead of only a single return each year. The net result of such a ridiculous proposal, if carried out, would only bring added administrative difficulties and expense and not result in any increased revenue. Another advocated the reenactment of some form of processing taxes, at reduced rates, but stipulated that only such taxes as would be paid by the consuming public should be considered. The representative of the Manufacturers Association, who was so positive in his declaration that the President's suggestions were economically unsound, when asked what in his opinion was a sound corporate tax, gave the committee none.

Many other witnesses appeared during the hearings, among whom was former Representative Fort, of New Jersey, who I am fearful will be read into the Communist Party by my friend from Massachusetts, since he was far more in accord with the various suggestions contained in the subcommittee's report than the witness alluded to by the Republicans in their minority views.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] has consumed 1 hour and 1 minute.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire not to be interrupted. Will the Chairman be kind enough to notify me when I have consumed 20 minutes?

Mr. Chairman, there is an old adage which runs, "Least said, soonest mended."

This was never more truthful than as applied to the proposed tax measure.

I do not intend to discuss the demerits of this legislation at this time but will do so later on during the debate. Anyone who can analyze the drastic changes in our tax system proposed by the bill, which has been public for only 48 hours, or who can intelligently discuss all of its complications and ramifications, has mental capacity that entitles him to be rated as a superman. Not only the complications involved but the lack of information provided, the inaccurate estimates, and the adverse testimony, all could be discussed indefinitely.

The majority, with the aid of all the Government officials and experts at their command, offer only a synopsis of the bill itself. I therefore urge both sides of the House to read the minority report in comparison. While our discussion was necessarily confined to the general principles involved, we invite Members to decide for themselves which report actually tells anything about the operation and effect of the law.

Let me call attention to a few quotations.

The President, in his tax message, said, among other things:

> Such a revision of our corporate taxes would effect great simplification in tax procedure, in corporate accounting, and in the understanding of the whole subject by the citizens of the Nation.

Unfortunately the President has suggested—he evidently no longer orders, as previously—has suggested a tax measure for simplification, reform, and revenue. Last year he also spoke of a "breathing spell."

In addition to this reference from the President, let me quote the following from the majority's report on the bill:

> * * * This will take care of the President's request until the next session of Congress, which can then act more intelligently in the light of then existing conditions.

I think there is no question but what the next Congress will act more intelligently than the present Congress, because it will be a Republican Congress. Possibly the Democratic majority have this in mind. But there is another reason. They want to put off as much of the tax burden as they can until after the election.

The next Republican Congress may have to levy increased taxes to pay for Democratic extravagance, but there is a possibility we can get along with the present taxes after Democratic waste has been eliminated.

What a great thing "simplification" is as today exemplified by this measure. I most heartily commend to the careful attention of the membership of this House and to the people of the country the contents of schedules I, II, and III of section 13. If this is simplification, give me complication!

This complicated legislation was originally worked out with algebraic formulas. The present tables of rates will prove to be more Greek than algebra to the unfortunate taxpayers. The only beneficiaries under this bill, aside from the large monopolistic corporations who will have their tax burden lifted by the bill, will be the high-priced lawyers and accountants who will be obliged to lead their clients through the maze which the subservient Democratic majority have created to further harass business and the taxpayer.

We pass to the word "reform", which is defined in the dictionary as meaning to "change from bad to good." No one can conceive of a greater contrast from actual definition and actual fact than in the statement that this measure is a change from bad to good. It has no good in it; it is all bad. We now have a tax system that has been built up and constantly improved over a period of 23 years. It may be slightly complicated, and possibly it could be still further improved, but certainly the bill presented to the House at this time falls short of any improvement, and falsifies the well-established definition of the word "reform." Any businessman examining its provisions will see how splendidly the "reform" is working in his behalf.

So far as revenues are concerned it must be admitted that the bill is disappointing. Not only are we giving up a certainty in the way of revenue for an uncertainty, but even the arbitrary estimates made by the majority in their report are admittedly a distinct reduction from the President's expectations. I call attention to the fact that the Treasury itself has not furnished a definite estimate of what the bill is expected to produce in the way of revenue, and even if it did the estimate would be no more than a guess. The Federal revenue is actually jeopardized by the bill when it abandons an assured collection of $1,132,000,000 from corporations in favor of a yield which at most is pure conjecture and which will undoubtedly be disappointing in amount.

The distinguished chairman of the committee has just presented this House with a forced explanation of the bill. I realize that he and his associates must on the surface appear to be wholeheartedly for this bill so that they may be enabled to keep their record intact of being administration "rubber stamps." They are, of course, "on the spot." If the truth were known we would find the gentlemen on the majority side of the House as violently opposed to this bill as we on this side. At least one of our Democratic colleagues on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMNECK], has the courage of his convictions and refuses to play "follow the leader" on this bill. He knows it is unsound and is going to vote accordingly. Why cannot the rest of you Democrats vote your convictions as well? The President made you enact his pet graduated income tax on corporations last year, and now he has left you "holding the bag" by abandoning the scheme even before it went into operation. How do you know he will not abandon this unsound scheme before adjournment and suggest some other experiment?

I could elaborate indefinitely on these matters, but I wish to direct the attention of the House and the country to the manner in which this bill was prepared.

In January we had the President's message saying, "No new taxes."

In March we had another message from the President requesting new taxes and suggesting certain methods of raising them. His major suggestion had to do with the proposal to revolutionize the corporate tax system and experiment with a new scheme.

The taxation subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee immediately began a study of the President's suggestions. No bill had been prepared which could be considered. All the subcommittee had before it was the President's message and several professors from the Treasury Department, including Professor Oliphant, Professor Kent, and Professor Haas.

The reason no bill had been prepared was that these impractical and theoretical professors did not know how to work out a bill. They merely gave birth to the idea which the President left on the doorstep of Congress.

After laboring for nearly a month the subcommittee was unable to prepare a bill and simply submitted a list of recommendations to the full committee based on the proposals made by the Treasury officials.

I want to add that in my humble judgment, if it were not for the expert knowledge of the legislative drafting service and the expert tax adviser of Congress, Mr. Parker, you would not have a bill before you today embodying these ideas. They are the men who drafted the language of the bill. You had to wait until you went into private, executive Democratic subcommittee session with them before you could put a line of this bill on paper. I respect very greatly the tax knowledge of my colleagues on the committee, able men that they are, but when it comes to their getting up the phraseology and language in italics in this measure, give me Mr. Beeman and Mr. Parker. These gentlemen, of course, have nothing to say about what goes in the bill; they simply take orders from the majority. At a later time I propose to refer to Mr. Parker's views on the general theory of this kind of tax, to which he is on record as being opposed.

After the subcommittee submitted its report, hearings were then conducted by the full committee on the subcommittee's recommendations, with no bill before it.

I want to emphasize that there never was a meeting of the full committee until the bill was submitted to the full committee on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock. It was reported out the same day. Did any of you Members, either Republican or Democratic, ever hear of an important piece of legislation coming onto this floor in such a manner? It is rubber-stamping, regimentation, autocratic control, and all the rest of it run riot. We have seen a lot of it in the last 3 years, but the present procedure beats all the rest to a frazzle. There was never anything like it.

Outside of Treasury officials, only three witnesses appeared in favor of the proposed scheme—not bill—scheme—no bill, understand. Who were they? One was a young attorney who had a few theories of his own regarding taxation; one was a Government attorney for the Communications Commission, whom the Treasury "invited" to appear; and the other was a spokesman for the Communist Party.

Every other witness opposed the bill. Those in opposition were practically all businessmen, with experience and not theory to back up their judgment.

The Secretary of the Treasury was conspicuous by his absence. He became suddenly ill just before the hearings opened and, by recuperating at a fashionable southern resort, was able to return to the city, quite by coincidence, just as the hearings closed. It will be interesting to find out whether he will appear before the Finance Committee in the other body. Possibly he will have a relapse about the time they start their hearings. Humph! [Laughter and applause.]

The hearings were conducted by the majority in such a way as to frighten self-respecting people from appearing. Every witness who opposed the bill was browbeaten, and the majority even resorted to quoting from the salary report, sent up by the Treasury which was taken from the income-tax returns.

They were going around snooping. I used this word once before, and I am going to use it again. In the Ways and Means Committee room they went snooping around, instructing their clerks to find out the salaries being paid to men appearing before the committee. This is a fine way to treat people appearing, and it is a splendid way to induce witnesses not to appear. If this sort of procedure keeps up, the only way we will ever get any witnesses will be by subpena; they will not come voluntarily if this is the way they are to be treated by what is supposed to be one of the leading committees. Humph! [Laughter.]

It was apparent from the beginning that the majority had made up their minds to draft a bill along the lines of the President's suggestions; so there was no use for anyone to waste his time by appearing.

What effect does this bill have on the "breathing spell" we were told about? Well, good heavens! The taxpayers of the country will be all out of breath before there ever comes any breathing spell. That is about as near as we can depend on any promise coming from the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. Breathing spell! Why, I would rather run up Capitol Hill and expect to have any breath left than to believe the business people of the country will have any breath left under the "breathing spell" that is being pushed on them.

We were told today that this bill is not sufficient, that we will have another measure next year. Thank God, though, it will be under Republican guidance. [Applause and laughter.]

Now, let us give a little further consideration to this matter of the preparation of the bill. We are asked to talk on the bill; yes. In the first place you cannot talk on its merits, it has not got any; and its demerits are so many that 8 hours of debate on this side is not sufficient time in which to begin to touch them. Let us, therefore, vary the program just a little. Two hundred and thirty-six pages!

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That is pretty close.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am mistaken; 249 pages. I am modest. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I am sorry I did not make it large enough. I will make it larger if it will help the gentleman any. This was available to the membership of this House 48 hours ago; still you gentlemen will be asked next week to cast your vote in behalf of your constituents with your honest judgment backing a study you are supposed to have made of this complicated measure.

Simplicity! Well, look over any page and any italics there and see how simple it is. Look at these schedules and tables and see how easy it is going to be for the experienced tax-expert lawyer to collect mighty heavy fees for keeping you men out of jail when you present your income-tax reports.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it is the most complicated language which was ever presented to this House on a most complicated subject. Now, that statement stands. I shall be glad to take off my hat to any Democrat, and I will include my colleagues on the Republican side, who can stand on this floor and explain how you are going to make up your income-tax return when this bill goes into effect.

Let us, however, go back a little. We received from the President of the United States a message on March 3. The Subcommittee on Taxation of the Ways and Means Committee at once started to study the President's recommendation. The recommendation is in the RECORD before you, suggestions only, even going so far as to say "I would not venture to tell you wise legislators how to write a tax bill covering my views." That is what the President told us, and the reason no bill was prepared was the inexperienced and impractical theorists who suggested the plan to the President were not able to write it themselves. That is the reason no bill has been before you gentlemen. The very theorists who suggested this complicated bill could not put it into language. They had to come up here and get Mr. Beaman to write it for them. I am glad we have such a man able to carry on this task, but he has grown old in the last two weeks trying to put together any kind of language that would fit into the suggestions offered by the President on March 3.

We have criticized the White House and the theorists who assisted the White House for submitting ready-prepared measures in the past. They have not done so in this case purely on account of total lack of knowledge. They recognized that they could not draft this measure, and they knew but one man in the country who could do it and he was up here. So the President dumped these ideas into the lap of Congress and said, "We have the thought. You work it out."

Well, that is very kind of him and his theoretical professors or professional assistants, but it does not get us anywhere so far as legislation is concerned.

The system has never been tried in this country in the past. Similar suggestions have been made for the past 20 years, but never put into effect. It is more drastic and revolutionary than any system heretofore proposed. There is no precedent to go by, which makes the more difficult the drafting of a measure.

The subcommittee sat with the Treasury experts to study the plan outlined. I say "Treasury experts." I am passing out a very large boquet when I call them experts. Who are they? First, there is Professor Oliphant, to whom I referred previously. But I should like to quote from a statement that appears in the record. This occurred in a colloquy between Professor Oliphant and myself and shows just what kind of expert he is:

Mr. TREADWAY. You say as a private lawyer you have not had very much experience in the administration of tax laws?
Mr. OLIPHANT. That is right.
Mr. TREADWAY. But as a professor you have had a good deal?
Mr. OLIPHANT. Yes; I have worked on tax problems a good deal.
Mr. TREADWAY. In order to disseminate your knowledge to the students in your classes?
Mr. OLIPHANT. That is right.

Then I asked Professor Oliphant to furnish the committee with a memorandum covering the constitutionality of the windfall and corporation taxes. This colloquy will be found on page 622 of the hearings. He said:

Yes; I shall be glad to submit a memorandum on that.

It will be noted that no memorandum is inserted in the hearings, nor has any been submitted since the hearings, so far as I know.

Mr. Chairman, I think there is a mighty good reason for the absence of that memorandum on the constitutionality of this act. Neither he nor any of his assistants in the Treasury Department are able to prepare such a statement.

You would think that if the proponents had carried out the whole theory of the thing they would have at least studied its constitutionality before submitting the plan to the President to put into a message to Congress.

The colloquy referred to between Mr. Oliphant and myself occurred on April 6, and with all the white-collared, high-salaried attorneys that the Government seems to be employing nowadays, I think if there was any opportunity or any kind of excuse that could be made to call this constitutional they would have submitted it by this time. At any rate, Professor Oliphant did not keep his word when he promised to submit the memorandum.

One of our chief aides was the general counsel for the Bureau of Internal Revenue, Professor Kent. I had a somewhat similar interview with him. He admitted he was a high-grade college professor out in Chicago. The amount of his court experience was evidently a cipher. He never told us.

Our economist was another professor, Professor Haas.

The best witness we had was one of our former colleagues, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Helvering. I sometimes think it is well worth having served in Congress, because once in a while even the Democrats pick up a good ex-Congressman to put into a job because he belongs to their party, not because of his knowledge of tax matters. That is not expected.

Then we had a very skillful statistician, Mr. McLeod. If you asked him a question about his statistical figures or his maps, or anything else, he stated he had not looked up that particular point. His stock answer right along was that he had not looked into that detail. So far as what he prepared was concerned, if he understood it, that was more than the rest of the members did.

On top of that, of course, there is nothing back of his figures. There was absolutely no evidence submitted to the committee that his figures were in any way accurate. That completes the list of experts. Nevertheless, the Democrats went ahead under instructions and carried out the wishes of the administration.

After this hearing was closed the Democratic members had secret executive sessions, to which the Republican members were not invited and from which we were excluded. There has been something said—and I want to correct the statement—about the subcommittee having hearings and preparing this bill. The subcommittee consisted of four Democrats and three Republicans. The services of the three Republicans were not needed, so that statement ought to be "the Democratic members of the subcommittee" and not the subcommittee. We do not vouch for this bill one particle. Anything in italics in that print has the unanimous condemnation of the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee.

Further than that, I want to criticize most severely the members of my committee, as much as I respect them, for the way in which they tried to bulldoze every witness that did not agree with them. No wonder we have a basketful of letters from people refusing to come to the hearings. There are respectable, high-grade businessmen who oppose this bill, but they will not attend a hearing and stand for this type of ridicule and the kind of inquiries that were poked at the various witnesses by the star interrogator of the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. Chairman, my remarks today have been confined entirely to the method of preparation of this bill. At a later time during the debate I shall discuss the demerits of the bill itself, including its application and effect.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, when the President's message first came out requesting additional revenue, those of us who represent dairy districts met and consulted in order to see if there might not be some method by which we could protect the dairy interests of this country.

The executive committee of the dairy group, of which I happen to be chairman, after several discussions, passed a unanimous resolution that an effort should be made to place excise taxes on oleomargarine and on foreign fats and oils in this measure in order to protect the dairy farmers of the United States.

In accordance with this resolution I presented a request in writing to Mr. DOUGHTON, as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. I shall not read this communication, but I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to place it in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

MARCH 30, 1936.

Hon. ROBERT DOUGHTON,
Chairman, Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: At a meeting of the executive committee of the dairy group, comprising members of every political party represented in the House, it was voted that I should make certain requests in writing of your honorable committee.

On behalf of these Congressmen who have cooperated with the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation, and the National Dairy Union, I desire to present certain requests before the Ways and Means Committee for their consideration in connection with a proposed tax bill.

The dairy farmers of this country feel that they are entitled to some consideration in this session of Congress, and the tax herein proposed would be of material benefit to dairy farmers and at the same time it would add to the revenues of the United States Government.

Dairy farmers are paying a substantial portion of the State and Federal tax burdens of this country. Oleomargarine manufacturers are paying no such tax and the tax which we propose would at least have the effect of equalizing in some degree the tax burden of this country as between dairy farmers and oleomargarine manufacturers.

(1) We desire to have incorporated into the tax bill a section which will levy a tax of 5 cents per pound on all oleomargarine manufactured in the United States wholly from domestic fats and oils and a tax of 7½ cents per pound on all oleomargarine manufactured in the United States in which any foreign ingredients are used. These taxes are to be in addition to all existing taxes on oleomargarine.

(2) We further request the imposition of a 4½-cent import tax (a) on perilla oil, tung oil, hempseed oil, and olive oil (sulphured and inedible). We request these taxes because these oils are in competition with American fats and oils, and the 4½-cent rate will make these oils pay the same import tax that is now levied on linseed oil. There should also be an equivalent rate of duty placed on these seeds and nuts from which these oils are extracted.

(3) In the Revenue Act of 1934 an excise tax of 3 cents per pound was placed upon the first domestic processing of coconut oil, palm oil, palm-kernel oil, sunflower oil, and sesame oil, with an additional 2 cents per pound on all coconut oil which does not come from the Philippines. We request that the tax on these fats and oils be increased to 5 cents per pound, and that there be added to this list kapok oil, babassu oil, and cohune oil. These last three oils are competitive with the oils already covered by taxes and they should be covered the same way as the oils in the 1934 act. All of these oils are directly competitive with domestic oils and fats, and despite the 3-cent tax imposed by the Revenue Act of 1934 imports of these oils continue to pour into this country at an alarming rate, thereby depriving the American farmer of a substantial market for his fats and oils.

The reciprocal-trade agreement with the Netherlands has bound the processing tax on palm oil at 3 cents per pound for the life of the agreement, and the reciprocal-trade agreement with Brazil not only binds babassu oil and nuts on the free list but also agrees that Congress will not impose any internal tax on this oil. In addition, the State Department has made substantial reductions in the tariff structure on dairy products, particularly on various types of cheese produced in this country. The dairy farmers of this country and representatives from dairy States are entirely out of sympathy with the activities of the State Department in carrying out the reciprocal-trade-agreement law.

In the light of the above actions on the part of the State Department we further request, on behalf of the dairy farmers of this country, that there be included in the proposed tax bill a section repealing immediately the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act of 1934.

We would appreciate your committee designating a time during the hearings on the tax bill when we may appear and give testimony on the various items covered in this letter, so that your committee may be fully advised on the present needs of American dairy farmers and of the economic principles behind the requests for legislation contained in this letter.

Very truly yours,

HARRY SAUTHOFF,
As Chairman of the Executive Committee.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Briefly stated, this communication requests that an additional tax of 5 cents a pound be placed on oleomargarine manufactured from domestic fats and oils and a 7½-cent additional tax be placed on all oleomargarine manufactured from foreign fats and oils.

The committee ruled that any discussion on such a proposal was not germane to this particular measure, because it dealt with excise taxes, and no such provision was contained in the bill.

It is our hope now, and we are studying the matter carefully, to see if there is some method we can devise by which this bill may be amended so as to include such protection for our dairy farmers.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state what the vote in the committee was and what motion was made as a substitute?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Well, I do not want to be involved in a dispute between the Democratic and Republican Parties, not being a member of either of those parties, but the motion was made by Mr. TREADWAY that we be given an opportunity to be heard on this subject. The motion was voted down, the Democratic members voting against the motion and the Republican members voting for it.

Now, what is the situation in regard to foreign fats and oils at the present time? There are various foreign fats and oils that are making heavy inroads on the dairy industry, particularly in the manufacture of butter. There are other oils also which are invading other fields of agriculture. Perilla oil, tung oil, hempseed oil, and olive oil—sulphured and inedible—are quick-drying oils, most of which are generally used in the paint trade, but they compete in the American market with linseed oil, which is produced from American-grown flaxseed.

There is a tariff of 4½ cents on linseed oil, and in order to protect the domestic flax farmer against the rising flood of these paint oils, as well as giving the American fisherman protection against such oils, because fish oils are likewise used in the paint trade, an excise tax of 4½ cents should be put on perilla, tung, hempseed, and olive oil. There should also be an equivalent rate of duty placed on the seeds and nuts from which these oils are extracted.

During the year 1935 the following amounts of these oils were imported into the United States:

Perilla oil, 72,328,000 pounds in 1935, as against 25,164,000 in 1934, an increase of nearly 200 percent.

Tung oil, 120,059,000 pounds in 1935, as against 110,000,000 pounds in 1934.

Hempseed, from which hempseed oil is extracted, 12,443,131 pounds, a slight decrease from 1934 with 12,981,949 pounds.

Olive oil—inedible—19,743,452 pounds in 1935, as against 9,670,342 pounds in 1934.

Olive oil—sulphured—33,797,218 pounds, a slight decrease from 36,165,879 pounds imported in 1934.

Insofar as the tax on the oils used in oleomargarine and in soap making is concerned, we now have an excise tax of 3 cents a pound on coconut, palm, palm-kernel, sunflower, and sesame oil, with an additional 2 cents per pound on all coconut oil which does not come from the Philippines. There is also a 3-cent tariff on cottonseed oil.

This tax has increased prices received by American producers of fats and oils by at least $100,000,000. The excise tax, however, has not acted as an embargo, as indicated by the following imports of these oils in 1935, which has particularly affected the dairy farmer adversely:

Cottonseed oil: 166,687,000 pounds were imported in 1935, as against an almost negligible quantity in 1934.

Three hundred and fifty-three million three hundred and ninety-six thousand pounds of coconut oil, which was imported as oil and does not include copra, were imported in 1935, as against 314,802,000 pounds in 1934.

Copra imported in 1935 amounted to 454,134,000 pounds, which yielded 286,104,000 pounds of coconut oil.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Pardon me; I want to finish this statement and I have only a few minutes.

Two hundred and ninety-six million five hundred and two thousand pounds of palm oil were imported into the United States in 1935, as against 155,531,000 pounds imported in 1934.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BACHARACH. I yield to the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Kapok oil, which competes with these other oils, and upon which the 3-cent tax is not imposed, accounted for imports in the form of seed of 12,655,000 pounds in 1935; babassu oil, which has just recently come into use in the oleomargarine field as a substitute for coconut oil and is imported duty free from Brazil, cannot be accurately given because it comes in the form of seed and is not separately classified by the Department of Commerce. The oleomargarine manufacturers began to use it, however, in October 1935, and in the 3 months of October, November, and December they used 1,838,000 pounds of this oil.

We feel that the tax on the paint oils, as has heretofore been stated, should all be fixed at 4½ cents per pound, in order to be compensatory with the present rate on linseed oil.

We feel that the tax on other oils used in oleomargarine and soap making should be placed at 5 cents per pound.

Since the agreement with the Netherlands has bound the processing tax on palm oil at 3 cents per pound, the tax should be placed at 5 cents and should be made effective as soon as the agreement with the Netherlands is terminated, because if a tax of 5 cents were placed on the other oils and palm oil was bound at 3 cents, it would simply mean a shift from the consumption of all other oils over to palm oil. The tax on babassu oil should be placed at 5 cents per pound, to take effect as soon as the reciprocal agreement with Brazil is terminated. Babassu oil comes from the nut of a tree. [Applause.]

It is estimated that there are at least 1,500,000,000 trees of nut-bearing age now available, and no doubt far greater numbers of these trees farther inland, to which roads have not yet been built. This nut yields 63 percent oil and is admitted duty-free.

Babassu oil is quoted at 6⅞ cents per pound at New York, and is three-eighths of a cent less, when processed, than coconut oil. Cohune oil is now coming in from Central America. It is made from the palm nut and is very cheap and comes into this country duty-free.

TOTAL OILS

The total amount of oil, both animal and vegetable, in this country in 1935, derived from all sources, was 10,274,000,000 pounds; the total consumption during the same year was 8,073,000,000 pounds, which leaves a surplus of over 2,000,000,000 pounds as a threat to menace the price structure of American butter. This oil carry-over can break the butter market any time that it is released in any quantity, and serves the oleomargarine interests in good stead.

DAIRY TAXES

A survey of New York State, which has just been completed, discloses that the dairy farmer of that State pays a tax of 6½ cents per pound on every pound of butterfat that he produces, which means a tax of 5.2 cents per pound on every pound of butter that the New York dairy farmer produces. No doubt the dairy farmer in my State of Wisconsin pays a similar tax. And yet, in spite of this contribution to the support and welfare of our Nation, our dairy farmers must face the competition of oleomargarine and other butter substitutes made from cheap oils brought in from foreign countries with only a slight tariff or perhaps none at all. How can this treatment of our dairy farmer be justified?

WISCONSIN'S LOSS

I have heard it said on the floor of this House that we are not suffering, but I want to point out to you what has already happened in Wisconsin. When the Canadian reciprocal-trade agreement went into effect the price of Wisconsin cheese dropped 2 cents per pound. That was on January 1, 1936, the very day that this treaty went into effect. Since that day it has dropped another cent per pound, making a total loss to the Wisconsin dairy farmer of 3 cents per pound since the first day of this year. In money it means a loss of $9,000,000, in round figures. Only this morning I read an editorial in the Wisconsin State Journal, a daily newspaper published in my home city of Madison, which paper has been waging an earnest and consistent fight for our dairy farmers, pointing out the drop in butter. I quote:

BUTTER NOW SLUMPS

Slumping in the price of butter is a cause of alarm to the dairy farmers of Wisconsin.

A fall of 4 cents in the price of butter since last week means a large loss to the milk producers of this State. Cheese prices are already low, and a dropping in the butter prices also cannot but have an eventual effect on the fluid-milk market.

Milk is Wisconsin's largest industry, and it behooves Wisconsin officials, not only Federal but State, to do all in their power to reestablish better prices for the farmers, whose milk is being sold in the butter and cheese market.

OUR PROPOSAL

It is the proposal of the dairy group in the House, whom I have the honor to represent, to protect the dairy farmer with additional tariffs on these cheap oils. We propose to raise the tax on oleomargarine 5 cents per pound, and we also propose to raise the tariff on foreign fats and oils 7½ cents per pound, which will make a total of 10½ cents per pound. We firmly believe that the home markets should be preserved for our farmers.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, we have been hearing some criticisms from the minority side of the House—that when this tax bill becomes a law business will be suspended throughout the country.

As a matter of truth the opposite is the fact. I have just returned from a highly developed industrial district, and I found that every branch of business is forging ahead in a way that it has not done for many years. They are experiencing the difficulty in obtaining the skilled workmen that they will need in the industry.

Taxes, to be sure, are not popular. They never have been from the beginning of time.

What information I have of this tax bill, I think we are to be complimented in having a group of men that can bring in such a measure. I am certain in the future the members of the committee, including those opposed to it now, will be happy that they had a part in the Revenue Act of 1936.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein an address I made in my home town of Auburn, Ind., on the 20th of this month.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address referred to is as follows:

Again I come before the people of the Fourth Congressional District to render an account of my stewardship as your Representative in the National Congress. The framers of our Constitution were wise in that the Representatives of the people in that lawmaking body should have to give an accounting of their acts every 2 years. In so doing, it will never be necessary in this land of the Stars and Stripes to resort to a change of government by force, as on any of the even years by the ballot box in a peaceable and intelligent manner the whole form can be changed. It is this question that I want to talk to you about.

We but have to look back to March 1933 when industry was paralyzed, multitudes were out of employment, and panic stricken, not knowing where their next meal was coming from, nor whether the morrow would bring the sheriff with eviction papers that would throw them out of their homes, and the breadwinner, together with his wife and children, would have to seek shelter and food from some charitable organization. Then in this awful crisis a leader arose, who by the help of a friendly Congress would lead the people of the United States from that panic-stricken wilderness of hunger, unemployment, and despair, back to the land promised by and purchased with the blood of our forefathers, to a state of certainty, employment, and happiness.

It was on this platform, with that great leader Franklin D. Roosevelt, that I was elected to the Congress of the United States in November 1932.

When I assumed the new duties as your Representative in Congress, I took seriously this pledge of cooperating in every detail to fulfill that promise and obligation. When the strong opposition press and cunning agents of special interest beckoned astray and took me to the mountaintops showing the rich valleys below if I would forsake the humanitarian principles of our President and serve them, I stood fast to my obligations and promise to my people to do everything within my power to bring back peace of mind and prosperity to our country. If you defeat me because of this, I shall leave to my children the heritage and name that I kept the faith.

It is true that the last 4 years have been most strenuous upon our President and Members of Congress; and having been carried into the torture chambers of the situation as it existed, we the Members of this Congress have had very little time to play politics, if we were to carry through the program that was necessary to reestablish confidence and happiness in America.

This was no easy job, as there were hundreds of plans submitted and it took hours and hours of deliberation to take from the plans that which was best and discard that which was not, to arrive at a plan for the general welfare of all the people of this country. After having arrived at a solution of this situation the battle had just begun as those who had gained most and profited the greatest through the sufferings and misery of the people during this depression, having grown wealthy on selling America short, were actively opposed to any measure of recovery, and immediately vast sums of money were used by that crowd to scatter propaganda to resist this program. You have but to read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to find that each and every recovery measure placed on the statute books of America was only placed there after a hard fight and after many long hours of debate and against the paid lobbyists of the depression profiteers actively against our forces. As time passes I shall have the peace and satisfaction of mind that I did not yield to the profiteers of misery, but gave the best I had in me, not only my vote but my heartiest support to those measures which would bring us back to that peace and state of mind that are so necessary to make us useful American citizens, and that the spirit of 1776 would again reign.

Even though you should see fit to transplant me with a record of sustaining those things and sacrifice me with a record of certainly by past performance for one untried and whose record in legislative matters is unknown, I today have the satisfaction of seeing those measures bear fruit. As I travel between Washington and home, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I feel I had a part in helping clean the cobwebs and bat nests from the smokestacks of industry, that again those furnaces and industrial plants which were laying in rust and idleness, are today belching forth smoke, that the rust of the machinery has been cleared away, and that willing hands are again employed and earning a living rather than suffering the embarrassment of daily begging their bread and shelter from some relief agency.

The task is not yet done. There is still a large army out of employment, and the work must be carried on. Those experiments which have been bad must be discarded, and other things done so that eventually we will be back to where depression and unemployment will be history.

You trusted me to begin this job, and I have conscientiously and faithfully given and devoted my entire time to the recovery measures which our President thought best to bring about recovery. I want to return to Congress and have a part in finishing the job, and inasmuch as I have kept the faith, and know the struggles of the American people and its problems from the beginning down to the present time, I do not believe you will forsake me. I do not believe, after the 4 years of education that I have received in congressional matters, and after 4 years of studying these problems, that the Fourth District will want to be represented by one unfamiliar with them, and one who, however earnest his intent may be at the present time, after a study of the situation might not be in accord with the programs inaugurated, and one who may fall a prey to the smooth-tongued lobbyists and the fiendish, pernicious propaganda circulated against the recovery measures.

I was able to withstand all of these temptations and was able to ignore the signposts at every cross road intended to lead us from the straight road. I will continue on that road, and the shining face and honest heart of Franklin D. Roosevelt shall be my guide, shall follow him in his recovery measures through to a complete success.

If you do not want the President sustained, but want to give him a Congress that will not follow his leadership, then you had better defeat me; but if you want one who has continually followed and will not upset the order of recovery, I ask that you return me to the Congress of the United States.

The early years of my life were given to build myself up in the business world and to the rearing of a family of five children, of whom I am very proud, with the hope always in mind that as I grew older I could devote the remaining years of my life to the services of the people and to my country.

Possibly I have made many mistakes with reference to the petty politics of the office, but I do not understand that I was elected for such purpose, and felt it would not be necessary to devote time to the petty politics of this office. Knowing the intelligence of the people of the Fourth District as I do, thought you wanted efficiency in office, a thorough study of Government, and a right to vote on economic measures, and felt that if I devoted my time to this my people would be satisfied. I had rather be defeated attempting to do this than be returned to office by forsaking my obligations.

When Mr. Roosevelt was a candidate and nominated, and was later elected, it could not have been foreseen that the administration would be compelled to take the burden which was unloaded on it after he assumed office.

Local governments, including States, counties, cities, and regularly organized charitable institutions, had exhausted their resources. The load was heavier than ever before. Unusual means had to be taken to relieve this distressed situation. Many good and outstanding measures have been passed leading to this end.

When Franklin D. Roosevelt assumed office, nearly a million homes were on the verge of foreclosure. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation was organized and this distressed situation greatly relieved. This touched the modest home owner and saved the shelter for himself and family. Building trades and heavy industries, producing what are known as durable goods, were at a low ebb.

The Federal Housing Administration set up at the request of the President has greatly relieved that situation.

The commercial credit of America had nearly dried up when he took the oath of office. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation functions were enlarged to include almost all corporate enterprises, public and private, and since its organization up to and including December 31, 1935, this agency has distributed more than $10,000,000,000 for relief of American industry. One billion two hundred million were loans on farm products. There has been no more valuable and inspiring activity on the part of this administration than the work of these organizations.

From the start of this administration the outstanding attempt has been to improve general business conditions. Notwithstanding opposition statements that we are enemies of business, the opposite has been the rule and fact. As evidence witness the extension of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation authority, the Banking Acts of 1933 and 1935, the Home Owners' Loan Act, federal housing, and kindred measures. I have had a part in them, cooperated with the committee and with the Congress.

It is on my record as a Congressman and my promise of continued support of the policies of President Roosevelt and his administration that I ask for renomination to carry the banner for Democracy in this district in the fall election of 1936.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two tables that I have prepared myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, it is alleged that the bill before us will produce in taxes $630,000,000. No one is cognizant more than I of the necessity that this Government shall balance its Budget, but when we have had an opportunity to cut down on our expenses, and have failed to do so, I can see absolutely no jurisdiction and no excuse for a tax bill? I shall not myself be in the position of imposing additional taxes on the people when the Congress of the United States has not done its duty in cutting down expenditures. If I had the time, I should like to go into the merits of the taxes that are proposed to be carried in the bill, but I am going to leave that to others who have had more opportunity to study the bill itself. I shall develop my case along the line of the proposition that I first declared.

What is the situation with reference to appropriations that we have made in this Congress? When we came here, after about a week, the President of the United States set before us his Budget estimate calling for appropriations, including $1,000,000,000 for relief, which he said was a proximate figure, and which he said he would send up later, amounting to $6,649,000,000. It was the President's estimate that the expenditures for the next fiscal year would run approximately $7,752,000,000, including a little over $2,000,000,000 already appropriated and in his hands and available for expenditures for relief. What is the situation that we have before us at the moment? I have here a table for appropriations for the Seventy-fourth Congress, second session, and it is this. I shall not read the thousands and hundreds of dollars, because I shall put them in the table:

Independent offices appropriation bill, including reappropriations, $2,334,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. TABER. I shall yield when I have finished the table.

Supplemental deficiency, $368,000,000.

Legislative appropriation bill, $23,000,000; Agriculture, as it passed the House, $165,000,000; District of Columbia, as it passed the House, $42,000,000; Interior, as it passed the House, $81,000,000; State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor, as it passed the House, $115,000,000; Treasury-Post Office Departments, as it passed the House, $989,000,000; War, as it passed the House, $545,000,000; Navy, according to the Budget estimate—the bill has not yet been reported by the Committee on Appropriations—$549,000,000; deficiency, according to estimates that have been submitted by the Budget—that is, by the President through the Budget—$2,500,000,000; a total of $8,315,000,000. I figure that the least we can expect is we will probably have to surrender about one-half of the Senate's proposed increases. One-half will be about as follows: Agriculture, $16,000,000; Interior, $31,000,000; War, $33,000,000; with several items which I have not been able to go into in the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor, prospective with reference to these and a number of others, making a total of $8,395,000,000. I imagine that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] was going to ask me a question with reference to the independent offices appropriation bill, and I imagine that his question was going to be whether there was not included within that something over $1,300,000,000 for the veterans' bonus—I have forgotten the exact amount.

Mr. BIERMANN. One billion seven hundred and thirty million dollars.

Mr. TABER. That was not the figure in the bill. That might have been the estimate. I do not think the figure was as large as that. Then there was $440,000,000 for soil conservation. It is true those items were not in the bill as it came out of the House, but they were required as a result of votes and Budget estimates sent here by the President. That means that with the appropriations that are in sight and probably will be a burden on the taxpayers, $8,395,000,000 as against the Budget estimates of $6,649,000,000, according to the original Budget. Every one of these items that are here practically has a Budget estimate at the present time. That means $1,750,000,000 more than the President's original idea when the Congress convened. You can see the way we have progressed, and you can see what a mere bagatelle $630,000,000 estimated to be raised by the present tax bill is toward meeting $1,750,000,000. It does not get anywhere, it does not get to first base.

The table in detail to which I have referred is as follows:

Appropriations Seventy-fourth Congress, second session

Independent offices	$2,389,751,905.00
Independent offices—reappropriations	45,000,000.00
Supplemental deficiency	368,234,514.10
Legislative	23,314,428.00
Agriculture	165,873,147.00
District of Columbia	42,573,283.00
Interior	81,221,330.05
State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor	115,012,400.00
Treasury-Post Office	989,673,829.00
War	545,226,318.00
Navy (Budget estimates, as bill is not yet reported)	549,591,299.00
Deficiency (Budget estimates, as bill is not yet reported	2,500,000,000.00
Subtotal	8,315,472,453.15
Plus one-half the Senate increases:
Agriculture	16,000,000.00
Interior	31,000,000.00
War	33,000,000.00
Total	8,395,472,453.15

Many of the items in the above unquestionably could have been saved if this Congress had been as alert as it should have been. Take the fake soil-conservation bill, designed to force people in other parts of the country into the dairying business and put out of business those dairying farmers in the North and East who have been trying to earn a living through all this depression without any Federal aid. That amounts to $440,000,000. We could have saved that, and nobody would have been hurt, but the whole country would have been benefited. I believe that the independent offices appropriation bill, with the Federal Trade Commission, the Securities Exchange Commission, and the Labor Board, could have been cut down, together with a whole lot of other activities which are absolutely beyond all reason and which are more destructive than constructive, because their overhead is so tremendous that it destroys the very purpose for which they were created. They are spending, many of them, double and treble what similar activities ever spent before. Three million dollars would be a very conservative saving out of that group. That would be $443,735,000 on that bill.

In the Interior Department bill there is the Guffey Coal Commission, $240,000, an unjustified increase for the Department's operation during the fiscal year 1937, an increase over the fiscal year of 1936 of $4,179,000, absolutely ridiculous and indefensible.

There are Senate increases which you are going to be called upon to vote for or against, amounting to $62,000,000 for reclamation projects, to increase the productivity of the soil, at the same time when our Department of Agriculture is paying farmers for keeping land out of production. Have you ever heard of such a ridiculous and such a silly operation?

In the Department of Agriculture bill we could save at least $10,000,000 by cutting down on some of these tremendous increases for many of these projects which do not have any merit at all.

In the War Department bill we could save $90,000,000 by reducing the river and harbor item from $150,000,000 as it is in the bill as it passed the Senate, down to $60,000,000, which was the normal amount for that bill to carry in the days when I served on that War Department appropriation bill a few years ago. That is plenty of money for the development of legitimate harbor activities. It is not money to go ahead with the development of rivers which cannot be made navigable or the development of other things that the country does not need, but it is plenty to keep the rivers and harbors in decent shape.

On the War Department bill I do not believe we have any business considering an increase in the Army beyond the figure at which it passed the House. We do not even have respectable housing to put those men in. It is absolutely ridiculous, to my mind, to increase the Army and not have any place to put them and have to put them in tents all over the country. Then, down at the War Department they have a departmental overhead that I believe can be cut $10,000,000 without injuring a single efficient operation of the Government. That makes $125,000,000 that can be saved in that bill. That alone is 25 percent of this tax bill.

In the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments bill we could get rid of a lot of activities. Among other things, we could get rid of the International Boundary Commission performance, costing $2,800,000. We could get rid of other unnecessary departmental expense and could easily save $4,900,000.

The Treasury Department appropriation bill has been built up and loaded up until it is tremendously top-heavy. At the present time there are upward of 400 lawyers down in the Treasury Department, many of whom never tried a case—let me go a little further—most of whom never tried a case. They are performing other functions and receiving a lawyer's pay. We could save $15,000,000 without turning a hair in that Department.

In the Navy Department, if we could reduce the top-heavy departmental expense and the navy-yard waste, we could save at least $15,000,000. Then we have these W. P. A. estimates and C. C. C. estimates. I believe we could save, and be very conservative in our saving, $550,000,000 on those things.

Now, if the Congress wants this country to recover it is not going to go on with this sort of thing and put a tremendous tax on the people without any possibility of recovery coming. Recovery cannot come that way. If an honest attempt were being made to cut down expenditures, to stop this foolish demoralizing of our people through such operations as the W. P. A. teaching men, instead of their usual customary habits of work, supporting themselves on their shovels, a lot of foolish and childish things, we would be pointing in some way toward recovery. Nothing in the world has been so demoralizing as the way in which these funds that we have turned over to the President without let or hindrance as to his allotment have been expended. Nothing in the world has been so demoralizing to our people, has done so much to prevent recovery, to prevent there being available sufficient skilled personnel to man the factories when they get started as that sort of thing. If people are going to work in factories, if they are going to learn to be skilled, if they are going to learn to be efficient—and that is the way folks always have succeeded in the past in America—they must be taught habits of thrift and of industry and not the demoralizing, destructive propositions such as this so-called made work.

It would be an easy job to cut off from these tremendous appropriations $1,230,000,000.

Under my leave to extend my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I am going to insert that table in the RECORD.

(The table referred to is as follows:)

	APRIL 20, 1936.
Independent offices:
Fake soil conservation	$440,000,000
Labor Board	735,000
Unnecessary departmental expenses	3,000,000
	443,735,000
Interior bill:
Guffey coal	240,000
Unjustified increases	4,179,000
Senate increases	62,000,000
	66,419,000
Agriculture bill:
Forest	1,000,000
Agricultural extension work	4,000,000
Save one-half increase on account useless departmental increase	5,000,000
	10,000,000
War bill:
Rivers and harbors, reduce to normal (was $60,000,000)	90,000,000
Could reduce $25,000,000 on military	25,000,000
Useless departmental expense	10,000,000
	125,000,000
State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor:
Coast and Geodetic Survey	100,000
International Boundary Commission	2,800,000
Reduce unnecessary departmental expense	2,000,000
	4,900,000
Treasury: Reduce unnecessary top-heavy overhead	15,000,000
Navy: Reduce top-heavy departmental expenses and navy-yard waste	15,000,000
Deficiency bills:
C. C. C. camps	50,000,000
W. P. A. estimates	500,000,000
	550,000,000
Total	1,230,054,000

Mr. TABER. It is absolutely ridiculous, when we have gone entirely out of control in passing appropriations, to come here with a tax bill providing for $630,000,000. I do not see how we can keep faith with the country, with the taxpayers, or with the workingmen who want to be restored to the jobs they had before, where an ordinary laborer was getting from $20 to $25 a week with steady work, instead of continuing on the dole or at made work at from $10 or $11 to $13 a week, as at present, unless we stop this extravagant spending. The workingman is not the man that the fellow back of this tax bill says he is shooting at, but the workingman is the man who is going to be hit. That is where the bullet is aimed. I, for one, do not propose to join in what I believe to be the passage of an unsound tax bill, which is bad for the whole country, and at the same time refuse to honestly cut down the ridiculous expenditures of the Federal Government. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, we are, of course, indebted to the gentleman from New York who has just taken his seat for his illumination of the pending tax bill, which he barely mentioned. We are also indebted to the gentleman from Massachusetts for his remarks. He made a statement to which I desire to make brief reply, not in my own language but in the language of one of the high priests in the Sanhedrin of the elect of this country, the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

The gentleman from New York says we will never get out of this depression and that there is no way to make any advance or take any steps toward recovery under the present regime and under the present program of this administration.

This same United States Chamber of Commerce was not only the chief critic of the provisions of this bill before the committee but through its wide membership and fine publicity arrangements has been the chief antagonist of the whole program of the New Deal. Now, what does this same Mr. Sibley, the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, say within the last 24 hours with reference to our progress and recovery? Here is what he says in an interview, or statement, given out for this morning's paper—and particularly I want the attention of the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Massachusetts. This is not my language, this is not the language of the advocate of the New Deal who is standing here in a humble capacity undertaking to represent its interests; this is a deliberate observation and statement of the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce. Without objection, I will read what he says.

Mr. Sibley said he observed very definite signs of active business recovery on a series of trips through the country in behalf of the chamber. I am just wondering what character of report this same Mr. Sibley could have made if he had made an extensive tour of the country along about the 1st of January 1933 with reference to the prosperity of this country when Mr. Hoover's administration was in charge of the affairs of the Government. He said:

A year ago the iron-ore mines of Michigan and Minnesota were struggling along on a part-time basis. Now they are working day and night crews.

I am sure this is very sad news to the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from New York—working extra shifts, working at nighttime! So great is this wave of prosperity that is sweeping over the country taking us out of the morass of the depression into which we were led by 12 years of Republican rule in this country. Remember, I am quoting Mr. Sibley, the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. In a moment I may yield to my very distinguished friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. Chairman, these are Mr. Sibley's words I am quoting. He said:

That sort of thing is happening all over the country—

This double-shift business he just referred to, reemployment of laboring men.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] said that the laboring man was the man we were shooting at in this tax bill. I am wondering if those laboring men who were out of employment under the Hoover administration, men we had to take care of under our relief system, are now complaining that under the progress of the recovery of this administration they have back not only their day jobs but also their night jobs in Minnesota, Michigan, and all over the country?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. "Particularly encouraging," says Mr. Sibley, the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce—

Is the fact that there has been a very definite comeback in the industries which were operating on the lowest basis, such as steel.

Mr. Chairman, all economists of the United States tell us there is no finer barometer of business activity and stability in this country than the production of steel and steel ingots, one of the very basic and paramount industries of the country.

America's machine-tool plants are operating at capacity today.

Not half time, not part time, but full capacity under the present Democratic administration, although we are levying a little additional tax upon those people most able to pay it to help carry on the burdens of relief and the other legitimate agencies of recovery.

Particularly is it encouraging, he says, about the steel industry in American machine plants. He stated further:

Recent developments in the field of chemistry have resulted in vast orders—

Not trifling orders, not mere bagatelles, Mr. Chairman, but vast orders. This, I am sure, is very pleasing to the business friends of the gentleman from Massachusetts—not little orders but vast orders. For what?—

Soy beans and other farm products by industry for extraction of their oils and fibers.

Not only are we helping steel, mining, and machine tools, but, says Mr. Sibley, the president of this great United States Chamber of Commerce, these benefits are extending out into the field of agriculture, and the farmers of this country are also enjoying the beneficent profits of this restored prosperity which has been brought to them under the wise leadership of a great President and with the cooperation of a fairly decent Congress. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania with one proviso.

Mr. RICH. Do not make any proviso.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I may get a little more time to answer the gentleman. But I want to lay a predicate before I yield to the gentleman. He has impaled me here for several weeks by the great inquiry as to where are we going to get the money? I thought I might have in a measure answered that question by saying to him that if he and his associates would restore to the Treasury of the United States six and one-quarter billion dollars that Mr. Hoover left as a deficit when the present administration took charge of the Government, our burden would not now be so great. The gentleman has not seen fit to answer that statement.

Mr. RICH. I will answer that right now, and I would be glad to answer it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a question.

Mr. RICH. I would be glad to answer the gentleman's question, but I will not do it now. He would not give me the time. I will do so later.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think the gentleman will ever be able to answer it.

Mr. RICH. I want to ask a real pertinent question of the leader of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman think he can ask a pertinent question?

Mr. RICH. If I interpreted the remarks of the gentleman from New York correctly, he was more desirous of trying to cut down Government expense to the extent of $1,200,000,000, believing this would be of greater interest to the people of the country than to place a tax bill involving six or eight hundred million dollars upon the people of the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thank the gentleman for his question.

Mr. RICH. Does the majority leader think that we ought to try to keep the expenses of government down to a minimum?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that my nights have been sleepless and I have suffered somewhat from what might be called a species of fiscal insomnia, trying to go along with the mind of the gentleman from Pennsylvania with reference to the economical administration of the affairs of the Government. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I think, has at least tried to be serious in his question, and I will undertake to answer it.

Mr. RICH. I tried to ask a sensible, serious question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And, if the gentleman will be seated, I will try to answer him.

In the first place, we ought to be thoroughly candid about the expenses of government under recent conditions. I am not going to remind the gentlemen on that side of the aisle of the burden that we had to assume when we came into power in this country. Everybody knows about that. No man who had a heart in him or the vestige of humanity in his soul would have been content to allow the great Federal Government to fail in its attempt to afford some adequate measure of relief for the destitute, the suffering, the unhappy, and the hopeless people of America when the local authorities were unable to cope with the situation. This administration, mind you, was not responsible in any way for these conditions; so, in order to meet what our party and our administration thought was a paramount and impelling duty arising from a purely humanitarian standpoint, we did provide ways and means to take care of the people. I am not one of those, I may say to my friend, who will stand on this floor and say no mistakes have been made in our relief program.

Mr. RICH. I congratulate the gentleman on that statement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think we ought to discuss these matters fairly and lay the cards on the table. I do not make the claim that the President of the United States is infallible in his judgment any more so than are the Members of the Congress of the United States; but we have done the very best we could under the terrifying circumstances to meet the problems bravely and possibly extravagantly.

Mr. Chairman, our hope is that when this great wave of prosperity reaches its maximum, now indicated and prophesied by the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, that the national income will be greatly increased from revenues and other business derivatives and, therefore, the money in the United States Treasury will be greatly augmented. We further hope that perhaps some of these temporary and emergency measures have served their usefulness, and I shall advocate that as soon as possible they shall be removed from the public service; but it has been impossible, I may say to the gentleman, to escape our responsibility as the representatives of our people.

Mr. Chairman, from the standpoint of our national debt, this country is not near the danger line, although I do not advocate any further governmental indebtedness nor any more than we can get along with as a minimum. When the tax rate in this country is compared to that of England, which was published a few days ago, it will be seen that the people of America are escaping with practically no taxation as compared to the situation existing in some of the governments in Europe. Although I am not the spokesman of this administration, the policy with reference to this matter shows that the time is approaching when we will be out from under the direful and distressing situation caused by the depression, at which time we may conservatively and prudently restore the Government to a more conservative and a more economical basis. I pray to God that the time may soon come, but until it does come, as one unit in the administration now in power, I am willing to go ahead and appropriate such money and to lay such taxes, to be legitimately levied, as will meet the necessities of this hour. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 hour to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL].

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I had assumed that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] would make some specific criticism of this bill that might require an answer as to the merits of the proposed legislation. You could forget all he said in his remarks and you would be in the same status as to information about the bill that you were before he spoke. He did make some remarks about the procedure, about the employment of theorists in the study and framing of the bill, but even in those statements he was largely wrong.

It has been the practice of the Ways and Means Committee as far back as I know anything of its procedure, first to get the information through study and through hearings, and then write the bill. I recall in 1932, or probably we began in December 1931, with hearings on a tax bill before the Ways and Means Committee, which was then under the control of the party now in control, so far as the House was concerned, but so far as the national administration or the executive branch was concerned, it was under the control of the party of the gentleman from Massachusetts. Mr. Ogden Mills, the then Secretary of the Treasury, came as the representative of the executive department and advised the Ways and Means Committee of the need of additional revenues. He did not bring any bill. He brought suggestions as to where we could get the money. The Ways and Means Committee, regardless of partisanship, undertook to meet the revenue requirements as outlined by the then Secretary of the Treasury. Not only did the Secretary of the Treasury not bring a bill already prepared for the Ways and Means Committee but he came back repeatedly revising his estimates and asking for more money and asking the Committee on Ways and Means to find sources of additional revenue.

In every revenue bill since that time the same procedure has been followed. I am advised that the same procedure was followed prior to that time. I recall very distinctly that in 1929 and 1930, when a tariff bill was written, hearings were had before the bill was written, and until after the hearings were completed, the Republican members of the committee, who were then in control, excluded the Democrats and sat behind closed doors and wrote that bill.

When the bill was finally completed the entire committee was called into session, the bill consisting of a volume about as large as the hearings on the present bill. They laid this volume down on the table and said to the Democratic members of the committee, "Here is the bill." The ranking member of the committee moved that it be favorably reported by the committee, and it was not even read, and no opportunity given at all for examining it. It was passed in a few minutes—a tariff bill containing schedules running the entire gamut of the import duties of the country.

I am not criticizing them for this, but simply pointing out this is the practice of the Republican Members when they are in control and it is the practice of the Democratic Members when they are in control, especially when they have been forewarned that the minority Members are opposed to every part of the measure and every part of the proposed legislation.

So there is no significance in the statement that no bill was prepared before the hearings were held. Criticism of the method of preparing the bill was also made by the gentleman from Massachusetts. It is true that we rely upon the experts, including the drafting service; and we have, I think, as able men in this service as can be found, and we are glad to rely upon them. This is one good thing that we inherited, if I may use that term in connection with these noble men, from the regime which preceded us. They are experts.

They drafted the social security bill and all other highly technical bills that have been before Congress in the last two sessions.

I am somewhat surprised that the gentleman from Massachusetts should fall upon that particular item as a basis for his criticism. Of course, we rely on these men; we are glad to have them to rely upon. We determine the policy and they formulate the language.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts says that the proposal before us is the product of theory. He says that no practical man would ever have advanced the idea. The fact is this principle of taxation which we are embodying in this present bill is not a new principle. It did not originate with this administration. It did not originate with the Ways and Means Committee as at present constituted.

Back in 1861, or between 1861 and 1872, during the Civil War and immediately following the Civil War the Government was under the control of the party with which the gentleman from Massachusetts is affiliated. Then Congress provided that the gains and profits of corporations should be included in the annual gain, profit, or income of any person entitled to the same whether divided or otherwise.

I now read from pages 23 and 24 of the hearings.

Shortly before and while the Revenue Act of 1921 was under consideration a proposal identical in principle with that incorporated in the subcommittee's report received the widespread attention of representatives of organized business, Members of Congress, and the Treasury staff.

In a somewhat modified form it was incorporated in a bill passed by the Senate in 1924.

If you will reflect, the Senate at that time was in control of the party with which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is affiliated.

So eminent a taxation authority as the late Prof. T. S. Adams, of Yale University, former chairman of the Advisory Tax Board in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and for many years a Treasury advisor, went on record in 1918 and subsequently in favor of the taxation of undivided profits at the rates that would apply if such profits were distributed to the shareholders.

That in principle is the same as the proposal in this tax bill.

Dr. Adams is quoted as saying—

Fiscal necessity—and personally I believe logic as well—requires the taxation of all profits whether reinvested or not. A similar recommendation was made by Secretary of the Treasury Houston in his annual report for the year 1920.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF] presented here a plea for protection to the dairy farmers. It is true that we declined to incorporate in this bill and open the hearings to the excise taxes which he desired to propose. There is not a single excise tax in the bill. The President suggested that certain kinds of processing taxes might afford a source of additional revenue, but they were omitted from the bill after the committee had thoroughly canvassed the situation and found there was such great opposition to it that in the opinion of the committee the House would not acquiesce in that type of tax. So we left off the suggested processing tax, and we are confining the bill for revenue in the main to the corporation-income tax. It is true that by a vote of the committee to determine whether the suggestion of Mr. SAUTHOFF should be received by the committee, the members of the minority of the committee voted in favor of such suggestion and the Democrats voted against it, but it is evident what the purpose of the minority members was in voting for that suggestion. They wanted to get excise taxes into the bill so that it would make it in order to introduce as an amendment before the committee and possibly before the House a general sales tax as a substitute for the provisions contained in the present bill. It is no new thing that those having large incomes and who are in the high surtax brackets favor a general sales tax over an income tax. It is also a matter of general knowledge that even though it should not be a complete substitute, those interests favoring a general sales tax feel that if they can once get that tax into the tax structure of the country, it will result in reducing the taxes on incomes. That was the obvious purpose of the minority members in voting to put these excise taxes in the hearings. Our purpose in voting against the suggestion was to keep excise taxes out and not open the entire field to excises and to import duties in the guise of excises.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Was it not suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF] that while he favored certain excise taxes to which he referred, he was in opposition to other excise taxes upon farm commodities that had been suggested?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I do not recall personally what Mr. SAUTHOFF said about that, but he certainly was not there advocating these other excise taxes that the President suggested in his message.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And he stated specifically that he opposed the excise taxes that we sometimes commonly refer to as processing taxes upon agricultural commodities, just as other members of the committee opposed them, and because of which opposition they are not in the bill.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I am sure the gentleman's statement is correct. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] says that only three persons outside of the Treasury officials came before the committee to advocate this character of tax legislation. There is nothing new in that. Taxpayers do not come before the Committee on Ways and Means as a rule advocating an increase in taxes. In all of the tax legislation in which I have participated, the hearings develop into a kind of a protest meeting. Only those whose pocketbooks are affected appear showing, in their opinion, why such taxes should not be levied upon them, and, of course, we must rely upon the Government officials, who have the expert knowledge, to come before the committee and give us the necessary data as a basis for tax legislation. The gentleman from Massachusetts said that only three outside of those officials came advocating the tax bill, and he made particular reference to a Communist, a gentleman named Bedacht.

That man did not support the bill. He was in favor of a number of things that we had especially excluded, and was opposed to some things in the bill. Just to keep the record straight, I shall read a few excerpts from his testimony:

Mr. REED. Is this recommendation in your platform? Was it in your party platform of 1932?

Mr. BEDACHT. No. The recommendations are embodied in five proposals. If you wish to review them, I can give them now.

Mr. REED. In your party platform did you advocate this principle—in your party platform?

Mr. BEDACHT. No; we did not.

Mr. WOODRUFF. To tax corporation surpluses?

Mr. BEDACHT. No; we did not.

Then later on in his testimony Mr. VINSON asked him some questions as follows:

Mr. VINSON. Then did I understand you to say that you were against abolishing the present corporation taxes?

Mr. BEDACHT. Yes.

We are abolishing the present corporate taxes and substituting the proposals in this bill. He said he was opposed to that.

Mr. VINSON. Well, you are against that anyhow?

Mr. BEDACHT. Yes.

Mr. VINSON. Are you against abolishing the capital-stock tax?

Mr. BEDACHT. We are against——

Mr. VINSON. That is the present tax that is on the capital stock of corporations.

Mr. BEDACHT. Yes.

We abolish the capital-stock tax under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. VINSON. $1.40 a thousand?

Mr. BEDACHT. Yes.

Mr. VINSON. Are you against the repeal or abolishing of the excess-profit taxes?

Mr. BEDACHT. Yes.

Mr. VINSON. Now, you say that this bill ought to tax present surpluses?

Mr. BEDACHT. Surpluses accumulated up to now; yes.

Mr. VINSON. The accumulated surpluses?

Mr. BEDACHT. Yes.

Mr. VINSON. And you think that they ought to be taxed?

Mr. BEDACHT. Yes.

Mr. VINSON. And I believe you say that you ought to tax tax-exempt securities?

Mr. BEDACHT. Yes.

On that particular point he was certainly in harmony with the gentleman from Massachusetts, but on these other points he was opposed to the provisions in the bill, and advocated some that were not in it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I wonder if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] will abandon his position with respect to tax-exempt securities now, since he has found himself in company with a Communist? The gentleman accuses us of being in bad company. I wonder if he will abandon his position with reference to tax-exempt securities now that he finds himself in company with a Communist?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I think I will let the gentleman from Massachusetts answer that.

Now, I want to take up this bill and at least give you an outline of what is in it; but before I proceed with that I wish to say that for the fiscal year 1935, 61 percent of all the revenues received by the Federal Treasury came from consumption or excise taxes. We are now taxing heavily through the form of excises for the revenues of the Government 61 percent of the total amount of revenues coming from that source. We find that in the income-tax field there is an opportunity for raising additional revenue and at the same time equalizing the tax burden as between corporations and corporations, as between corporations and individuals, and as between corporations and members of partnerships.

This bill is divided into four titles. Title I deals with income taxes. It reenacts the individual income-tax schedules with the necessary changes therein to include the amendments which this bill makes upon the Revenue Act of 1934. It reenacts the corporation income taxes on the basis of taxing the net income bracketed according to the amount of retained net income withheld from distribution.

Title II amends the 1935 Revenue Act by reducing capital-stock tax from $1.40 per thousand on the declared value to 70 cents per thousand. It further amends the 1935 act by discontinuing the capital-stock tax after July 1, 1936, and by discontinuing the excess-profits tax after the close of the income-tax taxable year beginning in 1936 and not later than June 30, 1936.

Title III levies what is called windfall taxes, the tax on unjust enrichment.

Title IV provides for refunds in accordance with certain provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act which was invalidated by the decision of the Supreme Court, and also provides for refunds of taxes on floor stocks on hand on January 6, 1936, the date of such decision by the Supreme Court. The refund of taxes on floor stocks, however, does not apply to claims of processors for refunds on account of floor stocks still in their possession. Those refunds are taken care of in section 21 (d) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, and we do not include it in this bill.

The most important part of this bill that we are presenting here today is that which is embraced in title I. We propose in that title to repeal all existing corporation taxes after December 31, 1935, and substitute for those taxes a plan of taxation based upon the net income of the corporation, measured by the amount of adjusted net income of the corporation withheld from distribution through dividends. We repeal the capital-stock and excess-profits tax under title II, so that corporation taxes, including corporation income taxes as now existing, and capital-stock and excess-profits taxes now upon corporations, are all repealed. We leave the individual income taxes as they are in the law today, except that, instead of exempting dividends from corporations in the hands of individual taxpayers from the normal tax, we impose the normal tax of 4 percent on dividends from corporations as well as upon income from other sources.

I now invite your attention to section 13, on page 13 of the bill, which makes this change from the existing corporation taxes to the new plan proposed in this bill. Section 13, at the bottom of page 13, shows the new plan of taxation on corporations.

We have classified corporations into two classes for the purposes of the imposition of this new tax. We have classified them into corporations having a net income of $10,000 or less in one class and corporations having a net income of more than $10,000 in the second class. We have prepared two schedules of rates, one for class 1 and another schedule of rates for class 2.

If you will turn to page 15 of the bill, you will find a table under schedule I entitled "Adjusted net income $10,000 or less." If you will read the paragraph immediately above the table and then follow it through the table, you will find just exactly how to compute the tax under schedule I, table 1, on all corporate net incomes of $10,000 or less, provided that the percentage retained or withheld from distribution is an even percentage.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. While the gentleman is on that subject, I wish he would explain the wording of the provision both before and after the table on page 16.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I will read the provision just above the table:

If the undistributed net income equals a percentage of the adjusted net income shown in column 1 of the following table, then the tax shall be the percentage of the adjusted net income shown opposite in column 2.

Perhaps I had better give an example. Let us take a corporation having a net income of $10,000, and the corporation wishes to retain in its surplus $3,000, or 30 percent. Just bear those figures in mind—$10,000 income and the undistributed part of the net income $3,000. Now we will read:

If the undistributed net income—$3,000—equals a percentage of the adjusted net income—$10,000—shown in column 1 of the following table—

Now go down in column 1 to the figure "30"—

then the tax shall be the percentage of the adjusted net income shown opposite in column 2

That is the rate of tax. Multiply the $10,000 by 7.5 percent and you will get the amount of the tax.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And that would be $750 as compared to a minimum tax of $1,290 under existing law?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes; it would probably be $1,300 under existing law.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The corporation would have to pay a minimum tax at the rate of 12½ percent on the first $2,000 and 13 percent on the next $8,000, totaling $1,290 tax. Then a capital-stock tax and perhaps an excess-profits tax.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes; that is true. Under this plan if the corporation wants to retain only $3,000 out of the $10,000, or 30 percent, from distribution, it will pay a tax of $750, and that will come out of the $7,000, not the $3,000. Under present law there would be a tax of 12½ percent on the first $2,000, 13 percent on $8,000, making total tax $1,290.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Plus a capital-stock tax.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Plus a capital-stock tax of $1.40 per $1,000 on the declared value, and excess-profits taxes, if any.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I wanted the gentleman to point out just how we are going to raise this money we have in mind under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I will try to get to that.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. I quote from page 19 of the minority report. Referring to the present corporate taxes, the report says:

It abandons an assured revenue of $1,100,000,000 annually for one purely speculative and uncertain and which promises to be most disappointing in amount, thereby jeopardizing Federal revenue.

Can the gentleman inform us how much the corporate-tax provision of the new bill will yield in comparison with the present law?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes; I will try to get to that, but let me make this statement first: One reading the minority report, having heard the witnesses from the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the National Association of Manufacturers, would think there was a very close relationship between the compilers of the minority report and the advocates representing those two organizations.

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. They would not have been before the committee had they thought this plan would not get the money. That is what they are afraid of. They do not want it to get the money, but they know it will.

Mr. BIERMANN. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the gentleman, and think he is accurate, but has the gentleman any information as to how much this bill will yield in place of the present corporate tax?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes, I have; we are not going around here blindly. If we repeal the present corporation taxes, including the capital-stock and excess-profits tax, we will lose $168,000,000 from the capital-stock and excess-profits tax and we will lose $964,000,000 from the corporate income tax, making a total of $1,132,000,000 we will lose by repealing these taxes if we did not substitute something for them.

Under this bill on the basis of 30-percent retention of net income of the corporation as an undistributed part of the income the corporations would pay under the new bill $1,065,000,000 as against $1,132,000,000 we would lose by repealing present corporation taxes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It might be well to point out that, allowing a 30-percent retention, there will be paid out in additional dividends for the taxable year 1936 $3,360,000,000, which, of course, would be subject to the normal tax as well as the surtaxes in the hands of the individual holders.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. That is where we are going to get the increase.

While we lose on the corporate tax we gain on the individual income tax. Under existing law it is estimated that for 1936 we will get $1,153,000,000 of individual income taxes. Under the proposed law we will get $1,811,000,000 in individual income taxes, gaining by this operation $658,000,000. We lose $67,000,000 on corporation taxes; so, subtracting this from $658,000,000 gives us a net gain of $591,000,000 from the change in the corporate tax plan. I shall have some more figures to submit later in another connection. This $591,000,000 is the net gain in revenue under the proposed plan over the existing plan, without taking into consideration the additional revenues which I will refer to later and which amount to a total of $223,000,000.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Touching corporate incomes of $10,000 or less, is there any provision respecting amounts paid on debts?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. We have a provision touching that. I will reach that a little later.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is in another section?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The gentleman took as one of his illustrations a corporate income of $10,000, of which $7,000 is distributed and $3,000 undistributed. Will the gentleman explain the taxable status of the $3,000?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There is not $7,000 distributed, because the tax comes out of the $7,000.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I understand that.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. What is the gentleman's question again?

Mr. MASSINGALE. What is the taxable status of the $3,000 which is held in reserve?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The tax has been paid on the basis of reserving $3,000 and not distributing it in the form of dividends. That may be laid aside to surplus. If at some subsequent time this $3,000 or some part of it is paid out in dividends, then it will become taxable in the hands of the distributees.

Mr. MASSINGALE. It becomes taxable at a subsequent time?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes; when it is distributed. The amount of the retention determines the amount of tax that the corporation itself shall pay. If it retains only 10 percent, it would pay a tax of 1 percent on its net income, or $100.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Referring to that $3,000, as long as it remains dormant in the corporation is it forever afterward immune from taxation?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. As a corporation tax, yes. It is immune to a further corporation tax.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. What other tax would it have to pay?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. If in the next year or subsequent years it should be paid out in dividends, then in the hands of a stockholder or stockholders, the man who receives the dividend, it would become taxable.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Yes; I concede that, but what part will it play in succeeding years in figuring income?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. None at all. Each year stands on its own current earnings.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Whatever they retain after paying their taxes and so forth remains separate and apart from any future calculations?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It has nothing to do with the net income in any year except the year in which it was earned and for which the tax is being computed.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It might be well to suggest at this point in connection with corporations having a net income of $10,000 or less, that 42 percent of their distributed net income may be retained and remain undistributed without the imposition of any tax in excess of existing law.

Mr. REILLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. REILLY. Under this bill the corporations will pay a less tax and the stockholders more?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Is it the opinion of the committee that 30 percent would represent the average retention by corporations?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The information on that is it would range from 25 to 30 percent.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Over a period of 15 years, if I may suggest, the average was 25 percent. Over the past 10 years it is 30 percent.

Mr. CASTELLOW. If it was less than that, would the revenue which the Government would receive be increased or decreased?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. If the retention is less, the corporation would pay less, but the individual taxpayer would pay more.

Mr. CASTELLOW. What would be the effect on the Treasury? Would the individuals pay as much or more than would be paid by the corporation?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is the pivot upon which this plan is balanced. You get it either out of the individual taxpayer or you get it out of the corporation at an increased rate if the corporation holds back more than the average, we will say, which may be necessary for surplus in carrying on the business.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Suppose the corporation only retains upon an average 20 percent, would that increase or decrease the revenue which would be provided by this bill?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Under this bill as the rates now stand we will get more money on the distribution.

Mr. CASTELLOW. If it was decreased to 20 percent the Government would receive more revenue from the operation of the bill?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes; we would get more money in the surtax brackets.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My concern, which is purely sentimental for the moment, has to do with small corporations which are just commencing business and with respect to which it is essential that they retain a very large proportion of their profits in the first 2 or 3 years after starting business in order to get themselves on a safe basis. May I ask the gentleman from Washington, because I cannot figure it out arithmetically from the bill, how much tax a corporation would have to pay with a net income of $10,000, we will say, if it wanted to retain the whole $10,000 for surplus?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It would pay a tax of 29.5 percent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the maximum?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is; a corporation with a surplus of $10,000 or less.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is the maximum?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask another question?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman has stated that the Government will collect from the individual shareholder in the way of an individual-income tax which he will pay when these surpluses are distributed in the form of dividends. Did the committee ascertain the average holdings of the stockholders in all the corporations of the United States before it made this estimate?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes. Mr. McLeod, the statistician and Actuary of the Treasury Department gave us that information. I do not recall what page it appears on in the hearings. His testimony starts on page 26. If the gentleman will turn to Mr. McLeod's testimony in the hearings he will find some tables there together with the information he is requesting with reference to the number of shareholders in the $100,000 or more brackets, or less, and so forth.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Pages 27 and 28.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I assume then, if the gentleman will be patient for a moment, that the gentleman will admit that this bill, applicable to corporations with a net income of $10,000 or less, will make it much more difficult for a brand new corporation to start out and build up a surplus than under the old law, in that such a new corporation would pay a tax as high as 29½ percent of its profits as compared with 13 percent today.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. If it withholds all of its net income. However, a newly formed corporation usually has enough capitalization to finance its operations to begin with, and under this plan it can reserve 40 percent of net income each year without paying more tax than now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, and many of them have to do that.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Is the gentleman from New York referring particularly to a closely held corporation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; any sort of corporation.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. A so-called personal-holding company, in other words.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Or does the gentleman mean the ordinary small corporations where you have a few stockholders?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Any sort of corporation that starts on a small basis, as most of them do.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Undoubtedly the closely held corporation can get the money back into its working capital without any trouble whatever under this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Without paying the 29.5-percent tax?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes; they can distribute the profit 100 percent, and if it is closely held, they can lend the money back to the corporation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. A method of evasion?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. No; the money goes through the tax mill. In other words, in the hands of the individual shareholder the Federal Government is paid the normal tax and the surtax.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well; the gentleman states they can lend the money back to the corporation, and that would mean the corporation would have an additional interest charge to carry.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And they deduct the interest charge on next year's return.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Nevertheless, it has to be added to the price of their product.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But they have the working capital and do not pay the 29.5-percent tax.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman from Washington indicates he is not certain the gentleman from Kentucky is right about that.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I was not following the gentleman and I am not sure I heard what the gentleman from Kentucky stated.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I said they could lend the money back and thereby avoid paying the 29.5-percent tax. They would get the money at 6 or 7 percent, or whatever the stockholder is willing to take for his money.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Surely, that is correct. If they pay out all of the earnings, there is no tax at all to the corporation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Assuming, of course, that the stockholders have the money to lend.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from New York certainly knows that when the money is paid in dividends by the corporation to the stockholder the stockholder has the same money less tax.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then he is not to spend it; he is to put it back in the business.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I am saying that if the business needs it and it is closely held corporation and they want to put their money into the working capital, they can do it without paying the 29.5-percent tax.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. And there will be no tax evasion, because the distributee would pay his individual tax.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Depending, of course, on whether he is a taxable person.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Of course, depending on whether he comes within the taxable brackets; and while this measure will bring a great many additional persons within the taxable brackets, there will be some who will not be in the taxpaying brackets.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Further inviting the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], what happens now, in the case of an individual or partnership, if the individual or partnership now makes $10,000? What do they do?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They pay on it.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. This bill simply provides that the corporation pay a tax; that is all.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Washington permit a question?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. As I understand it, the present accumulated surpluses are untouched and the tax operates in future.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have heard the objection made that this will penalize newly formed corporations in that they will not be enabled to accumulate surpluses.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Well, when a newly formed corporation can reserve 40 percent of its net earnings without paying any greater tax than it pays now, I think a very liberal provision has been made for the building up of a surplus or reserve, and in addition to this, while I did not expect to go into this matter just now, all corporations have the same privilege as they have under existing law to build up a reserve for depreciation, depletion, and so forth, and such reserves amount to a rather staggering sum of money. That you may know just what these reserves amount to I will read from page 22 of the hearings an excerpt from the testimony of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as follows:

The proposal does not at all affect the liberal provisions of present laws for the deduction of ordinary operating reserves, such as those for depreciation, depletion, obsolescence, bad debts, and the like, from taxable income. All such reserve allowances will be deductible as at present from the taxable incomes of corporations.

Many people do not realize how important these deductible reserves are. Between 1926 and 1929, inclusive, the aggregate deductions from taxable income for depreciation and depletion reported by all corporations amounted to sixteen and two-tenths billions. During the succeeding 4 years, 1930–33, inclusive, the deductions for depreciation and depletion reported by all corporations aggregated sixteen and four-tenths billions. Taking the aggregate figures only for corporations reporting net incomes during these two 4-year periods, we find that between 1926 and 1929, inclusive, the aggregate deductions from taxable net income for depreciation and depletion amounted to a sum equal to 31.2 percent of the aggregate statutory net income reported. For the years 1930–33, inclusive, such deductions amounted to a sum equal to 49.9 percent of the aggregate statutory net income reported. In other words, the liberal provisions of the law with respect to deductions for depreciation and depletion—provisions which would be retained under the new plan—already permit very substantial operating reserves free from taxation.

The table on page 15, which I shall call table 1, approaches the question from the standpoint of how much the corporation wants to withhold from distribution, or how much it wants to put into reserve.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. On the question the gentleman was just speaking of, can the gentleman give us any idea how much net revenue a $10,000 income corporation could retain without paying tax upon it, taking the 40 percent that is allowed under the bill and adding depreciation, depletion, obsolescence, and the like? How much of the net revenue could be retained without paying taxes?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Of course, the depreciation and depletion allowance depend upon the character of the plant which the corporation has; that is, the buildings, and so forth, or whether it is a mine or a business institution.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman stated he thought he would give us something on that later.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I have given it as to the total of such reserves over a representative period of time.

I can refer the gentleman to the chart and the various rates, but you must have the facts in the individual cases to give exact information as to such individual cases.

If you will turn to page 17 you will find another table, table 1–a, which approaches the question from the dividend end of the subject; in other words, if a corporation says it wants to pay out so much money in dividends and have, whatever is left to build a reserve, you can take the figures in table 1–a and get exactly the rate of tax on the net income that will produce the revenue that the Government will get out of the corporation at any percentage of the amount paid out in dividends to the adjusted net income.

Following each of these tables is what they call the interpolation provisions which tells you exactly how to calculate or compute the tax on any fraction of percentage.

So the tables are as plain as the English language can make them, and just as understandable as any provision can possibly be made.

The gentleman from Massachusetts dwelt upon the point that the bill was so complex in its language that nobody could understand it, and said it was more complicated than any provision in a tax law of the past.

Back in 1924, and you know under whose regime that was, they passed a reorganization plan for corporations whereby they could evade the tax. It was couched in language so complex that without the arbitrary construction by the Treasury Department no man could tell what it meant.

We have been trying to simplify the language and eliminate that part of it.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the gentleman from Washington give us an example under the table he has referred to?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Table 1–a?

Mr. CARPENTER. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Suppose you take a corporation with $10,000 annual income. What percentage do you want to pay out in dividends? I will let the gentleman select it.

Mr. CARPENTER. Thirty percent.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Well, look at column 1 and you find the figures "30." Opposite to that in column 2 you find "19.0323." You multiply $10,000 by that percentage and you get the tax.

That disposes of schedule I for corporations of $10,000 or less. Now, we come to schedule II for corporations with an income of more than $10,000. The rates are different in that schedule from those in schedule I.

On page 20 you will find the computation under schedule II. Then, if you will follow down column 1 to the figure immediately opposite, you will find the percentage retained or withheld from distribution, and just what the rate of tax is of the adjusted net income. There cannot be any possible mistake, because those rates are there. I now ask you to turn back in your bill to the first part of it, where you have the individual income-tax schedules, and compare those with this and see which is the simplest. I say this language is reduced to the simplest possible form, and anyone who can read and understand the English language can work out his tax rates. If you can get it in simpler language than that, you will do more than our committee could do.

Table 2–a corresponds to table 1–a in schedule I, and gives you the rate of tax based upon the amount of dividend distributed instead of upon the amount withheld from distribution. So you have the table here for your convenience and for the convenience of the taxpayer. If he wants to compute the tax from the point of view of the amount withheld from distribution, you have table 1 or 2, and if you want to compute the tax from the viewpoint of the amount of dividend distributed, you use table 1–a or 2–a, and the interpolations follow in each instance. We have then what we call the merger table, to take care of the transition between schedules I and II. For instance, if you have a corporation with a net income of $10,000, it pays at the rate, we will say, from 1 percent to 29½ percent depending upon whether you are retaining 10 percent or 100 percent. If another corporation has a net income of $10,001, that would come under schedule II and would immediately be taken out of schedule I and put under schedule II where the tax rate is 4 percent for 10 percent retained, and so to make the transition between these two there is schedule III, to make an even graduation between the rates in schedule I and schedule II.

That also is easily computed. If you will turn to the report of the committee you will find examples given there on page 6 of the report.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. It might also help to point out, for instance, that if a corporation had $10,001 net income, if schedule III were not employed and provided here, it would immediately go into schedule II, and the lowest rate would be 4 percent, while if it was just $10,000 the rate would start at 1 percent.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I have just been explaining that.

I am going to take example 3 in the committee's report on page 6, because it is all set out there. This will illustrate the merger between schedule I and schedule II, so that the taxpayer will not be unjustly taxed by reason of the sudden change in the rates from 1 to 4 percent. We will say that 10 percent is retained. Example 3 is at the bottom of the page: A corporation has an adjusted net income of $20,000, which is under schedule II. It has as yet declared no dividends, but it decides that it wishes to retain $2,000 net in surplus, in undistributed net income. The percentage of undistributed net income to adjusted net income is, therefore, 10 percent. In such a case a corporation computes a tax under schedule II and under schedule III, and is subject to whichever tax is the lesser. It shows you there exactly how they compute it. The schedule II tax is readily determined from the rate table included in that schedule. The rate for an undistributed net income of 10 percent of the adjusted net income is 4 percent. That would be $800, 4 percent of $20,000. Therefore the dividend credit is $17,200. That is the amount that you would have for distribution.

A tax is now computed under schedule III. A tax is first computed under schedule I on the whole $20,000 of adjusted net income. With 10 percent retained, the rate is 1 percent and the tax is $200. To this tax is added a tax under schedule II computed on the amount by which the adjusted net income ($20,000 in this case) exceeds $10,000. This excess is $10,000, and the rate under schedule II for a 10-percent retention is 4 percent. Then this added tax is $400. The total tax under schedule III is, therefore, $200 plus $400, or $600. But the tax under schedule II alone was $800. Therefore, the taxpayer will have his tax computed under schedule III since that tax is the lesser—$600 as compared with $800. The effect of taking the tax computed under schedule III is to permit the $200 tax saving to be retained as a surplus free of tax. That makes a saving to the taxpayer of $200 in the case given.

Section 14 is one of the so-called cushions. It takes care of the deficit cases. Where a corporation is in the red, where it has exhausted its accumulated earnings and profits and has gone into its capital structure to the extent of $100—in other words, $100 in the red—and makes a net earning in the present current year of $500, then you add the minus $100 and the $500 net income, which leaves you $400, so that under this provision in order to enable the corporation to make up this deficit and apply $100 of its net earnings to the deficit, we tax the corporation on that $100, 22½ percent, and then put the other $400 under the general plan in this bill as a new base, under schedules I or II, as the case may be.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Do I understand the gentleman, in effect, to explain that this bill imposes a tax upon the payment of a debt?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. No. It imposes a tax upon net income.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Upon net income used in the payment of a debt?

Mr. SAMEUL B. HILL. Yes. It does that now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With corporations?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes. We have not changed the principle. We changed the rate from 15 to 22½.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is very different.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. But we have not changed the principle, but we give them a flat rate of 22½ on that part which is necessary to make up the deficit.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It might be well to call attention to the fact that 22½ percent of the amount that would go to make up the deficit might be very materially less than 15 or 16 percent of the total net income.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That might be so, but I prefer to discuss that in my own time. I have no right to impose upon the gentleman from Washington. It is a new idea to me.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on the question just now under debate?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Assume that a corporation at December 31, 1935, had an indebtedness of $500,000 and an accumulated surplus, not included in the 1935 profits of $200,000, which means to say there would be an excess of debt over accumulated surplus of $300,000, which the taxpayer desired to pay off over a period of 5 years; now, let us assume that the profits for 1935, the adjusted net income, is $160,000, could the gentleman give us an application of that problem to the tax bill, showing what would be taxed at 22½ percent?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. While we have not yet reached that point, $60,000 would be subject to the 22½-percent rate. In other words, the debt is $300,000, if it comes within the definition of "debt." The $300,000 is to be amortized in 5 years. Consequently with an adjusted net income of $160,000 you could put $60,000 to that debt of 22½ percent. Then after you reduced your $100,000 base by reduction of the tax, you would get a new base for the tax under the plan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If on the $60,000 you paid a tax of $13,500 or 22½ percent, then the $13,500 would be deducted from the remaining $100,000?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And you would have a new base of $86,500.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And that would be taxed under section 13?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes; and if you made distribution of that, the corporation would not have any taxes other than the 22½ percent on the $60,000, or $13,500. Under existing law in such a case the present tax would be more than $24,000.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Now, that takes care of section 16 which we had not yet reached, but I am now going to call attention to section 15, which deals with contracts not to pay dividends. If a corporation as of March 3, 1936, finds itself in a position, by reason of a contract entered into with its creditors, not to pay dividends until it has paid its creditor his debt or has established a sinking fund, or otherwise provided means of paying the obligation, if it is under that handicap by reason of a written contract, then we allow the corporation a 22½-percent flat rate on that portion of the net income which it is unable to pay out, by reason of this contract, in dividends. Then you get a new base for the tax on the remainder under the general plan.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Will that same principle apply in the case of a mortgage, where a corporation is paying off a mortgage on its property or a bond issue?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Provision 16, "debts", would probably take care of that situation, but this applies only in the case where, by reason of having entered into a contract not to pay dividends, a corporation is not in a position to pay dividends. These contracts must be in existence as of March 3, 1936.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Would the gentleman briefly tell us the difference between the taxable year and the dividend year, and show how they mesh in together?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The taxable year we have not changed. In most cases it is the calendar year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But you have brought into this new law a technical definition of the dividend year.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The dividend year commences 2½ months after the taxable year begins, and extends 2½ months beyond the end of the taxable year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So that any distribution made during that dividend year out of the income of the taxable year would be exempt from taxation?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It would have a dividend credit; yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. What is the idea of having a different taxable year from the dividend year?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It takes the corporation some time to cast up its accounts and determine just how much its net income is and how much it wants to distribute and how much it wants to withhold from distribution. If you make the dividend year coincide with the taxable year, they would have to have this all figured out before the end of the taxable year.

We have other provisions in the bill, but I will not have time to take them up in such a detailed way as I have been doing. I have, however, covered the most important features of this bill and, I think, the features in which the House is mostly interested.

We have dealt with some corporations such as trust companies, banks, and insurance companies on a different basis from those under the general plan. For instance, we leave out of the general plan banks, trust companies, and all insurance companies, both domestic and foreign, and put them on a straight 15-percent flat-rate basis; and we put on the straight 15-percent flat-rate basis corporations in receivership because the board of directors of the corporation has lost control and it is in the hands of the court.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Why is a separate rate made for banks, trust companies, and insurance companies?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Their business is largely that of keeping great amounts of reserves for the protection of their depositors and fiduciaries.

Mr. McFARLANE. This other question, if the gentleman will permit, how does the rate in the proposed bill compare with existing law?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. We are making them pay 15 percent flat, and any dividends such corporations receive from other corporations goes in as part of their net income.

Mr. McFARLANE. And the present rate on them is what?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The present rate is from 12½ to 15 percent.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. There is this additional fact to be borne in mind, that under the proposed plan dividends will be subject to the normal tax, whereas under existing law they are not.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is, dividends paid out by banks will be subject to the normal tax as well as dividends paid out by all other corporations.

We have placed under the 22½-percent rate, foreign corporations having a place of business in this country, and we have placed foreign corporations having no place of business here and not engaged in trade or business in the United States, on a flat 15-percent rate to be withheld at the source. We have placed a flat tax of 10 percent on nonresident aliens, that is, people not citizens of the United States and not residing in the United States; and this 10-percent tax is withheld at the source. We expect to get considerably more revenue out of both nonresident aliens and foreign corporations having no place of business or not engaged in trade or business in this country, than we have been getting under the present plan, because we are going to withhold it at the source, and not take a chance on their making a report of it, or having to send our representatives to some foreign country to find what their net income is, and seek to induce them to pay their tax. This 10-percent tax and this withholding of the 10-percent tax on nonresident aliens applies in all cases except as to dividends to a nonresident alien stockholder of a foreign corporation, which foreign corporation is doing business in the United States, and receives less than 75 percent of its income from sources within the United States. The tax so levied and withheld is on that part of the income allocable to sources within the United States. In case such corporation receives 75 percent or more of its income from sources within the United States we withhold the 10-percent tax on dividends to nonresident aliens. But in no other case do we withhold the tax on nonresident aliens as to dividends received from foreign corporations. Do not confuse foreign corporations with domestic corporations, because we withhold the tax on dividends which domestic corporations pay to nonresident aliens.

I think you understand the "windfall" tax pretty well. We call it a tax on unjust enrichment. Under the processing taxes, which the Supreme Court invalidated, a burden was placed upon commodities which the processor either did not pay or had refunded to him, but at the same time passed the burden on to his customer. This is an unjust enrichment, a straight-out bonus, and we propose to tax that 80 percent after allowing certain deductions necessary to be allowed to arrive at a proper net basis.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Is this going to involve a lot of lawsuits?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. We have a lot of them anyway, so I do not think it will further complicate the matter.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am wondering why we do not tax these "windfalls" 100 percent; why do we not take it all?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Does the gentleman think he could defend a tax which took all? I remember the gentleman at one time advocated a tax of 99½ percent, saying he did not want it thought he wanted to take all.

Mr. McFARLANE. That is right on the higher brackets, on incomes over $50,000. I think we ought to have a ceiling on personal-income tax where no individual under present circumstances will receive over $1,000 per week.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. If the tax is 100 percent, we take all. Through the plan proposed we do not take all.

Mr. McFARLANE. I think we should take more than 80 percent. Why not take at least 90 percent; these processors are not entitled to keep 20 percent of this money they secured under A. A. A.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Title IV refers to refunds under certain provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Washington 5 additional minutes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Title IV provides also for the refund of taxes on floor stocks, but I am not going to take time to go into this, Mr. Chairman, for I think the Committee understand pretty well what it is.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Is this money in the hands of the court, the Government; or is this going to induce a lot of lawsuits?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The money that was paid has been refunded to the processor who paid the tax; they got the money.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. In computing the net benefits derived under this unjust enrichment they will, of course, be allowed to show, if it be the fact, that they have passed the refund on to somebody else, will they not?

In other words, they would be allowed to show that the tax which was collected had been refunded on down the line?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Do you mean the Government would be allowed to show that?

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. No; the individual or the manufacturer, for instance.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. If the manufacturer has not paid the tax but has passed it on, of course he is the one we are after. If he has paid the tax and absorbed it himself or refunded it we do not want to molest him.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. In other words, after this matter went into court, my information is that before a jobber or manufacturer could sell a contract he had to stipulate that if the tax were refunded to him he would in turn pass the refund on. If I am incorrect, the gentleman may correct me.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Does the gentleman mean the refund?

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Yes. That would enter into the computation?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the revenues which this bill will produce in addition to the $591,000,000 from the tax on the corporate and individual incomes heretofore mentioned. For instance, the so-called "windfall" tax is estimated to yield $100,000,000; the continuance of the capital-stock and excess-profits taxes for the period of the present fiscal year and present income-tax taxable year, respectively, is estimated to yield $83,000,000; and then there is a provision in this bill providing that corporations may liquidate within the next 2 years and have their capital gains computed under the graduated capital gains plan of the Revenue Act of 1934. From this provision it is estimated we will get $40,000,000 the first year, and $30,000,000 the second year. Hence, there should be added to the $591,000,000 the total of the last three items, $223,000,000, making the estimate of revenue which this bill will produce the sum of $814,000,000 the first year. [Applause.]

Under permission to extend my remarks, I incorporate an excerpt from the testimony of Hon. Guy T. Helvering, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, at pages 20 and 21 of the hearings on this bill. This statement expresses admirably the philosophy and objectives of this legislation.

The excerpt is as follows:

When distributed to stockholders, corporation earnings become a part of the incomes of the individual stockholders and are subject to the graduated surtaxes. Corporate earnings which are not currently distributed in dividends now escape these surtaxes for long periods or altogether, thereby creating an unfair discrimination. All the earnings of a partnership or of an enterprise owned by a single individual, whether reinvested or not, are now subject to our income surtaxes.

If, for example, a partnership composed of four equal partners earned $1,000,000, the Federal Government would receive $517,136 of those earnings in individual income taxes, assuming that the partners were single men and had no other taxable income. If these same men conducted their business as a corporation and paid themselves salaries of $25,000 each but no dividends, the Federal Government would receive only $145,656 in income taxes—a difference of $371,480. Even if this corporation distributed 50 percent of its earnings, after the payment of $100,000 in salaries, in dividends, the Federal Government would still receive $174,400 less in taxes than it would receive if the business were conducted as a partnership.

The earnings withheld by corporations add no less to the wealth of the shareholders than the earnings distributed in dividends; for the reinvestment of corporate earnings becomes reflected in the stockholder's share of the net worth of the corporation and in increased earning power. It is worthy of note that the process of reinvestment of earnings frequently results in very large capital gains that escape capital gains taxes. The accrued capital gains of a lifetime, if obtained through the retention and automatic reinvestment of corporate earnings, escape all capital gains taxation because the law does not provide any tax on the increment between cost and market value at the time of death; the entire estate being subject only to the ordinary estate taxes, on the market value, that are paid by all estates. Thus, no special compensation is received by the Federal Government for the loss in revenues suffered during the lifetime of the owner by reason of his use of the corporate form.

Shareholders in corporations that pursue liberal dividend policies are now discriminated against because they are not permitted to reinvest tax-free the corporate earnings that they receive as dividends; whereas the stockholders in corporations that retain the bulk of their earnings are permitted under the present law to reinvest their share of the corporate earnings, in effect, without payment of individual income taxes thereon.

Further, the present ability of corporations and of their controlling stockholders to choose the timing of dividend distributions, without any effect upon the corporation's tax liability and without reference to current earnings, often results in a loss of revenue to the Federal Government and an unjust avoidance of taxation by stockholders of large personal incomes. The earnings withheld by a corporation would often, if distributed, raise the surtax brackets of stockholders, thereby putting the stockholders in the surtax brackets where they really belong. When withheld for a time, and then paid out in years when the other income of important stockholders is smaller, such earnings escape the higher rates to which they would have been subject. Individual businessmen and partnerships possess no corresponding choice for the timing of the distribution of earnings for income-tax purposes.

The present law also discriminates against stockholders with small incomes. The corporation earnings are subject to the 12½ to 15 percent corporation-income tax, as well as to capital-stock and excess-profits taxes. As against these rates of 12½ to 15 percent taken out of earnings, plus the capital-stock and excess-profits taxes, amounting on the average to about an additional percent, the stockholders' dividend receipts are exempted only from the 4-percent normal tax. Under the President's proposal, it would be possible for a corporation to avoid income taxes altogether, and the small stockholder would pay only the normal tax of 4 percent on his dividends or no tax at all, according to his total income, instead of paying the present corporation-income, capital-stock, and excess-profits taxes.

A further discrimination in favor of incorporated as contrasted with unincorporated business in the present law is to be found in the fact that an individual who reinvests in his business the large profits of 1 year, and subsequently experiences losses, is nevertheless subject in full to the income tax on the profits of his good year; whereas the stockholders of a corporation that similarly reinvest the large earnings of 1 year, and subsequently suffer losses, escape individual income taxes on the profits of the good years which have been wiped out.

On the other hand, the present law sometimes favors the partnership as against the small corporation. There are many corporations whose earnings, if wholly distributed among the shareholders, would not be subject to individual income taxes averagaing from 12½ to 15 percent, because the shareholders of those corporations do not fall into sufficiently high surtax brackets. The corporate form of business organization is, nevertheless, desired by numerous small- and medium-sized enterprises for reasons of convenience, flexibility, and the like. Discrimination in taxation against the corporate form of business enterprise, as well as discrimination in its favor, would be removed by the present proposal.

In substance, a major result of the proposed measure would be to place all business, whether incorporated or not, on substantially the same basis for income-tax purposes.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER].

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this tax bill because I think it is so very complicated that few can understand it, and in the second place, the way to balance the Budget is not to pass a new tax bill but cut out unnecessary expenditures.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted this time for another purpose, and I hope no one will make a point of order, because I will be through in a minute. I have had an honor thrust on me that properly belongs to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], one of our able, hard workers. I am credited in a dispatch appearing in a newspaper under date of April 19 with being the author of H. R. 3263.

This newspaper article also states that "five representatives of railroad brotherhoods will meet in St. Paul Monday with Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, of Montana, to urge his support in the Senate of the Pittenger bill to modify the long- and short-haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

I want the newspapers to get this, please.

Then they say further:

The Pittenger bill, sponsored by WILLIAM A. PITTENGER, of Duluth, already has passed the House and is pending in Senator WHEELER's committee in the Senate. The measure would amend the Interstate Commerce Act to permit railroads, in order to meet water competition, to charge lower freight rates over a long haul than over a short haul on the same line. The act at present forbids this.

As a matter of fact, the reference should be to H. R. 3263, the Pettengill long- and short-haul bill. I am very glad to say that I cooperated with the able Representative from the Hoosier State in getting that bill through the House.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and to include a short letter that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] wrote me in connection with this measure.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

Hon. WILLIAM A. PITTENGER,
Member of Congress, House Office Building.

DEAR PITTENGER: I want to thank you for the splendid support which you gave to the long- and short-haul bill. In doing so you gave distinguished public service, not only to railway workers and those engaged in the production of railway equipment but also to the business and shipping interests of the district and State which you so ably represent.

So far as I am aware, this is the first bill since 1887 designed to place railways on terms of competitive equality with other carriers and reduce freight rates and distribution costs between producers and the great consuming centers of America.

Again with appreciation,

Sincerely yours,

SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL,
Member of Congress.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, this bill is to me the most revolutionary step which this country has taken, from the standpoint of an economic program or economic procedure, since the creation of the corporate entity. I enjoy working with and working on technical data and technical regulations, and this bill is technical. Simplicity was forgotten when this bill was drawn. It has complicated the making of corporate tax returns beyond the wildest dreams. I feel that this tax bill is the answer to the prayers of technicians in law, in tax procedure, in accounting, and in finance. As I read the bill and try to understand it, the corporation managements of the country will from now on, so long as this bill is in force, have to depend upon learned men in those fields I have just mentioned to assist them in managing the affairs of their corporations, whether large or small.

Everyone knows that the Members on both sides of the House have had very little time to analyze and comprehend what this bill covers; therefore, any statement that any Member not on the committee may make is subject to question until verified by careful research and study or by some Member of the committee. If any statements I make seem out of line, I hope some Member of the committee will correct me; and if I am thinking in the wrong direction, I hope someone will change my line of thought.

In going back and attempting to find where the philosophy of this bill originated, I found this book I hold in my hand, and which I secured in 1933 shortly after its publication. The name of the book is The Industrial Discipline, by Rexford Guy Tugwell. On page 208 I find three short paragraphs which, I think, deal specifically with this bill. Mr. Tugwell is here discussing the question of the allocation of capital and says:

> To meet this problem it is frequently suggested that a tax be imposed on funds, over and above replacement, which are kept for expansion purposes. If taxation forced these funds into distribution as dividends, they would have to seek reinvestment through the regular channels, and a concern's plans for expansion would be subject to check in the investment market. It might be said incidentally also that a salutary check upon present practices in issuing stock dividends and concealing earnings for manipulative purposes would follow. Once all funds were forced into the investment market, however, some other means of supervising their uses would be needed. This might be done through the Federal incorporations of businesses. For new capital issues, then, revision of original charters would be necessary.
> If funds were thus forced into the open investment market, and if there were control of new capital issues, the problem would be as adequately met as seems necessary to the advocate of the general idea. For funds from the other sources we have mentioned—individual savings, investment trusts, insurance companies, savings institutions, etc.—would come into the investment market in any case. There is no danger from self-allocation in these. The revenues of the Government are also normally subject to public supervision for expenditure. They might be better used than they have been in the past, to regularize industrial activity; but this is not a question of breaking ground for a new policy. It will be seen, then, that the control of investment is not so complex a matter, at least in principle, as it might at first seem. The principles involved would be only two: the forcing of all investment funds into an open market and the regulating of new capital issues. Neither of these seems impossible if we grant (1) the substitution of Federal for State incorporation, and (2) the correctness of using the taxing power to force surpluses into the market. The scheme is recommended as eminently practical by those who put it forward; certainly it would have far-reaching effects; it rests, however, upon an extension of Federal authority upon which we have, until now, been unwilling to venture.

Now, in my own simple way I take this statement from Mr. Tugwell's book as the basis for H. R. 12395, because, as I read this bill, questions of this type come into my mind. Why was the modern corporation created? How was it created? What motivating influence was back of its creation? Why did our people accept it? What caused its rapid growth? Is it responsible for the American standard of living or level of individual possessions having risen above that of any other race of people in the history of the world? What part does the creation of the modern corporation have in causing you or me in our desire to be in a liquid state or condition financially to take our savings and invest them in the bonds and stocks and debentures of the modern corporations which are listed on the stock and bond exchanges of the country and is it good that we thus invest our funds?

This tax bill, as I see it, strikes directly at the economic procedure and the industrial practices which have grown up in this country as a result, and by and through the modern corporation. This tax bill leads me into this realm. I take and check the amount of our estimated national wealth which we have invested in bank deposits or credits, which we have invested in stocks and bonds and debentures of corporations listed on our stock exchanges, and which we have invested in cash-surrender values of our life-insurance policies, and I add these things up and find that we have from 25 to 40 percent of our total estimated national wealth invested in what might be termed liquid assets, which in theory can be reduced to cash at any given time.

Now, I cannot take my interest in a farm and place it on the stock exchange and sell it by calling up my broker and saying, "Sell so many shares in such and such a farm." If I put my money in a farm, I am nonliquid. If I put it in the stock of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., I am liquid. If I have it in bank credits and I can get my money on demand, I am liquid. If I have it represented by the cash-surrender value of an insurance policy, I am liquid. But if I have it invested in something for which there has been no mechanical means of liquidity created, I am nonliquid.

So, as I reason this thing out, I find that the American people have come to the support of the modern corporation, because if it is properly organized and safely managed, its stocks can be listed on the stock exchanges of this country and therefore the owner of shares of stock can at any time he so desires, in the absence of a panic or an economic washout, make himself liquid, insofar as his investment in that modern corporation goes.

Then, going on with this bill, I tried to see what effect, if any, good or bad, this bill will have on the operations of the modern corporation, the stocks and bonds of which are held by the people of this country who desire to be in a liquid position, and I get into a study something like I have here very quickly and roughly illustrated by the chart which I now present. If I had had more time I would have had these charts completed and they would have been much more intelligible than they are, but the chart I have will illustrate my point.

We will take the United States Steel Corporation, and we find that at December 31, 1934, it had a surplus of $528,000,000. At December 31, 1935, it had a surplus of only $252,000,000. Its operations for 1934 resulted in a deficit of $21,667,000. Its income in 1935 was $1,146,000.

I find that it paid dividends to the full amount in 1934, and to the full amount in 1935.

I very much desired to extend this study to show what happened in this particular corporation between 1929 and 1935, with reference to increase or decrease in surplus, incomes or deficits, dividends paid, and the debt structure, because as I read this bill it strikes directly, and deeply, into all operations which have to do with the financial management of corporations, whether with incomes of $10,000 or less or $10,000 or more. So, as an illustration, here within 1 year a corporation's surplus shifts, and without carefully analyzing the report, wherein an accountant could easily dig out the cause of this, within 1 year the surplus shifts from $528,000,000 to $252,000,000, which no doubt is caused by a cleaning up of corporation adversities which took place between the beginning of the economic washout of 1929 and what happened at the time they started out of the deficit period.

Any sound management, if they are dealing with bankers, are very reluctant in a period of depression to debit their surplus accounts with extraordinary losses, because if they do that the banker says, "Well, we cannot handle your paper", or the investor says, "Well, I cannot take that paper unless you double the interest rates." So it would be very interesting to extend the figures on this chart for a number of years and explore into what might have happened to the United States Steel Corporation's operations for the period 1929 to 1935, both inclusive. Taking this tax proposal and applying its provisions to the operating results of corporations like United States Steel, the American Sugar Refining Co., the Great Western Sugar Co., the General Foods, General Mills, American Telephone & Telegraph, would all lead us into most interesting discussions with regard to this staggering program which we are about to adopt.

Mr. Chairman, after taking this tax proposal and applying it to actual results of operations of these larger American corporations, it would be just as enlightening to make an application to the operating results of the 43,000 other corporations which return net income in excess of $10,000 annually. Admitting that I have had very little time in which to explore the bill and make applications, I am sure that in scores of cases the direct result of the administration of this bill in its present form will be the financial death of scores of these corporations and thus move us more swiftly and completely toward a greater monopolistic control of American industry and commerce. A reference to the several volumes of Moody's Industrial Reports, which I have here on the table, will furnish numerous examples, I am confident, of the exactness and correctness of my statements. With the varying industrial, financial, geographical, seasonal, and credit conditions which exist throughout this land, how anyone familiar with the operating problems of the modern corporation can come to the conclusion that a "strait jacket" in the form of this tax bill is good for the "general welfare" is more than I can understand. It is my firm opinion this tax measure cannot be adapted to these corporate problems without creating havoc in fabrication, transportation, marketing, and financing.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Before the gentleman leaves the first pages of the charts it is evident—the gentleman's figures being correct, and I assume them to be—that in 1934 the Steel Co. paid no income tax under existing law.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is right.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And in 1935 if the proposed law were in effect they would pay no income tax?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In other words, paying out in dividends more than the net income there would be no corporate tax?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct.

(The time of Mr. CRAWFORD having expired, he was given 5 minutes more.)

Mr. BACHARACH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. BACHARACH. It is true, as the gentleman from Kentucky says, but the persons receiving the dividends would have to pay the tax on their dividends.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Under the existing law, if they are in the surtax brackets they pay taxes. Under the proposed plan they would pay the normal tax in addition thereto.

Mr. BACHARACH. We are not talking about "ifs", but I say that every person under the proposed law would have to pay the tax.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, the $7,205,000 came out of the surplus which was accumulated in prior years, while, in my opinion, this tax law will have more to do in preventing the accumulation of a surplus than anything that has ever been done to corporations in the way of Federal legislation. In this I may be mistaken; but if so, I trust the debate following will show wherein I am in error.

Now, let us take the American Sugar Refining Co. In 1911 their surplus was $21,000,000 and the income $14,000,000. In 1915 their surplus was $16,000,000 and the income $6,000,000. In 1921 there was a deficit of $586,390. In 1932 the income was $11,354,000, while in 1935 the income was $5,258,000, and my objective in showing these figures is to illustrate the great variation of operating results; to show the ebb and flow of earnings and losses; to show the increase and decrease of debt as we see it here rise from $3,415,000 in 1911 to $4,000,000 in 1915, and then to $35,470,000 in 1921. At that high point it was necessary for the corporation to make arrangements for new financing, but before accomplishing that the debt rose to $40,710,000 in 1922, and we find then a bond issue of $30,000,000 reflected in the balance sheet. That means bankers had to be consulted. Investors had to be found who would take the bonds. Interest rates had to be agreed upon. Commissions had to be paid. Prospective earnings had to be projected and a general tightening of belts all the way around was necessary. Often in such cases new managements are brought into the seats of the corporation. At such a time it would, no doubt, be absolutely disastrous if the corporation had to deal with a tax measure such as we are here considering in addition to all the other problems which such a situation would present.

In 1936 the outstanding corporations which paid dividends—I mean corporations which have 1,000 to 10,000 stockholders, the difference between 247,000 corporations and the 214,000 corporations.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. If the gentleman will allow me, that was a misprint. It should be 257,000 corporations, and those were the ones making an income-tax return.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Two hundred and fifty-seven thousand corporations making tax returns with an income subject to tax. Then there are 214,000 which have incomes of $10,000 or less. So the difference between the 214,000 corporations and the 257,000 corporations making returns is a small group made up largely of representative corporations that have thousands of stockholders, and here is a situation where you get the picture. What happens? Dividends drop to $3,000,000. The debt in 1911 is $3,000,000; in 1915, $3,999,000; in 1921 it jumps to $35,000,000; in 1935 it was paid down to $5,000,000. Where would that debt be today if a bill of this kind had been in operation, and how could they have liquidated this indebtedness that accumulated in 1920, 1921, and 1922? Within the short period of only 3 years a staggering debt increase of, roughly, $37,000,000 is built up simply because the corporation ran into an economic storm no management could foresee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In regard to your 1935 year, see if I have the figures correct. Your income is $5,000,000 plus and your dividends $4,000,000 plus. Under the proposed plan I submit to the gentleman that the rate of tax would be 6 percent upon the income of $5,000,000 plus, or $300,000, whereas under existing law the tax would be substantially $800,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; but the point I am bringing out is during the great fluctuations in income and losses great cushions are needed in the way of accumulated reserves. I grant the tax would be about $300,000, instead of $800,000 under the present law, but in order to accomplish that result you must pay out in dividends 80 percent of your earnings. You are whipped into a living torment as you gaze at the percentage table, and this leads you into the unsound and destructive practice of dissipating all earnings in the form of dividends and leaves you without a cushion when the rainy day comes, and that is very bad. To escape the tax penalty you comply, and in that compliance you commit economic suicide.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman must recognize, however, that when we take the difference in the tax under existing law, $800,000 plus, and the tax under the proposed plan of $300,000, you have a difference of $500,000 less tax for the year 1935, which can be added to surplus—$500,000 more than under existing law.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But the thing I have in mind all the time is where these large corporations have large incomes over and above their dividend payments, 57½ percent of that is going to be put into the tax box, and if it goes into the tax box you cannot build up corporate resources to take care of wash-outs.

Let us go to another sugar company. Here is something that will be interesting to the gentleman from Colorado. These figures are not confidential, because I take them out of Moody's industrial books, and they are public information. Here is a company that has a liquid surplus in 1930 of $30,000,000, in 1935 of $25,000,000. Income in 1933 of $2,500,000, in 1934 of $6,414,000, and in 1935 of $5,761,000. Dividends were paid every year. There is a debt, $823,303, in 1933, and in 1934 a debt of $936,788, and in 1935 a debt of $861,939. The running debt runs about constant, because all funded debt of every nature is absent on account of the liquid surplus. The management would be foolish to carry a debt with such a reserve of liquid assets. It does not carry a debt except running normal expenses. On the same street in the same town there is another company engaged in a similar line of business. They have a debt structure in the form of bonds, debentures, and acceptances several times the amount of their surplus. This second corporation is not blessed with a soft cushion in the form of a large surplus in liquid form. Before its management is the rocky road of the new tax proposal. Over it they must travel, and as they build that surplus or reserve sufficiently to meet a great operating problem such as they have just worked out of, staggering taxes must be paid on the portion to be carried to surplus. Corporation no. 2 gathers its raw material from the same State no. 1 draws its from. No. 2 sells its finished product in the same geographical territory, and its operating conditions in field and in factory are very similar to those of corporation no. 1. In the event of a series of bad years, it does not require two guesses to draw a conclusion as to what will happen to corporation no. 2. A tax proposal which imposes such burdens upon corporation no. 2 drives directly into a greater and greater control of American industry by the monopolistic tactics of strongly entrenched capital structures and corporate managements. Such a program can only lead to a heavy mortality among those corporations which at the beginning of this new type of race are not blessed with a reserve cushion in behalf of which they have not been heavily taxed.

In my opinion, this tax bill will certainly drive one company to bankruptcy and thereby turn the entire situation over to this strongly entrenched company, which has heretofore accumulated its surplus and is today in a liquid position, with all dividends paid and no debts of consequence. So I say that this bill is an indirect support of the creation of greater and greater monopolies and a direct death-dealing blow to corporations with debt structure and with nonliquid surpluses, in spite of the fact that it does give some relief from tax when debts are amortized.

I have many other figures here. Take the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. I was very anxious to go into that. I make some reference to it. As an illustration, in 1934 the dividends which the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. paid were $167,000,000, while its earnings were only $121,000,000. In 1935 the earnings were $125,000,000, while the dividends paid amounted to $167,000,000. Surpluses in each year being reduced by excess of outgo over income. And yet, Mr. Chairman, the claim is too often made that the large corporations withhold dividends from their stockholders. Too, the claim has been made that this bill is necessary to force large corporate enterprises to pay dividends. I do not believe the record will support such arguments. Granted, there are a few closely controlled corporations which attempt to circumvent or evade or avoid payment of taxes. But I ask, Is it necessary to pass such a destructive tax law simply in an attempt to make those few corporations conform; and especially do I ask why we should take a step like this before first reducing expenditures to the very minimum, and thus attempt to encourage industry and savings and bring the expenditures of Federal Government within the present national income derived under present tax laws?

So these are the reasons why I made the first observation that, in my opinion, this tax bill is the most revolutionary corporate taxing step we have taken in this country since the creation of the corporate entity, and my prediction is that it will bring about great dislocation of investments. It will greatly embarrass those who are now in charge of corporations; it will prevent others from going into business, creating industry and giving employment.

Mr. Chairman, the bill, in my opinion, tends to defeat the objective of all legitimate business enterprise. The Nation's business structure is not prepared for this blow at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] has again expired.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I realize that the hour is getting late. It is now 4:30 and probably only 40 Members of the House of Representatives are present, one-tenth of our number. I presume the membership of the House is well acquainted with this bill and it is not necessary for most of them to spend a lot of time trying to digest it. That is not the case with me. The bill is just off the press, but I rise at this time primarily, Mr. Chairman, to answer the question of the majority leader [Mr. BANKHEAD], propounded earlier this afternoon. If I have time then I want to make some statements with reference to the tax bill.

The first defense of this tax bill was given to us this afternoon by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DOUGHTON] when he said the object of the present tax bill was to try to equalize taxes, giving an illustration of a partnership, wherein they would have to pay such great taxes under the present law, and there was such an injustice to them in comparison to a corporation. I want to say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I was a member of a copartnership up until 1930, and I realized the inequality and the injustice in taxation, so there was only one thing for us to do and that was to incorporate our business so that we could have the same manner of justice that corporations enjoyed.

I would suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina that if anyone who is in a partnership feels that there is an injustice to his business because of the fact that he is engaged in a copartnership, there is one thing he can do to get relief, and that is to incorporate his business. There is no reason why any business, regardless of what it may be, legal or any other manner of business, that cannot be incorporated, it would be a poor lawyer who would not so advise his client.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I am not going to yield now, because I only have 15 minutes, and I probably cannot get any more time. It is hard for me to get time. There is no one in this House for whom I have greater respect than the gentleman from North Carolina, and I should gladly yield if I had time.

I am going to refer now to the statements made this afternoon by the majority leader [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I asked him a question about the operation of Government, and whether it would not be wiser for us, as Members of Congress, to cut down greatly our exorbitant expenditures of Government funds, running this Government into the greatest debt it has ever known in all time, rather than to be imposing this tax bill. Always the gentleman from Alabama is evasive. He does not want to answer, and the membership of this House does not seem to want to answer. Where are you going to get the money? I think when the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] gave us information this afternoon, which he did, and which information is authentic, that we could cut $1,200,000,000 from our present appropriation, there is no reason, in my judgment, why the gentleman from Alabama should not make some effort on the part of the House of Representatives to cut down these expenses, and that he and the majority party should help do that, rather than to spend Government funds, much of it foolishly. It is one of the most important points that I want to make right now. I told the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] that I would answer his question later on, and this is the answer.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I want to yield to the gentleman, but if I finish my statement I will yield. If they will give me a little time, second to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama. I said I would yield to the gentleman from North Carolina first.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I only had 15 minutes, and I yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Let me finish my statement and I will certainly yield to the gentleman from Alabama. The gentleman from Alabama then went on with the statement that is made so many times in the House of Representatives, as if we on the Republican side were only trying to conserve money and put it into the hands of a few people and let the great mass of people go hungry. Now, God forbid that we on the Republican side would have such hearts of stone. I do not know that the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House are more desirous of trying to take care of the needy in this country than myself and the other Members on the Republican side. I believe in humanitarian principles. I believe in the Golden Rule and try to practice it. I do not think we could pass a more equitable tax law than one based on the proposition that the more a man makes the more he ought to pay. I am in sympathy with that principle, and no one will do more to put it into effect than I will. So when we hear that the great expenditure of Government funds has all been to take care of the needy, after we hear so much about the great extravagances under the W. P. A. and the P. W. A. and other agencies set up by Executive order, I wonder whether it is all made to give bread to the starving and clothing to those who are cold, or whether it might have sometimes a tinge of politics?

He quoted the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce as saying that business is good. In some lines of business this is so, and a lot of people are back to work. Thank goodness, it is so; but I wonder whether it has been brought about because of the laws passed in the last 3 years or because of the decisions rendered by the Supreme Court. Remember, I do not say this with any desire of trying to tramp on the Democratic administration; I say it because I am honestly convinced that many of the unconstitutional laws should never have been enacted, and I believe now the majority of the Members on the Democratic side of the House agree with me in this statement.

I shall quote now a statement not from the president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, but from the President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, in a speech made in Pittsburgh on October 19, 1932. I quote:

> TAXES are paid in the sweat of every man who labors, because they are a burden on production and can be paid only by production. If excessive, they are reflected in the idle factories, tax-sold farms, and hence in hordes of hungry tramping the streets seeking jobs in vain. Our workers may never see a tax bill, but they pay in reduction from wages in increased cost of what they buy or, as now, in broad cessation of employment. There is not an unemployed man, there is not a struggling farmer whose interest in this subject is not direct and vital.

I thought those words were sound when they were uttered by the President, and I think they are just as sound today. I congratulate the President on making that statement, and I do hope he will take to heart today these words he uttered in 1932. What has been the result? He says one thing and does another.

We know the operation of this Government is going to be successful only insofar as we operate it for the benefit of the people and operate it economically. It is a business, a great business, the biggest business in all the world. How much thought and how much time are we giving to the fundamental principles of Government operation? Are we thinking of the application of real, true business principles to the operation of the Government, or are we thinking of trying to operate the Government only from the political standpoint? If we are trying to operate the Government from the political standpoint only, then possibly you are making a success of it; but I cannot agree that we are applying sound business principles to the operation of Government and operating it for the good of the American people. When the Democrats took hold of the Government in 1932 there were 61 major departments the taxpayers were supporting. Since that time 41 new major operations of Government have been added, notwithstanding your promise to cut them down in number and consolidate departments. Now, get this point, that every time we increase our functions of Government they become larger and larger and each succeeding year it is more difficult for us to cut down expenses. Expenses always increase, because we add new enterprises and adopt new thoughts and new ideas, and these new activities and the people running them ask Congress for greater appropriations each year. It is like a snowball rolling down the mountain, it gets larger and larger the farther it goes.

So with the Government departments; they become greater and greater as time goes on, require larger personnel and greater annual expenses. It was shown here this afternoon by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that before the annual appropriation bills are finally passed by the House of Representatives the departmental estimates are going to be increased by almost $1,000,000,000 over what was granted them a year ago. Why, it is an astounding figure! Mr. Chairman, we ought to give as much time trying to cut down the expenses of government—more time, I should say—as the 4 or 5 days we shall sit here trying to raise six or seven hundred million dollars. When the conference reports come up for consideration, however, the leaders of the House say to us: "Here is the conference report; now you must agree to this conference report. This is what we want to enact into law." And recently without any consideration beyond a probable 5 or 10 minutes you voted to add sixty or seventy millions of dollars to an appropriation bill already passed by the House. Is this a sensible, sane thing for us to do? Think it over and call the Members of this House together and give them an opportunity when these conference reports come in to cut down these great expenses.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I see I shall not have time to talk on the tax bill very much, although I should like to. It has been said here this afternoon that this tax bill is simple. I read from page 16, beginning in line 3, and then shall ask if any of you know what it means, even after you study the chart and all:

> If the undistributed net income is a percentage of the adjusted net income which is more than 10 and less than 20 (and such percentage is not shown in the foregoing table), the tax shall be a percentage of the adjusted net income equal to the sum of 1, plus one-fourth of the amount by which the percentage which the undistributed net income is of the adjusted net income exceeds 10.

It is my opinion that if I were to ask each of the 435 Members of this House when they figure out their corporate income if they know what it is all about, they would not. I have studied it, I have thought about it, and I do not know whether I know what it is about, I must confess. Do you?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Not now.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I want to help the gentleman out of his embarrassment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to have time to talk at great length on the merits or demerits of the bill; but before I yield the floor permit me to say that I cannot see the difference between a banking institution or insurance company which you permit to be exempt from the taxes you now propose and the manufacturing concern. The difference, as I see it, is that the banker looks after the depositor's money and then tries to make some money to pay to the stockholders of the institution. If anything happens to that bank, you Members who wrote this tax bill know that not only the stockholders of the bank but the depositors also are going to lose.

The depositor is an individual who has accumulated something by thrift, by saving, and through hard work. God knows we ought to protect him if possible. It is decided now in order to protect him we are going to let the banking institutions create a surplus.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, the Congress wants to protect the banks now. The difference between a bank and a manufacturing establishment is that the manufacturing establishment gives employment to labor. If we are going to wreck the manufacturing establishment because it cannot create a surplus, we are going to wreck the employers of labor. I know this tax bill is going to do away with surpluses, insofar as people can get away from paying taxes, because nobody likes to pay a tax, but if we wreck the business institutions of this country then we wreck the business establishments that provide jobs to labor, which creates earning power for the people to live on, we kill some of the great institutions that made this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes, if he will yield to me.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, we kill industry and we take away the jobs, the very things we want to create. The Department of Labor states that there are at the present time 12,000,000 men out of work. If you want to regulate industry today, govern mass production, and those 12,000,000 people will go back to work, and we will not have this national deficit. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] asked me this afternoon about the six and a quarter billion dollars spent during the Hoover administration. That was the spending that turned the tide of the depression.

In the past 3 years the present administration has spent $12,000,000,000, more than twice as much. It may be said that it is only ten billion, but there are $2,000,000,000 not shown on the financial statement that I hold in my hand, issued by the Treasury Department; therefore the present administration is $12,000,000,000 in the red. Mr. BANKHEAD, you see you were twice as extravagant. More than 100 percent; think of it.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman is aware of the fact that those doing business in the form of corporations have the advantage, so far as tax matters are concerned, over those who do business as partnerships. They can obtain relief through incorporation. But how about the individual, what would the gentleman do with him?

Mr. RICH. Let him take his wife and daughter and the three people organize a corporation. That is all that it is necessary for him to do under our laws, and we must obey the laws.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Where are you going to get the money? The gentleman wants more money, yet, under the plan he suggests, we would get less money, so he contradicts himself coming and going.

Mr. RICH. Oh, no; I do not.

Mr. DOUGHTON. They pay more as partnerships. The gentleman wants to know where they are going to get the money.

Mr. RICH. I was only trying to help the gentleman to satisfy the other fellow that is in the hole.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am already out.

Mr. RICH. I say stop spending money! That is the place to raise the money, and if we do that we will be doing a good job, and you should help us stop our extravagant spending.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY].

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, our rehabilitation expenses have been staggering in their proportions. They were brought about not by choice but through crucial necessity. I have heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania say many times, "Stop spending money", just as he has today. Then I have heard him ask for more money for flood relief in his region. I have heard other gentlemen on the other side say, "We can reduce expenditures by so many millions here and so many millions there", but not one of them tells us what to discontinue or what to stop. On the other hand they have asked for an increase of expenditures for their emergencies. Again the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] asks repeatedly, "Where are we going to get the money?" This tax bill is his answer. Of course, he does not like the answer. Nor do I. However, we have something to be thankful for. We find missing in this bill the processing taxes that were heralded. I have no quarrel with the windfall tax because no one should unjustly enrich himself. But I do not favor the corporate surplus income tax because it is unnecessary.

Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to approve of the Government extending a heavy hand—a heavy tax hand—upon the business of the country. When the Government goes to business for its revenues, it ought to extend its hand lightly and not heavily, because when the Government intervenes in business inordinately it becomes a burden upon business and the country generally.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania in the course of his remarks said he believes in the principle that the man who makes the most should pay the most. That is not refuted; but the principle has been superseded by the practice during late years of the men who make the most paying the least or nothing at all. So the Congress undertook by a tax bill that is still young to cure that situation and to make all pay more—individuals, corporations, everyone.

You say the tax revenue from this bill is not enough. New exigencies arose, and now we have brought in here again another tax bill, this bill designed primarily to reach corporate surpluses. Even while it is in the making it is said this bill will not be sufficient to raise the amount of money that it is intended to raise; that next year we may expect another tax bill.

Oh, how long will this Congress continue to reach out and tap—and when you tap you sap the economic resources of this country. None of us want to dry up the resources, the bulwarks of our institutions. Neither do we wish to discourage employment. Better for business to employ our people than have our Government do it. Business can do it more satisfactorily and to better advantage. What effect the bill will have on employment is uncertain. But if we are to have the bill, then we ought to make it attractive for business to absorb the unemployed. To this end I would propose an amendment to section 23 of the bill granting an exemption from the taxes to be imposed of such corporate surplus income as should be the equivalent of all money paid out to new employees engaged on and after the date of the passage of the bill, with a limitation that the exemption not exceed 20 percent of the current pay roll and that the production of the plant be not increased over 5 percent.

If the House will harken to me, Mr. Chairman, the membership cannot help but feel with me that this tax bill is not at all necessary. The object of it is to raise approximately $1,000,000,000. It is for the Committee on Ways and Means and this House to say how we shall raise it. We can raise the money without resort to taxation. We can get the money from contributions—voluntary contributions—from all the people without hardship on anyone. We can strike out the enacting clause of this bill abandoning this corporation surplus income-tax measure and take up and pass my bill for a national lottery, which will give us the billion we seek.

With triple loads of National, State, and local taxes bearing down on our people, why do we not consider the efficacy of the lottery? Why do we not go back to the period before we had any tax system of our own?

Take, for instance, the time when we were engaged in the great Revolutionary War. When money was scarce and hard to get and insufficient to carry on the war George Washington fostered the lottery as a means to the end that we might become a free and independent people. He prevailed when the Continental Congress, in November 1776, adopted its historic resolution providing that the funds for the next campaign should be raised by lottery to be drawn in the city of Philadelphia.

When the war was won Alexander Hamilton, the first Secretary of the Treasury, proclaimed that having won our political independence we should forthwith establish our economic independence. As his contribution he proposed that we instruct our people in useful manufactures and pass effective legislation in their aid. His objectives were to supply the domestic market by means of a protective tariff and to follow through with a bid for world trade. Interesting important men of that time, he selected the northern part of my State as the center of industry of our country, causing to be incorporated under the laws of the State of New Jersey the Society for Useful Manufactures, a corporation which is still in existence, proposing for it the power to conduct a lottery to raise not over $100,000 in any one year. Hamilton, in referring to his plan, said the lottery would give a ready command of money—and there is no question about that from our present-day experiences—and would make up for first unproductive efforts—deficits.

Our experts now are engaged to provide against deficits, and if we ponder sufficiently we shall find that the aristocrat of all deficiency measures, all emergency measures, has been and still is the lottery, for the lottery, when conducted by the Government, is nothing more nor less than a voluntary contribution on the part of the great body of the people ready and willing to make a gift to their Government in an emergency, and the emergency of a huge national debt and annual outlay is still with us. A national lottery in this country will make unnecessary any harm that may come from the enactment of this bill, and no tax bill can be passed which will not work hardship on some.

Of course, it might not be amiss to tax great surpluses that make our business houses gigantic banks, but the process will in some degree clamp down and crack down on the backbone of the country's ordinary business, placing a burden upon business and the Nation.

Let me now remind this Congress, Mr. Chairman, that when the First Congress was called into session it had no meeting place. In the public dilemma the city of New York hospitably invited the Members to meet in the metropolis. So that they might have suitable arrangements and accommodations, the city improved and remodeled the city hall. As a result the city was faced with a deficit of £13,000, a huge amount of money in those days, and far beyond its power to pay. It could not be raised from ordinary sources, so the city went to the State legislature and secured permission for the operation of a lottery, which it conducted, and from its proceeds quickly paid its bill.

Again, when it was undertaken to construct the first buildings in the District of Columbia, this Congress gave the city of Washington the power to conduct a lottery for the purpose. That was in 1795. Washington was President and John Adams was Secretary of State. When the buildings were dedicated in 1800, John Adams, then President, praised in glowing terms the virtues of the citizens of the country who by their lottery participation had made possible the nucleus of this great Capital.

O Mr. Chairman, do you know that at the present time our people are participating in lotteries more than ever before in the history of the Nation. Between three and six billion dollars a year flow into channels that do not come within our economic realm, and if we are going to tap and harness any funds to meet our expenses, let us go beyond the economic sources, already strained, and harness and garner the moneys that are being lost to our country, our Government, and legitimate business, and make them serve our economic purposes.

Our lottery moneys are now going into the hands of racketeers and organized criminals at home or are finding their way to foreign countries. Billions are involved—billions. Let us reflect, too, on the fact that every form of government in the world has in operation a lottery conducted by or under the auspices of the government for worthy and needed purposes.

Yet we are standing idly by failing to take cognizance of the large, huge amounts of money that are passing from us when they are so necessary for the welfare of our own people.

The people of this country are ready and willing, as in all crises, to contribute small amounts of money which will aggregate a billion net to the Government for the purpose of surging forward on the road of sound economic recovery.

Business has gone ahead. It is ready to make further strides. We must not load it down with excessive taxation. Let us rather lighten the load. We have made great progress. Business is cooperating more and more every day. This cooperation is slowly but surely lifting the load of the Government. Let us give business another hand; let us reach out for the huge treasure of lottery moneys to help with the burden; let us recommit this bill and vote the national lottery bill, and thus raise the revenue sought by this bill, bringing into the economic realm the billions of dollars lost to us yearly to be employed for the economic use and welfare of our people. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES FOR GREAT LAKES EXPOSITION

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I reported a bill from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures authorizing the coinage of 50-cent pieces for the commemoration of the centennial celebration of Cleveland, Ohio, to be known as the Great Lakes Exposition. It is an emergency measure, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read the title as follows:

S. 4335

An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the centennial celebration of Cleveland, Ohio, to be known as the Great Lakes Exposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask my colleague from Missouri how many of these new coinage bills are going to be brought into the House, and why do not they get together a dozen and put them on one bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman will agree to it, as far as I am concerned I would be very glad. Members on both sides of the aisle ask that these bills be reported out, and we have reported them. This exposition is to be held this year, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] says that if we do not get the authority to print the coins now it will be useless.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the centennial anniversary in 1936 of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, to be known as the Great Lakes Exposition, and to commemorate Cleveland's contribution to the industrial progress of the United States for the past 100 years, there shall be coined at a mint of the United States to be designated by the Director of the Mint not to exceed 50,000 silver 50-cent pieces of standard size, weight, and composition and of a special appropriate single design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

SEC. 2. The coins herein authorized shall bear the date 1936, irrespective of the year in which they are minted or issued, shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value, and shall be issued only upon the request of the treasurer of the Cleveland Centennial Commemorative Coin Association upon payment by him of the par value of such coins, but not less than 5,000 such coins shall be issued to him at any one time and no such coins shall be issued after the expiration of 1 year after the date of enactment of this act. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by such Cleveland Centennial Commemorative Coin Association, and the net proceeds shall be used by it in defraying the expenses incidental and appropriate to the commemoration of such event.

SEC. 3. All laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for the security of the coins, or for any other purposes, whether such laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "not", insert "less than 25,000 and not."

Page 2, line 12, strike out the word "five" and insert "twenty-five."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE FARM-TENANCY SITUATION

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the farm-tenancy situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I want to call your attention to one of the most serious problems confronting American agriculture today. It is the problem of farm tenancy. According to the 1935 Census of Agriculture about 42 percent of all the farms in the United States were operated by tenants, and, in addition, approximately 10 percent more of all farmers in the country rented a part of the land which they farmed. When we total up the figures we find that more than half of our farmers rent all or part of their land, and almost half of all the farm land in the country is operated under lease. Agriculture has long been considered to be one line of endeavor in which the ownership of the land and capital was in the hands of the man running the business, but, as these figures clearly show, this situation is no longer true in America. The number of absentee owners of farms has become practically as large as the number of owner-operators.

This situation is not a thing that has developed during the depression; it is not a new or an emergency development. However, it is true that farm tenancy has been increased by the low farm prices and incomes of the last few years, and that some of the most undesirable features of the farm-tenancy situation have come to light during the depression. On the whole, however, the gradual increase of farm tenancy has been with us for many decades. In 1880, which is the first year in which census data became available showing the number of farm tenants in this country, we find that slightly more than 25 percent of all our farmers were tenants. With the passing of each decade since then there has been an increase in the number of farms operated by tenants, and, as the figures which I have mentioned above plainly show, we have now reached the stage where almost half of our farmers are operating without owning the land which they farm. In 1880 there were 4,008,907 farmers in this country. Today there are 6,812,350. In other words, we have had an increase in the number of farms during this period of 70 percent. In contrast to these figures, we find that in 1880 there were 1,025,000 tenant farmers in this country. In 1935 there were 2,865,000 tenants, or an increase in the number of tenant farmers since 1880 of 180 percent.

My colleagues, I want you to hold the following two figures in mind and give them your careful consideration. During the 55-year period from 1880 to 1935, the number of farms increased 70 percent, where during the same period the number of farms operated by tenants increased 180 percent. The tremendous gain in the number of tenant-operated farms as compared with the number of owner-operated farms clearly shows that America is fast becoming a Nation of absentee landowners, with its food and fiber being produced by tenants or landless farmers. This, Mr. Speaker, is in a country known the world over for its great natural resources, for its energetic population, and for its democratic form of government. As I have said, the problem is not a new one, but it has now reached staggering proportions. At the turn of the century 35 percent of all our farmers were tenants, and in 1920, immediately after the prosperous war period, and before the crash which came in the fall of that year, we find that 38 percent of all farmers were tenants, and today over 42 percent are tenants. Obviously this general problem is an important one.

Neither is the problem of farm tenancy a sectional or regional one; it is of Nation-wide significance. Some tenancy is found in every State of the Union. It ranges from 7 or 8 percent in New England to 45 or 50 percent in many areas of the Corn Belt and up to as high as 70 or even 75 percent in certain areas of the South. What is even more important than the present percentage of tenancy is the rate of change in the number of tenant farmers during the past few years. When we turn our attention to the changes in the proportion of farmers who are tenants we find that the increases have been greatest in the Corn and Wheat Belts of the Middle West and in the Mountain and Pacific States in the far West. Let me give you some illustrations of recent changes in the tenancy picture for the general area of the country with which I am not familiar. In my home State of Iowa, for instance, we find from published reports of the census that 42 percent of all farmers were tenants in 1930; 10 years later 47 percent of all the farmers were tenants; and today 50 percent of all Iowa farms are operated by persons who rent all of the land. In the adjoining State of South Dakota 45 percent of all farmers were tenants in 1930, and in 1935 the figure was 49 percent. In Nebraska 49 percent of all the farms are tenant operated. In Kansas and Illinois 44 farmers out of each 100 are tenants. In every one of these States there has been a substantial increase in tenancy during the last 3 or 4 decades.

If we turn our attention to the States farther west, we find there again that tenancy has been increasing. For instance, in Montana only 11 percent of the farmers were tenants in 1920; by 1930 the number had increased to 24 percent of all farmers; and there was a further increase between 1930 and 1935, so that now about 28 percent of all farms in Montana are operated by tenants. In Idaho 29 percent of all farmers are tenants, and there was a very substantial increase between 1930 and 1935. In Colorado 39 percent of all the farms are operated by tenants, whereas 15 years ago only 23 percent of all the farmers in the State were tenants.

I do not want to burden you with more of these figures. These are enough illustrations to show conclusively that tenancy is important in the North and West, and that it is rapidly increasing in these areas. The South has long been recognized as a section where tenant farming is predominant. If we take the average for the 16 Southern States, we find that 54 percent of all the farmers are tenants.

Although there was some slight tendency for the percentage of tenancy in the South to decrease during the 5 years between 1930 and 1935, there are now more tenants in absolute numbers in the Southern States than ever before in the history of the country.

I think I have given you enough figures now to show that farm tenancy is significant and important; that it is found in practically all areas of the country; and that it is rapidly increasing in most of the rich agricultural regions of the United States.

However, merely to show that almost half of our farmers are tenants and that the number and proportion of tenant farmers are rapidly increasing may not be an indication of the real significance of this problem. In other words, to show that something is important does not necessarily indicate that it is bad or undesirable. I believe, however, that I can bring before you a few facts which will convince you that this tremendous increase in farm tenancy is a very serious and undesirable situation for the future of American agriculture. Some people will ask: "Well, what if tenancy is increasing? What if half of our farmers are tenants? What difference does it make? Why is it not all right for one man to own the land and another man to furnish the capital and labor for operating the farm?" These questions are perfectly legitimate ones and deserve some very careful discussion. Each and every one of them has a perfect answer. From practically every aspect the answers indicate that tenant farming is undesirable, and that this country will have a decidedly different rural civilization from what it has ever known before if the rapid increase in farm tenancy continues.

I cannot take the time to discuss each of these questions as it should be considered, but, nevertheless, I can give you, in a very short time, facts of such a nature as to indicate that the leadership of this country had better awaken itself to the increasing trend in farm tenancy.

One of the important evils of our tenancy system is that it leads to a very high degree of specialization in cash-crop farming, which in turn has a tendency to decrease the fertility of the soil through heavy-cropping practices and to encourage erosion. At the same time it adds to the burdensome market surpluses of a few cash crops without giving us a well-balanced and diversified system of farming.

My attention has recently been called to a very splendid article in the Southern Agriculturist by Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, of Arkansas. In this article Senator ROBINSON shows from studies that have been made by agricultural economists of various southern experiment stations that the ordinary farm tenant is much more of a one-crop specialist than is the farming owner. For instance, Senator ROBINSON reports the findings of a study made by the experiment station in his home State of Arkansas of a small cotton-growing community in the northeastern part of that State. This survey indicated that the average farm operated by its owners in that local community had 44 percent of its cropland in cotton, whereas tenant farms lying side by side with the owner-operated farms had 63 percent of their cropland in cotton. He quotes other studies made by the experiment stations in Mississippi, Georgia, and other Southern States, and shows that in every instance the tenant farmer has a greater proportion of his cropland in cotton than does the owner-operator on the same size and type of farm in the same local community.

I do not have the figures at hand to show that this high specialization in cash-crop farming by tenants is true all over the United States, but I am convinced from my observation throughout the Middle West that the situation holds there. In other words, in Iowa and other States of the Corn Belt, the tenant farmer turns his attention primarily to the production of corn. He mines the soil year after year with this one cash crop, and he helps add to the unbalanced condition of agriculture by specializing in this cash-crop production.

There is a good reason, my colleagues, for the tenant farmer being a one-crop man, and this reason is that he has no security—no assurance that he can remain on the farm for longer than the crop-growing season. For instance, a recent bulletin published by the agricultural experiment station of my home State reports on a survey of farms in the southern part of Iowa. This bulletin says in part:

> Of the 59 tenant farms surveyed, 48 of them, or 81 percent, are leased under a 1 year contract without any provision for extension or renewal.

Anyone can readily understand why a tenant farmer, who has no assurance from the landlord that he may stay on the farm for longer than 1 year, will not go into the production of livestock, hay crops, or enterprises other than those which can be planted, cultivated, and harvested during the 1-year period.

The length of time which a farmer expects to stay on the farm is very important in influencing his decisions about his farming practices and also his living conditions. Permanent conservation and the general maintenance of farm buildings, fences, and other structures requires that the occupant of the farm have some stability and security in his tenure. Yet the tenant farmer in this country positively does not have security of occupancy. The latest census figures which are available on the subject of farm occupancy are those from the 1930 census. They show that 51 percent of all the farm tenants in the United States in 1930 had occupied the farm they were on at the time the census was taken for less than 2 years. Almost a third of all the tenants had been on their farm for less than 1 year on April 1, 1930, which was the date of that census.

Now, we have heard a lot during the past year about the plight of the southern sharecropper, and it has been repeatedly stressed in many of the press articles about sharecroppers in the South that they have no security and that they are constantly moving from farm to farm. This may be true, but the fact I want to impress upon your minds is that this insecurity, and this great shifting about from farm to farm by the tenants of this country is not limited only to the sharecropper class of the South. According to the 1930 census, 39 percent of all the tenant farmers in the Northern States had been on the farms which they were occupying when that census was taken for less than 2 years, and almost 25 percent of the tenants in the North had been on their farms for less than 1 year.

Although instability may be a little worse in some areas of the South than it is in other areas of the country, it is not limited geographically, and I know from observation that it is a serious problem in Iowa. Let me quote again from bulletin no. 333, which I mentioned a few minutes ago as having been published by the agricultural experiment station in my home State, pertaining to this survey of farms in southern Iowa. The bulletin says:

> On farms operated for 1 to 2 years by the same man, 42 percent of crop land in corn and an erosion rating of 4.3 are found, as compared with 30 percent in corn and an erosion rating of 2.8 on farms for 3 or more years under the same operator. * * * This illustrates the notorious relationship between a rapidly shifting tenancy and a highly exploitive farming system.

This same bulletin lists 10 main economic and social factors which are obstructive to erosion-control work. Five out of the ten are directly connected with this general problem of farm tenancy. If America is going to conserve its soil, if it is going to have a well-balanced system of agriculture so that the individual farmer is not so highly specialized in the production of a single cash crop that he goes bankrupt with the least decline of prices, then we have got to have more stability and security for our farm operators than can possibly be obtained under our present system of farm tenancy.

The constant shifting about from farm to farm, which is so characteristic of our tenants, and the constant fear on the part of the tenant that he will be forced to move at the landlord's desire, or that his rent will be raised so that he cannot profitably continue his operations, is not only a very serious situation which is detrimental to bringing about the conservation of our soil resources, but it is also very detrimental to the formation of a closely knit social life in the community. Studies by the United States Department of Agriculture and by various State experiment stations have repeatedly shown that the number of tenants moving from farm to farm tends to prevent the development of good schools, good churches, and cooperative associations. For instance, Dr. L. C. Gray, who is now Assistant Administrator of the Resettlement Administration, in his testimony before a subcommittee on agriculture in the Senate which was holding hearings on the Bankhead-Jones farm-tenancy bill during the last session of Congress, said:

A study in Oklahoma showed that 40 percent of the moves by tenants resulted in a change of school, 43 percent in a change of church, and 39 percent in a change of trade center.

He also referred to a study in the tobacco area of Kentucky, which indicated that the number of pupils leaving grade schools during the year was equivalent to 43 percent of the average net enrollment, and that 56 percent of the children who left school did so during the usual tenant-moving period, which in that area is about the middle of the school year.

I have tried to picture to you in a very brief way some of the major reasons why we should be concerned about the rapidly increasing number of farm tenants in this country. I have said that farm tenancy tends to bring about a mining of the soil by a one-crop system of farming; that it tends to add to the already heavy marketable surpluses of a few cash crops; and that, consequently, it does not give us a well-balanced and permanent agriculture. Moreover, I pointed out that the great insecurity and instability of farm occupancy which result from our system of farm tenancy are important factors in holding back the development of desirable rural communities with good schools, churches, libraries, and similar cooperative institutions.

But these are not all of the evils of farm tenancy in this country. Although I will not have time to discuss many more, I do want to call your attention to one which I consider to be of tremendous importance. Since its very inception, this country has been a model to all the world for its democratic principles and procedures. America has been the world's stronghold of democracy, and the farmers of this country have been one of the most important groups to have consistently fought for and maintained that democracy. Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that our democratic institutions will be seriously threatened if America continues to pile up a greater and greater proportion of landless farmers. It was one of the cardinal teachings of Thomas Jefferson that democracy could, would, and should flourish in a land where individual farms are operated by their owners, but that it would wither and die if the soil of the country fell into the hands of absentee owners with the result that the real operators of the farms had nothing more than a transitory interest or contractual right in the soil. If we want to see our democracy flourish and grow stronger, let us give these landless farmers of our country an opportunity to become owners. If we want to see our democracy decay, let us sit idly by while our best farm lands fall into the hands of absentee owners and an increasing percent of our farming classes fall into the status of tenants or farm laborers. This question of maintaining a democracy by promoting farm ownership is not one about which to make eloquent speeches and forget. It is a problem which demands action and leadership of a statesmanlike character.

When I was a boy growing up and working on my father's farm we never thought much about the tenancy situation, because at that day and time tenancy was a transitory step for most men toward farm ownership. I know many farm boys in my home community who started out as day laborers, and after a few years time had accumulated enough funds so that they could buy their own livestock and equipment and become tenants. Then, after working as tenants for a few years, they were able to become farm owners and take their place in the community as some of its leading farmers and citizens. In other words, tenancy for those men was a stepping-stone toward farm ownership. As long as it continued to be this, and as long as the period which a man had to remain as a tenant was not unreasonable, farm tenancy was not a serious problem. Today, however, the situation is different. And I believe that if you will look around you in your home communities you will agree with me when I say that during the past score or more of years there have been hundreds of thousands of capable, energetic farm boys who worked themselves from the status of a hired man into that of a tenant, but have never been able to go any farther and reach that goal of farm ownership which they had in mind when they started farming. The very fact that tenancy has been increasing so rapidly during the past decades is proof enough that thousands and thousands of farm boys have been unable to rise above the status of a man who rents his land. The 1935 census does not give us figures showing the age of tenant farmers. However, in 1930 at least half of the farmers between 35 and 44 years of age were tenants in Illinois, Iowa, and Nebraska. For the country as a whole there were 373,900 farm tenants who were over 55 years of age. These were men who had labored virtually all their lives hoping to become farm owners and yet have not accumulated 1 acre of land. If you will compare the census figures for 1910, 1920, and 1930, you will find that there has been an increasing number of farmers in the older age groups who remain as tenants, who, in other words, have not been able to become owners. If this situation continues, I say to you again that it represents a serious threat to democracy. When the young farmers of this country really wake up to the fact that a major portion of them are due to remain as day laborers and tenants throughout most of their lives, they will have much less respect for their Government, and may, in fact, become militant supporters of communism, fascism, or some other foreign system of government.

In closing, I want to point out that there are several methods which Congress might consider in seeking the best way to improve our tenancy situation; but the best way, it seems to me, is to promote the owner-operation of individual family-sized farms. Now, it is conceivable that we might follow the ideal principles laid down by Henry George or the principles laid down by the Socialists or the Communists, in which case we would have the Government take over the land and rent it out to the individual farmers. Under such a situation every man would be a tenant, but he would be a tenant of the Government, not of a private landlord. Another thing which might be done would be to set up a detailed system of regulations such as that being tried in England and Scotland and in other countries, in which a tenant is guaranteed continual security of tenure and compensation for any improvements which he makes to the farm, so that some of the evils of the tenant system have been done away with. We have tried regulating public utilities in this country, but we have never tried regulating the owning and renting of farm land. You can readily see the difficulties that would arise and that such a plan could not be instituted without numerous and uniform changes in the constitutions of our States and without amendment to our Federal Constitution.

Instead of searching for foreign ways to improve the tenancy situation in this country, I commend to you a better and an American way, namely, the promotion of individual farm ownership by the man who operates the land, and a continuing protection of that ownership so that the farm lands of this country will not fall into the hands of absentee landlords.

During the last session of this Congress the Senate passed the Bankhead-Jones farm tenancy bill, S. 2367, which proposes to face this situation that I have described to you, and to bring about a solution of the tenancy problem by a long-time program aimed at promoting the owner operation of family-sized farms. That bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture in the House, which committee I understand will probably file a report in the near future. It is my sincere hope that we may have an opportunity during this session of Congress to discuss the measure here on the floor of the House. It is a measure aimed at solving one of the most important and most fundamental problems facing American agriculture, and moreover, it proposes to face this problem in a true democratic and American way. If this Congress will enact this law, it will have added to the other laws enacted in the interest of agriculture another great statute which will go down in history as one of the really important agricultural measures of basic importance to our new national agricultural policy.

It has been my privilege and pleasure to support 100 percent the agricultural program of this administration. I am sure the measures enacted have been helpful and beneficial not only to those engaged directly in agricultural pursuits, but to labor and industry throughout the Nation. The tenancy problem is of great importance and should be given careful consideration at this session. I believe the growth of farm tenancy can be checked. We should try to check it. Then let us act on a farm tenancy bill this session.

JAMES BUCHANAN'S GREAT SPEECH ON FREE SPEECH AND PRESS AND INDEPENDENT BAR

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by my colleague [Mr. HAINES.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address recently delivered by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. HAINES]:

This is the one hundred and forty-fifth anniversary of the birth of James Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, the fifteenth President of the United States (1857–61).

It is fitting that we celebrate one of the great achievements of Buchanan—his memorable fight in 1831 against judicial tyranny, which threatened free speech, free press, and the independence of the bar. It is conceded today that Thomas Jefferson's destruction of the alien and sedition laws is the only battle for free speech and free press of more importance than that led by Buchanan in 1831.

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE PECK

Federal Judge James H. Peck, of Missouri, had imprisoned for 24 hours an attorney named Luke Lawless and disbarred him for 18 months because he had criticized an opinion of the judge in the newspapers. The House of Representatives voted to impeach the Federal judge solely for this conduct by a vote of 123 to 49, with the latter admitting his conduct deserved censure. James Buchanan led the fight to impeach this judge and was one of the managers of the House in prosecuting the impeachment charges in the Senate trial. However, the Senate voted 21 to 22 to sustain the impeachment charges, with certain Senators not voting and due to pleas for mercy for the judge who had then become old and blind and due also to complications caused by Missouri, national, and senatorial politics. It is worth noting, however, that three men who became Presidents of the Nation voted for the impeachment of the Federal judge—Buchanan, of Pennsylvania; Polk, of Tennessee; and Tyler, of Virginia; as well as two men who shortly afterward became Justices of the United States Supreme Court—Woodbury, of New Hampshire, and McKinley, of Alabama; while the father of Chief Justice White, of this Court, also voted to impeach as a Member of the House.

BUCHANAN DRAFTS ACT OF MARCH 2, 1831

The result of this fight was the drafting by Buchanan of the famous act of March 2, 1831 (4 Stat. 487), which followed the language of the eleventh amendment in defining the constitutional and jurisdictional limits of Federal courts and declared the law, past, present, and future, to permit summary punishment only of direct contempts which actually obstructed justice and which prevented any interference with the right to criticize such Federal judges by citizens, newspapermen, and lawyers. The act is still in effect, the first section being now cited as Twenty-eighth United States Code, section 385, and the second section being in the criminal code. It was adopted practically unanimously, as the slightest opposition would have caused its rejection in the closing days of the session, and Buchanan's speech about 1 month before in the impeachment trial of Judge Peck is considered the historical interpretation of the act which he drafted and is a great summary of the constitutional limitations which protect the citizen, the editor, and the attorney from summary power of Federal courts to punish them for criticisms of such courts and a splendid vindication of free speech, free press, and the independence of the bar. The impeachment trial had awakened the whole Nation to the importance of protecting such rights from judicial invasions and nearly all of the States immediately passed acts which were based on Buchanan's Act of 1831.

It is an appropriate way to celebrate Buchanan's anniversary, therefore, to call attention to excerpts from his great arguments in favor of the constitutional rights to free press, free speech, and the independence of the bar, and to remember that even though these rights are continually under assault in some Federal and State courts that such assaults are illegal, unconstitutional, and constitute impeachable offenses.

MR. BUCHANAN'S ARGUMENT IN TRIAL OF JAMES H. PECK

"I shall now proceed to prove that the power claimed and exercised by the respondent is in direct violation of the letter and spirit of the Constitution. In order to demonstrate this proposition it is only necessary to contrast the provisions of the Constitution with the proceedings of the judge against Mr. Lawless. The Constitution declares that 'in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury.' What does this mean? Does it not extend to all criminal prosecutions? And is it not established that the prosecution of a libel as a contempt is a criminal prosecution? In criminal prosecutions the rights of a citizen are never to be taken away without a trial by an impartial jury. Impartiality is the attribute peculiarly required. But what does the law of contempts, as administered by Judge Peck, declare? That the dearest rights of a citizen may be taken away without any trial by jury, and by the sole authority of an angry, offended, and therefore partial judge. Need I add another word?

"Again, the Constitution provides that 'no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces', etc. In England, where the power of punishing libels against judges as contempts came to the King's Bench from the Star Chamber, a man may be prosecuted criminally upon a mere information filed by the law officers of the Crown. But the Constitution of the United States explodes this doctrine, except in cases arising in the land and naval service. In all other cases a grand jury must pass upon the accused before he can be brought to trial. So careful has the Constitution been of the liberty of the citizen that it has blotted out forever the proceeding by information; although before any punishment can be inflicted, even by this mode, a petit jury must first have found the accused to be guilty. But what is the process in the case of contempts? Without either an information or an indictment, but merely on a simple rule to show cause, drawn up in any form the judge may think proper, a man is put upon his trial for an infamous offense, involving in its punishment the loss both of liberty and property. He is deprived both of petit jury and grand jury and is tried by an angry adversary prepared to sacrifice him and his rights on the altar of his own vengeance.

"The Constitution declares, 'that no person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself.' But I ask, Can the English language furnish plainer words than these? Did not the respondent know when he called upon Mr. Lawless to answer interrogatories upon oath, and on his refusal inflicted an additional punishment, that the Constitution protected him against any such inquisition? If the Constitution does not apply to a case of this kind, in the name of Heaven, when or where will it apply? By the common law of England the refusal to answer interrogatories is itself 'a high and repeated contempt, to be punished at the discretion of the court', and so thought Judge Peck; but the Constitution interposes its protection and secures the citizen against being called upon to answer. Even the courtly Blackstone, the apologist of every abuse under the British Government, declares 'that this method of making the defendant answer upon oath to a criminal charge is not agreeable to the genius of the common law in any other instance' (4 Com. 287). Now, I verily believe that when the framers of that sacred instrument inserted in it the provision 'that no person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself', they had this very case of contempt full in their view. The power which they have forbidden did in this case exist in England; but even there it 'is not agreeable to the genius of the common law in any other instance.' What case so proper could they have had in view when they inserted this clause? They could never have intended that notwithstanding the provision, unless the accused would humbly crouch at the foot of judicial power and swear that he had no intention to give the slightest offense to the judge, he should be liable to be severely punished. Such a doctrine would be repugnant to every feeling of a freeman.

"Even the miserable pretext which existed for exercising this power in Pennsylvania and Tennessee, that the constitutions of these respective States had sanctioned a preexisting 'law of the land', which prostrated the barriers erected by these very constitutions for the protection of civil liberty, has no existence here. No law of the land for the United States existed previous to the adoption of the Federal Constitution. It declares that no man shall be compelled to bear witness against himself on a criminal charge; and I put the question home to each member of this high and honorable Court, whether the language must not be construed to extend to cases of this nature. Is there anything else to which the provision can apply? This odious inquisition must certainly have been intended, as there is no other criminal accusation on which a man can, even by the common law, be required to bear witness against himself.

"Let me here bring into the view of the Senate a fact on which I shall comment hereafter. The counsel has told us that at first Judge Peck only intended to suspend Mr. Lawless; but in consequence of his refusal to have interrogatories filed, and answer questions upon oath, which might require him to bear witness against himself, and of his reading a paper to the court in the character of a protest or bill of exceptions, his punishment was aggravated by the disgrace of imprisonment.

"(Mr. WIRT. I spoke from the evidence.)

"Yes, sir. With this constitutional charter in his hand, the judge has branded Mr. Lawless with infamy (so far as his sentence of imprisonment could do so) for refusing to give evidence against himself. But I shall treat more fully of this point hereafter.

"The Constitution further provides that no person for the same offense shall be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb. But by the law of contempts, after a judge has first wreaked his own vengeance on the accused for the offense, considered as a contempt of court, the unhappy victim may afterward be indicted for a libel, and thus again punished for the same offense.

"The Constitution of the United States does not contain the provision, which is to be found in almost every State constitution in the Union, that upon prosecutions for a libel, the truth may be given in evidence. The reason of this omission doubtless was that as this instrument did not confer upon Congress any power to punish libels there was no necessity for the introduction of such a clause. If the power exercised by the respondent does exist in the courts of the United States, I presume no man will be hardy enough to contend that the truth of an accusation against a judge cannot be given in evidence in a summary prosecution for a contempt. What a spectacle would then be presented on such a trial! For example, I believe that a judge has in a certain cause decided absurdly (and such a thing we know may happen). I review his decision in one of the public journals and prove that he has shown himself to be a weak man; or I charge him with having been wicked and partial. If such be the fact, I have a right to establish it anywhere, and the truth everywhere ought to protect me from punishment.

"I am called before this very judge, charged with a contempt of court, and the only issue to be tried by him is whether he himself is not weak or is not wicked, whether he has not made an absurd or a partial decision. What an exhibition would this be in a land of liberty. Could it ever have been intended to confer a power so absurd and so dangerous upon an American court of justice?

"I now advance a little further in this argument (although it is astonishing to me that any argument on such a subject can be necessary). That sacred aegis—the liberty of the press—a right which Congress, if they would, could not, and if they could, dare not infringe—shields every citizen of this land from the blow of such judicial tyranny. No free government can long exist without a free press. Power is constantly stealing on. One implication involves another, until liberty may be lost before the people know it is in danger. To preserve this invaluable boon, it ought to be watched with greater jealousy than ever was excited by the fabled guardian of the Hesperian fruit. Its safest protector is a free press, and the Constitution of the United States has therefore declared that 'Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press.'

"What was the intention of this provision? The framers of the Constitution well knew that under the laws of each of the States composing this Union libels were punishable. They therefore left the character of the officers created under the Constitution and laws of the United States to be protected by the laws of the several States. They were afraid to give this Government any authority over the subject of libels, lest its colossal power might be wielded against the liberty of the press. They have guarded it with a wholesome and commendable jealousy.

"In open violation of this provision, the sedition law was passed in 1798. This law, after having destroyed its authors, expired in March 1801 by its own limitation. The gentleman who first addressed the Court in behalf of the respondent has mistaken the argument of the managers in relation to this law. None of us ever contended that it was cruel and unjust in its provisions. It was more equitable than the common law, because in all cases it made an indictment necessary, and it permitted the truth to be given in evidence. The popular odium which attended this law was not excited by its particular provisions, but by the fact that any law upon the subject was a violation of the Constitution. Congress had no power to pass any law of the kind, good or bad. It is now, I believe, freely admitted by every person—I, at least, have not for several years conversed with any man who had a contrary opinion—that Congress, in passing this act, had transcended their powers. I have no doubt that the motives of many of those who passed it were perfectly pure, but yet if any principle has been established beyond a doubt by the almost unanimous opinion of the people of the United States, it is that the sedition law was unconstitutional. Such is the strong and universal feeling upon this subject that if any attempt were now made to revive it, the authors would probably meet a similar fate with those deluded and desperate men in another country who have themselves fallen victims upon the same altar on which they had determined to sacrifice the liberty of the press.

"Well, sir, and what then? It is contended by the respondent that although Congress could not bestow upon the courts of the United States the power of trying and punishing libels, yet that by implication he may exercise this authority and dominion over all men who may dare to discuss his pretensions in the public newspapers. That power which the legislature who created him could not confer upon him by express grant he exercises by implication.

"Shall, then, a petty judge—a petty provincial judge (if it be lawful to use such language after the rebuke my colleague received), although Congress itself dare not pass a law for the punishment of libelers against its own Members or the President of the United States, be permitted to sit as the sole judge in his own cause, and, in palpable violation of the Constitution, fine and imprison at his own pleasure the author of a libel against himself? When the express power cannot be delegated, shall he take it by implication? Shall courts of justice exercise a power as a bare incident vastly beyond what their creators could confer upon them?

"If all courts do possess this authority, it may be wielded with vast power as an engine for the destruction of our liberties. We have always had in this country, and I suppose we shall always continue to have, angry political discussions. It would seem that such storms are necessary to purify the political atmosphere of the Republic (though they are sometimes much more violent than agreeable). Let me illustrate my views by putting a case in reference to the so much agitated question of our relations with the Southern Indians. This question has awakened intense feeling throughout the Union, and I doubt not has given birth to much honest difference of opinion. Some believe the President to be right in his views upon the subject, and others that he is entirely wrong. It would not become me here to express any opinion. But suppose the President of the United States were to institute suits against some one of the editors who have attacked his character and assailed his motives, in relation to his conduct on the Indian question, what might be the consequence? The question then to be settled by such a suit would be, are these attacks true or false? Now, you could not take up a paper in the District of Columbia which would not contain one or more articles discussing the general question, and having a direct bearing upon the public mind in relation to the cause pending. These publications upon the principles on which Judge Peck acted would all be contempts of court. You might as well attempt to stop the flowing tide, lest it might overwhelm the temporary hut of the fisherman upon the shore, as to arrest the march of public opinion in this country, because in its course it might incidentally affect the merits of a cause depending between individuals.

"Sir, is this a fancy picture? When a man, so distinguished as to be a prominent candidate before the people of the United States for the highest office in the country undertakes to redress his wrongs by an action for a libel, he attaches to himself the whole politics of the country, and thus all the publications in the papers of the United States on the subject out of which the suit arose and converted into contempts against the court in which it is pending.

"I know something about a Governor's election in New York and Pennsylvania. The liberty of the press is on such occasions carried to its utmost limits. Charges are very freely made and very freely urged against the opposing candidates, and all the people of the State are deeply interested in knowing their truth or falsehood. The candidate who fears the public discussion of any charge made against him has nothing to do but bring a suit, and then according to the doctrine of contempts now asserted, all future publications upon that subject become contempts of court, and may be punished with severity by the judges before whom the action is depending. The current of public opinion must be stopped—the merits or demerits of the candidate must not be discussed—there must be an awful pause to await the event of a little libel cause in an inferior court. Such a doctrine cannot exist in this country. Carry it out to its practicable consequences and it becomes appalling. By a politic application of it, every judge in the land may become the tool of Executive power, or the instrument of preventing all attacks against his political favorites who may be candidates for office. These are not mere fanciful cases. They may occur in practice, and if the power should be sanctioned and established by the decision of this Court, the day may arrive when it will be resorted to for the most dangerous purposes. The time may come when it shall be considered very necessary and proper to shield some future President from public discussion by the exercise of this power.

"Why, sir, at this very time, from one end of the Union to the other, we find the public papers of a particular complexion ringing with attacks on the character and conduct of the Chief Justice of the United States, in relation to the Indian question now pending before the Supreme Court. I think these attacks are unjust, but to check them, would you silence the public press? Would you say that the Supreme Court ought to drag before it every editor in the country, and thus put an end to the discussion? I know that even if the Court possessed this power it would never be invoked by the present Chief Justice—a man upon whom any eulogy of mine would be lost. But if he resembled a Scroggs or a Jefferies (and such men may yet hold that office) he would never rest content until he had inflicted vengeance, through the agency of this power, upon those who dared to attack his judicial character.

"I have been considering the consequence of this power in regard to cases pending; but it would be infinitely worse in its application to cases which have been decided. The Supreme Court of the United States is vested with power, in the last resort, to construe the Constitution. Constitutional questions are brought before it almost every term, involving great and extensive interests, and in some cases the rights of sovereign States. Its jurisdiction is coextensive with the Union, and from the very nature of things its decisions must agitate and inflame large masses of the people of this country. Judgment is pronounced, and the reasons for it go forth to the world in the form of an opinion. Is not this opinion as fair a subject of criticism as any other public paper? And will not and ought not such opinions to be freely criticized as long as liberty shall endure in this country? And yet upon the principles which governed the respondent's conduct, the Supreme Court possesses the power to bring all the editors throughout the Union before them who have dared to impute errors to their opinions, and punish them by fine and imprisonment at their pleasure. The bare attempt to exercise such a power would convulse the people of this country.

"I recollect a case in my own State which may serve to illustrate the absurdity of this claim of power. The chief justice of Pennsylvania delivered an opinion that the supreme court of that State had no right to declare a State law unconstitutional. A United States judge took up this opinion, and in one of the periodicals of the day handled it very severely; more so, beyond all comparison, than Mr. Lawless criticized the opinion of Judge Peck.

If such a power had existed, here was a case for its exercise. The supreme court might have brought the district judge of the United States before them on an attachment and sentenced him to fine and imprisonment for scandalizing the chief justice, and endeavoring to bring him into odiom and disgrace before the people.

"If a judge be corrupt or partial in his judicial conduct, or should chance to be a fool (a case which sometimes happens) it is not only the right but the bounden duty of his fellow citizens to expose his errors. If a man should be notoriously incompetent for the judicial station which he occupies, though this may be no ground for an impeachment, yet it is a state of things on which the force of public opinion may rightfully be exerted for the purpose of driving him from the bench. I admit that the case ought to be an extreme one to justify such a resort. But then, if this power to punish libels does exist, a judge may decide as he pleases without regard either to honesty or law; and then silence the public press in relation to his conduct by denouncing fine and imprisonment against all those, who shall dare to expose the errors of his opinion. In such a case, upon the hearing before the judge, the greater the truth the greater would be the libel. A weak judge, when his capacity is called in question, would always be the most cruel and oppressive.

"As I have already referred to the Supreme Court of the United States, let me do it again. That illustrious tribunal, in the honest and fearless discharge of its duties, has come into collision with many of the States of this Union—with Pennsylvania, with Virginia, with Georgia, with Massachusetts, with New York, and with Kentucky. It has been abused and vilified from one end of the continent to the other. This has been its history since the foundation of the Federal Government. Has any man ever heard that the judges of this Court claimed the power of punishing these revilers in a summary manner by fine and imprisonment? Have we at any period of its history heard the slightest intimation to that effect from any of these men? Not one. That Court has often been in the storm. It has been assailed by the winds and the waves of popular opinion, but it has gone on in an honest and fearless course and trusted for a safe deliverance to the good sense and patriotism of the American people. That tribunal needs no such power as has been claimed by this judge in Missouri and has never thought of resorting to the arbitrary and vindictive conduct which has brought him to your bar.

"I trust I have now succeeded in proving that the courts of the United States can neither derive this power from the common law nor from the Judiciary Act of 1789 nor from necessity, and that its exercise is in direct violation of the Constitution of the United States. Another question now presents itself, on which it may be proper to make some additional remarks.

"Had Judge Peck power in this case to suspend Mr. Lawless from practicing his profession? It is of importance to us who belong to the bar to know whether or not—and to have the decision of this Court upon the question. If he had, the members of a profession which has ever stood foremost in this country in the defense of civil liberty are themselves the veriest slaves in existence. I believe that I have as good a right to the exercise of my profession as the mechanic has to follow his trade or the merchant to engage in the pursuits of commerce. I want them to know whether henceforward I must humble myself and become the sycophant of a judge, whom I may despise, under the penalty of being deprived of the right to practice my profession before him. If a judge be weak, or if he be wicked, his judicial conduct is as fair a subject of discussion among lawyers as among any other class of citizens; and for exercising this right they incur no punishment which cannot be inflicted on any other person. If this proposition be not true, they become the mere creatures of the court. Instead of being the firm and fearless asserters of their clients' rights, often in opposition to the preconceived opinions of the bench, they must cringe and assent to any and every intimation of the judge at the risk of their ruin. The public have almost as deep an interest in the independence of the bar as of the bench. The rights of the citizens, under the complex systems of modern times, can only be asserted and maintained through the agency of the profession.

"Members of the profession may forfeit their right to practice, but this can only be done by the commission of some professional offense, or some crime of so black a character as shows them to be wholly unworthy to be trusted. For other offenses they are subjected to the same punishments as their fellow citizens. Their official and their private acts are entirely distinct from each other. To show that Judge Peck had no right to suspend Mr. Lawless, I need not go further than Second Petersdorff's Abridgement, 615, the book cited by the judge himself. It proves conclusively that the high prerogative of striking an attorney from the rolls has never been exercised, even in England, except for grossly dishonest professional misbehavior, or on a conviction of felony or other infamous crimes. This power has never been resorted to except in extreme cases. I admit that if, in this country, where the two professions of attorney and counsellor are generally united in the same person, an attorney in open court will manifest by his conduct a total want of respect for the judges and will pursue a course tending to obstruct the public business before the court, they must from necessity possess the power of suspending him from practice. But it is not pretended that Mr. Lawless has brought himself within this rule. Was it ever heard of in England, that an attorney was stricken from the rolls of the court for writing and publishing strictures no matter how severe upon the opinion of a judge? The research of the learned gentleman has not furnished us with a single case from the English books, nor a single dictum to that effect. If I write and publish an article, which a judge may choose to consider as a libel upon himself, is it not enough that he may appeal like other citizens to the laws of his country for redress, and have me fined and imprisoned for the offense? Shall he be permitted to take the law into his own hands and add to this punishment a forfeiture of my means of subsistence, by taking away from me my profession? Even the punishment of a libel as a contempt, by fine and imprisonment, would be mercy when compared with this power.

"The judge, in the same rule against Mr. Lawless, has embraced two things of an entirely different character. No two subjects can be more distanct in their nature than a rule to show cause why an attachment should not issue for a contempt, and a rule against an attorney to show cause why he should not be stricken from the rolls. In the first case the court must proceed without delay. Its process or its lawful command must be obeyed immediately, otherwise the progress of public business is arrested. If the order of the court be obeyed, either there is no punishment at all inflicted or it is generally very slight. The suspension of an attorney from practice is of another character. The question then to be decided is, Has his conduct been of such a character as to require his expulsion from the bar? This is a question which need not be determined in a day or in a month. The spirit which dictated that provision of the common law—that the tools of an artificer shall not be distrained—ought to prevail upon such an occasion. When a man's all is at stake, or rather the means by which his all is acquired, there ought to be no haste in the proceeding when no haste is necessary. But here this infuriated judge had decided, from the very first moment, that Mr. Lawless should be suspended; and it has been alleged that it was not till after his refusal to answer interrogatories that he determined to add the ignominous punishment of imprisonment.

"And now we come to the case of Judge Conkling, of which so much has been said. The eloquent counsel seemed to take so much pleasure in referring to the report of the Judiciary Committee, in this case, and to look at me with such significant glances that I had not the heart to interrupt his pleasure by letting him know that I had nothing to do with that report, having been absent from the city when it was made. I never saw the report until this morning, and till then was entirely ignorant of the principles on which it was founded. The gentleman on my left (Mr. Storrs) was also absent, as I am informed, having declined sitting upon the committee for personal reasons.

"But I shall not leave this report of the Judiciary Committee here. The case now on trial before the Senate, and that of Judge Conkling, are totally dissimilar. The good lady, Mrs. Bradstreet, or rather Mr. Tillinghast (I cannot tell which), charged Judge Conkling, before the House of Representatives, with no less than 38 judicial offenses. If we had brought such a list before this Court, and each of them were to consume as much time as the single charge against Judge Peck has done, we might be occupied for years in the trial. The Judiciary Committee were unanimous in rejecting 36 of these charges. Concerning the two which remained, relating to Mr. Tillinghast's suspension, there was a difference of opinion.

"It seems that Mr. Tillinghast, in open court, upon the trial of a cause, had drawn a most odious and revolting picture of a judge, which was intended by him, and understood by others, to be a delineation of the judge upon the bench. This was a direct and palpable insult publicly uttered to his face. The judge, however, either did not understand it as it was meant or determined to disregard it and suffer in silence. Tillinghast, some time after the session of the court had terminated, in a private conversation with the clerk, acknowledged that he meant the picture for Judge Conkling, and confessed the intentional indecorum of his language. The clerk warned him against using such expressions; but notwithstanding, he requested the clerk to tell this conversation to Judge Conkling. On an affidavit of these facts, Mr. Tillinghast was brought before the judge, and on refusing to make an apology was stricken from the rolls. For what? Was it for what he had said to the clerk out of court? No; but it was for the character which he had drawn in open court, in connection with the acknowledgment he had made to the clerk that it was intended as an insult to the judge. Though a majority of the committee expressed no opinion as to the legality of the judge's conduct, I am now willing to do so, and to declare that, in my judgment, it was illegal. If the picture when drawn was not so distinct in its features as to be recognized by the judge, or if he, perceiving the intended resemblance, chose to overlook the insult during the whole term at which it was committed, the time had passed by and the liberty of speech protected the offending attorney. The judge could not at a future term institute proceedings and strike him from the rolls in consequence of any private conversation he might have had with the clerk after the adjournment of the court. This is my opinion; but I never should have voted for an impeachment in such a case. Thirty-six of the charges were so frivolous as to be rejected unanimously by the committee, and the remaining two arose out of conduct well calculated to irritate and wound the feelings of the judge and to induce him unconsciously to pass the doubtful limits of the law in the punishment of the offender. From the circumstances of the case, I could not have supposed that an intention to transgress the law was so clearly established as to justify this tribunal in convicting the judge. Yet I believe that he acted improperly, and such should have been my report. In justice to myself I will also observe that I entirely dissent from most of the reasoning contained in the opinion which he delivered at the time the name of Mr. Tillinghast was ordered to be stricken from the roll.

"A case has been cited from New Hampshire, and I would hope that there must have been some mistake in the report of it which has been read to the Senate. As stated, it presents a case of arbitrary oppression toward a member of the bar, unequaled even in English history. The judge I know to have been a very respectable man, and is therefore the more extraordinary. It seems that an attorney, whose name was Freeman, in a conversation at a public tavern, observed that Judge Livermore was very arbitrary, and that he abused the lawyers, the parties, and the witnesses. He also inquired whether the judge ever studied, and expressed a belief that he did not read his books. This was a mere idle, loose conversation. For this language, which was carried by some tale bearer to Judge Livermore, he struck the attorney from the rolls. Sir, what have we come to? In what state of society do we live when such an act as this is cited before the highest tribunal of the Nation in justification of the conduct of a judge of one of the district courts of the United States?

"I never had the pleasure of exchanging a word with the concluding counsel for the respondent before the commencement of the trial, but I think I might venture to ask him whether he had never, in familiar conversation, expressed opinions quite as derogatory to the character and attainments of judges as those uttered by Mr. Freeman in relation to Judge Livermore. And who would endure it, that for such a conversation the country should lose the distinguished professional services of that gentleman, and his family be deprived of his exertions for their support (if they depend on those exertions, which I hope they do not)? Yet this case has been gravely cited to prove that Judge Peck had a right to punish Mr. Lawless by suspension.

"As to the case from Tennessee, it probably arose from some misapprehension of the nature of the proceeding against Mr. Darby. The supreme court of that State, in their opinion, contend that according to the doctrine of the English books he had been guilty of a contempt in publishing a libel against them; but, instead of inflicting upon him fine and imprisonment, the only appropriate punishment for a contempt, they ordered his name to be stricken from the roll of attorneys.

"(Mr. Grundy said there was no proceeding in that case as for a contempt. Mr. Darby was stricken from the roll on motion.)

"Yes, sir; but the court placed it on the ground of a contempt. I understand that in that State the law gives to courts the express power to strike attorneys from the rolls; but whether in this case they exercised it properly, I neither know nor care. It can have no influence upon the present trial.

"What was the character of the libel against the court does not appear from the report of the case; but, from what I have heard, I entertain no doubt it was of a very aggravated nature.

"It is worthy of remark that the court rested their power upon a provision in the constitution of Tennessee similar to that contained in the constitution of Pennsylvania, which was used to shield C. J. McKean and the other judges in the case of Passmore. The bill of rights in both States declares that the accused shall not 'be deprived of his life, liberty, or property, but by the judgment of h.s peers or the law of the land.'

"But in concluding this part of my argument I would again observe that not a single case has been produced from England (and if the counsel could have found one they certainly would have urged it) in which the court of King's Bench or any other court of that country ever attempted to strike an attorney from the rolls for publishing anything derogatory to the court.

"Having thus shown that the respondent has violated the Constitution and laws of the country, I shall now proceed to discuss my second general proposition, which was that he has done so with a criminal intention. This necessarily leads me into a discussion of all the material facts and circumstances of the case as they have appeared in evidence."

THE PASSAMAQUODDY PROJECT—WHAT IT IS AND WHY—BY PASSAMAQUODDY PUBLIC RELATIONS ASSOCIATION

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to incorporate therein a short article dealing with the Passamaquoddy project.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by the Passamaquoddy Public Service Relations Association, dealing with the Passamaquoddy project:

The public relations board of the Passamaquoddy power project appreciates very much this opportunity to talk to you frankly about Quoddy. It means opportunity to state some true facts about the project—opportunity to offset certain widely circulated publicity that is both unfair and incorrect. Throughout we will try to confine ourselves to actual facts, to statements unbiased either by overenthusiasm or resentment.

In the last few months Quoddy seems to have been made the target for every sort of comment, ranging from careless ridicule to downright hostility. From one angle, at least, all this is rather encouraging. Looking back through history you will find that every new and amazing feat of human ingenuity that contributed vastly to human progress has passed through just this same phase of doubt, scorn, and ridicule. For example, the first locomotive, the flying machine, the talking machine. As to engineering projects, recall Niagara, the Union Pacific Railroad, the Panama Canal. All these in the early days of their development aroused storms of doubt and ridicule. The day after its completion the trans-Atlantic cable drew this editorial comment from one of the country's leading dailies: "Now that it's completed, what are they going to do with it?"

In a moment we'll get down to Quoddy facts. But first let's give a recent instance of such publicity on Quoddy.

Within the last 2 weeks a certain periodical published in Washington, and holding evident appeal to the rural sections, carried an article on Quoddy that tied it in to milking cows by the moon. It carried a map of Quoddy, claimed to be the magazine's own special map, showing for the first time the exact set-up of the Passamaquoddy power project. The map bore very little resemblance to the project, either in layout or in working principle. For instance, it showed a strange power-house dam 4 miles long that simply does not exist. The map's outline was incorrect. It showed a lake never heard of. The bulk of statements in the article itself showed not only complete lack of information about Quoddy history or background but of simple international geography.

Before we go on, let us outline, briefly as possible, the main points of Quoddy history. Quoddy was originated by Dexter P. Cooper. His brother, Col. Hugh Cooper, is probably the foremost hydroelectric engineer in the world. Together with his brother, Dexter P. Cooper has been connected with some of the biggest hydroelectric developments known—Niagara, Keokuk on the Mississippi, Muscle Shoals, the Dneiperstroy in Russia. Quoddy is over 10 years old. Begun as an international project, it involved waters on both sides the international boundary. Its State of Maine charter was granted in 1925, its Canadian charter about the same time. A few years later the job was reengineered to involve American waters only. Since then Quoddy has been an all-American project, with provision made, however, to extend this into the original international plan, if this later became possible. Work was progressing steadily under the all-American plan, when came the stock crash of 1929. This, with the ensuing depression, resulted in laying Quoddy temporarily aside.

In 1933 Quoddy's founder was in Russia supervising completion of the Dneiperstroy, the Russian project referred to. This completed, he returned to America and took up the matter of Quoddy with P. W. A. P. W. A. admitted its engineering, but did not see it as a private-interest venture. It was later offered to the Government as a reconstruction feature, slanted mainly at relief. The administration sent Secretary Ickes to Eastport to investigate. Secretary Ickes expressed himself as much impressed both with the project and the Quoddy country. He volunteered legal and technical assistance from Washington. He told the people not to give up their fight for Quoddy. Quoddy was finally approved in connection with the four-billion relief bill. Its allotment was officially announced in May 1935. Work was begun immediately.

Now, let's clear up Quoddy's status to there.

First, its founder's standing in international engineering should at least entitle this project of harnessing the tides to respectful consideration. This man achieved what the engineers of centuries had been trying to do without success. In those early years the project drew interest and support from the entire world. England had been working out a similar scheme on the River Severn; France on the Britanny coast. Passamaquoddy tides represented far more gigantic possibilities than either. Representatives of both these projects have said to the founder of Quoddy: "You lead, we will follow."

Now let's take the State of Maine's attitude. The people of Maine were wholeheartedly behind Quoddy. They are now. Quoddy's initial charter was referred to the people. In direct referendum the people of Maine put Quoddy's charter over by a vote of 10 to 1. Right here please mark this fact: That charter granted Quoddy full authority to ship power out of the State. Quoddy is the only power company in Maine holding that privilege. Quoddy can ship power to other States, and to Canada.

As to who was behind Quoddy in those days—we come now to one of the most convincing arguments in all Quoddy history. In those days Quoddy was sponsored and was being built by four of the leading power interests in America, if not in the world. Now, please don't underestimate that—the biggest names in American power. These interests entered upon the project only after a long period of exhaustive investigation covering its every phase. They were actually building the job. They had bought abutment and land options along the entire 20 miles of its course. A small army of engineers were at work on the preliminaries for over a year. A half million dollars had been spent on the job up to 1929, and depression. Now, why were they building it? Was it not solely because they found in Quoddy the possibility of developing cheap power on a huge scale? In other words, did it not look to them like a feasible and profitable investment?

Now, a brief statement of what has been done since Quoddy was actually begun. Then we'll take up its definite arguments, engineering, cost of power, sale of power, T. V. A., etc.

Quoddy was started in June of last year. A first problem was the matter of housing. A community of 120 houses was built for the housing of the small army of engineers and administrative force. Much has been said and printed about this feature of the project. This movement, however, was absolutely necessary.

Eastport itself had no possible means of caring for a population more than doubled. The building of these houses represented an actual economic investment. Rentals from employees will almost pay the cost of construction by the time the job is finished. Approximately $100,000 has actually been collected for these rentals to date.

And now, is it necessary to mention love seats and grandfather clocks? Press report on this has been absurd and unfair. As a bit of publicity we'll admit that grandfather clocks and love seats in connection with Quoddy were fatally irresistible. Actually, there were two tall clocks, cheap clocks, in one of the dormitories. Privately, just between you and me, you wouldn't really suffer to own one. And that goes for the simple maple settees, that were "love seats" only in the catalogs. The paintings of Old Masters cost 25 cents, $1.04 framed. Both buildings and furnishings of Quoddy village represent simplicity almost to bareness. Come and see for yourself.

At present Quoddy is going ahead briskly and actively. Two smaller dams are practically completed. Initial work on the great dams, involving railroad spurs, docks, excavations, rock fills, are well under way.

All right, now we come to the main points of Quoddy argument, over which there has been so much controversy.

First, Quoddy's engineering: It has been reported widely that the whole scheme of Quoddy was indefensible from an engineering standpoint. As a matter of fact, in all Quoddy history we can find no actual official doubt as to its soundness. Quoddy engineering has been subjected to the most exhaustive investigation all along the line. Years ago the War Department of the United States passed on its engineering. Two years ago, even P. W. A. conceded its engineering. If Dexter P. Cooper's own standing as an engineer holds no weight, may we offer one final argument along this line that must be convincing to everyone? It is this: Can it reasonably be supposed that the War Department of the United States, which has constructed some of the outstanding engineering jobs of American history, would undertake to build any project of which the engineering was doubtful or unsound?

Next: Cost of power.

The great question from power sources is, What is to be the cost of power? This we cannot answer. Now, just a minute. We cannot answer this question simply because it cannot be answered by anyone at the present stage of things. Due to many reasons, chiefly reasons of economy, the details of Quoddy construction changed somewhat from original plans. Certain details of final construction are still under discussion. Cost of power depends on cost of construction. For this reason it is not possible for anyone to definitely say at present just what will be the kilowatt cost of power.

Also, in the case of Quoddy, other elements enter into the cost of power. It has been intimated that part of Quoddy's construction cost would be charged to relief, part to defense, part to power. If this is so, the eventual cost of power can only be determined when the job is done—and by higher authorities than can be approached on the subject. One answer, however, can be made definitely here and now. Even with everything considered, Quoddy power will be cheaper than Eastport power. In connection with industrial development at source of supply, this is paramount.

Now, the sale of power.

The one great question hurled at Quoddy since the beginning is, What are they going to do with the power? In reply to this question let us make some brief statements which are facts. Mr. Cooper is a member of the National Power Policy Committee. He and his staff have been constituted a department to look up sale for power. Mr. Cooper states that in the last few weeks he has interested big industry in all the power the project would have to dispose of under present plans. The bulk of this has been negotiated for by big chemical interests alone located in three different sections of the country. In passing, this same interest of big industry happened when Quoddy was active before. Scouts of big industry from far and wide came to look up details as to possible location. Given competitive-priced power, the concerns mentioned are attracted to the Quoddy section by advantages of low-priced lands, attractive labor conditions, and more than all by the great advantages of salt-water transportation. These statements may not be discredited.

T. V. A.

The question has been asked, What bearing has T. V. A. on Quoddy? The answer is: none whatever. T. V. A. is a federally controlled project. Quoddy is intended as a State project. The intent of the administration was to loan to the State of Maine the necessary money to build—the project, on completion, to be operated by a Maine authority. The principle involved would be in the manner of a lease—the State to make certain returns to the Government only when the project should be self-sustaining to that extent. The State of Maine is not and would not be obligated for the repayment of funds in any way.

At present a new bill has been drafted by representatives of the Government itself for presentation at the next session of legislature. The provisions of this bill are so drafted as to safeguard every best interest of the people of Maine, with provisions so drawn as to be entirely satisfactory to the existing Maine power companies. In this connection Quoddy will not and cannot invade the rights or territory of existing power companies to their detriment. Quoddy is prevented from this by every restriction, legal and otherwise. For this reason, no single stockholder in any existing power company will lose a penny because of Quoddy.

Some interested inquirer has asked: "Why no mention of transmission lines for Quoddy?" Answer: Under present plans—covering industrial development at the source of supply, and also sale to existing public utility lines—extensive transmission lines may not be necessary, at least for some time.

Now may we offer some interesting data of our own.

There are 38 Federal dams in the United States. All the others are on rivers. Consequently their power output is affected by floods and droughts. Quoddy, damming the tides, can estimate its actual power output with absolute accuracy 10, 20, 100 years from any given hour. All the other 37 dams are designed for sectional development of the country. It is the opinion of high authority that Quoddy would be on a self-sustaining basis far earlier than some of the great dams in the West. Why leave Quoddy out?

Here are some of the other advantages held by Quoddy. Quoddy is located on tidewater on one of the three finest harbors in the country, open all the year round. Eastport is nearer to Europe than any other town in the United States. So located, it is easily and cheaply accessible to the basic raw materials of the world. Thus it holds great advantages over Niagara in this respect.

Quoddy is designed to achieve the permanent rehabilitation of eastern Maine. Already it has meant a wonderful benefit along the line of Maine relief. Upward of 5,000 workers were employed. These workers were reported to have sent their money home almost to a man. In fact, the bulk of Quoddy money goes out of Eastport itself, goes all over New England in fact. The local post office reports an average of $2,000 in money orders daily. Figures secured from headquarters show that Quoddy has paid to the city of Bangor, for instance, almost half a million dollars in labor and supplies. The city of Portland section, including outside contracts, has profited by almost a million. In the city of Boston, to 171 concerns Quoddy has paid $847,287.29 up to March 30. Accounts not yet paid will bring this to over a million. All this exclusive of labor, exclusive of huge outside contracts.

In closing, here's an odd one—we hope you get all it means: The question has been asked in withering accusation, "Why doesn't this project of Quoddy come out in the open?" The answer is so simple as to be staggering: Quoddy—didn't—have—the—gate money. By the open is meant publicity. To get into the press with favorable publicity Quoddy must run the gantlet of politics and power. Direct publicity costs money. Quoddy, of itself, the last 2 or 3 years has had no money. Naturally the Federal Government makes no provision for such activity. What favorable publicity on Quoddy has leaked through into the open, has been wrung out of the situation by a group of local individuals, men who were compelled to pass the hat for gas, stamps, and printer's ink.

And so we have tried to give you the true facts about Quoddy. In return, why not be fair? Eastern Maine has been licked—badly. Boulder Dam, Grand Coulee, all the other big projects are designed to rehabilitate their own sections, the same as Quoddy. But none of these has been attacked and ridiculed like the Quoddy project. Why not be fair?

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 3531. An act to amend the act entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes", approved May 15, 1928; to the Committee on Flood Control.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 12037. An act relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced providing for the control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 713. An act granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear the case of David A. Wright; and

S. 929. An act for the relief of the Southern Products Co.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. BOILEAU, for the balance of the week, on account of illness.

To Mr. HARTLEY, for the balance of this week, on account of illness.

To Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana, for 2 weeks, on account of official business.

To Mr. UTTERBACK, for 8 days, on account of important official business.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE JOHN T. BUCKBEE

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, word has just been received of the death this afternoon of our colleague, JOHN T. BUCKBEE, of Illinois. I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 495

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN T. BUCKBEE, a Representative from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the committee in the morning.

The Clerk will report the remaining part of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, April 24, 1936, at 11 a. m.

COMMITTEE HEARING

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

The Committee on the Public Lands will meet at 10 a. m. tomorrow, Friday, April 24, 1936, to consider the bill (H. R. 7086) to establish Mount Olympus National Park in State of Washington, and for other purposes. The hearing to be considered in the caucus room of old House Office Building.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

809. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 20, 1936, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Woodmont Harbor, Conn., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

810. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 20, 1936, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Crooked and Indian Rivers, Mich., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

811. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 20, 1936, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Trask, Miami, Kilchis, and Wilson Rivers, Oreg., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

812. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 20, 1936, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Delaware River, between Easton and Stroudsburg, Pa., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

813. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 20, 1936, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Winter Harbor, Va., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

814. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 22, 1936, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Savannah River at Augusta, Ga., with a view of extending the present revetment work to the top of the levee and prevent erosion interfering with the navigation of the improved channel, authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved July 3, 1930; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

815. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated April 22, 1936, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of lower Altamaha River and Darien Harbor, Ga., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. MURDOCK: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 11218. A bill to provide for the disposition of tribal funds now on deposit or later placed to the credit of the Crow Tribe of Indians, Montana, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 2482). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WALTER: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 12162. A bill to create an additional division of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi to be known as the Hattiesburg division; without amendment (Rept. No. 2483). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WEAVER: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 11926. A bill to provide for a term of court at Durham, N. C.; without amendment (Rept. No. 2484). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. AYERS: Committee on Indian Affairs. S. 2849. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Wellpinit School District No. 49, Stevens County, Wash., for the construction of a public-school building to be available for Indian children of the Spokane Reservation; without amendment (Rept. No. 2485). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. AYERS: Committee on Indian Affairs. S. 3372. An act to provide funds for cooperation with the public-school district at Hays, Mont., for construction and improvement of public-school building to be available for Indian children; without amendment (Rept. No. 2486). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DELANEY: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 10129. A bill authorizing an appropriation for the development of a naval air base at Tongue Point, Oreg.; with amendment (Rept. No. 2488). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 11369. A bill to authorize the construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the Navy; with amendment (Rept. No. 2489). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COCHRAN: Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. H. R. 12397. A bill to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the completion of the bridges in the San Francisco Bay area; without amendment (Rept. No. 2490). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. HILL of Alabama: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 190. A bill granting authority to the Secretary of War to license the use of a certain parcel of land situated in Fort Brady Military Reservation to Ira D. MacLachlan Post, No. 3, the American Legion, for 15 years; with amendment (Rept. No. 2487). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DARDEN: Committee on Naval Affairs. S. 158. An act authorizing the President to present a medal in the name of Congress to Johannes F. Jensen; without amendment (Rept. No. 2491). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. McFARLANE: Committee on Naval Affairs. S. 2517. An act to provide for the advancement on the retired list of the Navy of Walter M. Graesser, a lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy, retired; without amendment (Rept. No. 2492). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MAAS: Committee on Naval Affairs. S. 3581. An act for the relief of Henry Thornton Meriwether; without amendment (Rept. No. 2493). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12383) granting an increase of pension to Virgil O. Adams, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. EVANS: A bill (H. R. 12443) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent silver pieces in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. GREEVER: A bill (H. R. 12444) to amend section 5, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to provide for the admission of the State of Wyoming into the Union, and for other purposes", approved July 10, 1890; to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. MORAN: A bill (H. R. 12445) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Maine, at or near Isle au Haut, Knox County; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. DOXEY: A bill (H. R. 12446) to promote sustained yield forest management, in order thereby (a) to stabilize communities, forest industries, employment, and taxable forest wealth; (b) to assure a continuous and ample supply of forest products; and (c) to secure the benefits of forests in regulation of water supply and stream flow, prevention of soil erosion, amelioration of climate, and preservation of wildlife; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH: A bill (H. R. 12447) to amend certain provisions of the banking laws relating to the administrative powers of the Comptroller of the Currency, the conversion of State banks into national banks, the payment of dividends on common stock of national banks, and the election and duties of shareholders' agents, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. DICKSTEIN: Resolution (H. Res. 492) to provide 1 legislative day for consideration of certain bills reported from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. McLEOD: Resolution (H. Res. 493) requesting the President of the United States to transmit to the House of Representatives the report submitted to the Administrator of the Works Progress Administration by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson upon completion of his term as New York City Administrator of the Works Progress Administration; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. GILCHRIST: Resolution (H. Res. 494) providing for the consideration of H. R. 10101; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CHANDLER: A bill (H. R. 12448) for the relief of Burton P. Cordle; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COOLEY: A bill (H. R. 12449) for the relief of Melvin Andrews; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DARDEN: A bill (H. R. 12450) for the relief of Lt. David E. Carlson, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. DRIVER: A bill (H. R. 12451) for the relief of the dependents of W. R. Dyess; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL: A bill (H. R. 12452) granting an increase of pension to Felix Shaser; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GREEVER: A bill (H. R. 12453) for the relief of Francesco Kovach, alias Frank Kovach, alias Joe Kalister; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

10768. By Mr. SISSON: Petition of residents of New York City and vicinity, urging passage of House bill 9216, the National Income and Credit Act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

10769. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Daughters of the American Revolution; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE

FRIDAY, APRIL 24, 1936

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God and Heavenly Father, whose creative spirit is the source of all our aspirations, the guardian of our destinies: We thank Thee for the glory of this, another day, and as we set our faces toward our work, deepen, we pray Thee, our sense of oneness with Thee, that we may rejoice alike in the richness of our corporate life and in the sternness of our personal responsibility.

Grant unto these, Thy servants, insight, that instrument by which high spirits call the future from its cradle and the past out of its grave, that this day may be fruitful in permanent achievement for the welfare of our country.

Do Thou release all those whom a heavy weight of years hath chained and bound and raise up those who fall upon the thorns of life, that Thy children everywhere may be renewed by joyous thoughts of immortality which sometimes sleep but cannot die, as they are folded within their own eternity.

And when the sun is set at eventide and we go to our long home to meet Thy face, grant that this may be our requiem: "Peace, peace! He is not dead, he doth not sleep. He hath but wakened from the dream of life."

We ask it in the name and for the sake of Him who is the resurrection and the life, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, April 23, 1936, when, on request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

COMMENDATION OF COAST GUARD

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk a short letter, which I ask the clerk to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

UNITED FRUIT CO.,
New York, N. Y., April 23, 1936.

Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND,
United States Senator from New York,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We wish to draw your attention to another incident of excellent service rendered by the Coast Guard.

At 11:07 a. m., April 17, when the vessel was about 174 miles from Norfolk, we received a message from the United Mail steamship Veragua indicating that Second Officer Boyd had a ruptured appendix and required immediate hospitalization. The Coast Guard were notified and their cutter and plane service effected the transfer of the man to the Norfolk Hospital where an operation was performed at 4:30 p. m. the same day.

It is our sincere belief that the Coast Guard saved the life of Mr. Boyd, and we wish to express our appreciation of their prompt and efficient service.

Yours very truly,

H. HARRIS ROBSON.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think we take pride in the achievements of the Coast Guard and in the bravery of the personnel of that fine organization. So it seems to me proper that a record should be made of the feeling of the steamship line involved in the case referred to in the letter.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AIRPORT COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] as the members on the part of the Senate of the District of Columbia Airport Commission, created under the act to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia, approved April 21, 1936.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of the Common Council of the City of Detroit, Mich., favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 12243) to release political subdivisions of States from the obligation to repay relief funds received under section 1, subsection E, of title I of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, and to eliminate discrimination in the case of certain loans made under that act, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Council of the City of Columbus, Ohio, favoring the prompt enactment of the so-called Wagner-Ellenbogen low-cost housing bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Forty-fifth Continental Congress of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, endorsing the proposed sesquicentennial project to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the completion of the Constitution of the United States by the Constitutional Convention, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ASHURST presented a resolution adopted by members of the executive committee of the Arizona Peace Officers' Association, protesting against the enactment of the bill (S. 2969) to authorize the deportation of criminals, to guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the noncriminal classes, to provide for legalizing the residence in the United States of certain classes of aliens, and for other purposes, or similar legislation, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution of the Bookkeepers', Stenographers', and Accountants' Union, No. 12646, American Federation of Labor, of New York City, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation creating a court of appeals for civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the New York State Board of Housing and the Lower East Side Public Housing Conference of New York City, N. Y., favoring the enactment of the so-called Wagner-Ellenbogen low-cost housing bill, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of members of the New York Adult Blind Aid Association, of New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 7122) providing for the granting of pensions by the Federal Government to certain blind persons, imposing duties upon the United States Treasurer in connection therewith, providing penalties, and making an appropriation, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens, being employees of the Kensington (Buffalo), N. Y., post office, praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 7688) to provide for the appointment and promotion of substitute postal employees, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 200) to extend the period of suspension of the limitation governing the filing of suit under section 19, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1940) thereon.

Mr. McADOO, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11562) to renew patent no. 25909, relating to the badge of the United States Daughters of 1812, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BLACK, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted a report as indicated:

S. 2114. A bill for the relief of D. E. Woodward and Mrs. Murray A. Hintz; and

S. 2576. A bill for the relief of Manuel D. A. Otero as administrator of the estate of Teresita S. Otero, deceased (Rept. No. 1941).

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4390) to amend the National Defense Act relating to the Medical Administrative Corps, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1942) thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3879) for the relief of James W. Grist, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1943) thereon.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF "ARKANSAS, A STUDY OF ITS GROWTH AND CHARACTERISTICS"

Mr. HAYDEN. From the Committee on Printing I report a resolution, which I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 290) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 10,000 additional copies of Senate Document 191, current session, entitled "Arkansas, a Study of its Growth and Characteristics", be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the document referred to?

Mr. HAYDEN. The document is being issued because of a centennial celebration being held in the State of Arkansas. The document relates to the history and progress of the State of Arkansas.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

COMMEMORATION OF THREE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF HARVARD UNIVERSITY

Mr. BARKLEY. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably, with amendments, Senate Joint Resolution 247, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. It merely authorizes the printing of a special stamp in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the establishment of Harvard University.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it is always proper to read a proposal before asking unanimous consent for its consideration. I am not familiar with the joint resolution, or its contents or purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to its being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read by title.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 247) authorizing and requesting the President to extend to governments and individuals an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of Harvard University, which marked the first formal beginning of higher education in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon desire to have the resolution read at length?

Mr. McNARY. No; the title affords a sufficient outline of its object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendments of the Committee on the Library were, on page 2, line 3, after the word "That", to strike out "when, in the opinion of the President of the United States, it shall be appropriate for him to do so, the President be, and is hereby, authorized and requested to extend to such governments and individuals as he may determine an invitation to unite with"; in line 8, after the words "United States", to insert "unite with Harvard University"; in line 9, before the word "founding", to strike out the word "the" and insert "its", and in the same line, after the word "founding", to strike out "of Harvard University"; and on page 3, line 13, after the word "to", to strike out "such representatives of governments and other persons as may respond to the invitation of the President extended as hereinbefore provided" and insert "the delegates of foreign universities and other foreign learned bodies or individuals attending the celebration as guests of Harvard University."

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was amended as follows and was agreed to:

In the second whereas on page 1, in the second line, after the word "Harvard", to strike out "University" and insert "College"; in the third line, after the word "the", to insert "16th"; in line 5, before the word "in", to strike out the quotation mark; and on page 2, after the word "benefactors", to strike out the quotation mark, and to strike out the following:

Whereas a tercentenary theater to seat some 15,000 persons is being constructed for the occasion by said university; and

The joint resolution as passed is as follows:

Whereas there are to be held at Cambridge, Mass., and at other places during the year 1936 celebrations commemorating the three-hundredth anniversary of the founding of Harvard University, said university being the first college to be established in what are now the United States; and

Whereas, in accordance with resolutions of the president and fellows of Harvard College, there will take place in Cambridge, Mass., on the 16th, 17th, and 18th of September 1936 formal ceremonies of celebration of the tercentenary, in the presence of the governing boards, faculties, students, and alumni of the university, the delegates of other institutions, distinguished guests, and a large number of friends and benefactors; and

Whereas the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the cities of Cambridge and Boston will be officially represented at the ceremonies; and

Whereas Harvard University endeavors to foster and maintain the ideals of truth and freedom so dear to Americans: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Government and people of the United States unite with Harvard University in a fitting and appropriate observance of the three hundredth anniversary of its founding, which marked the formal beginning of higher education in the United States.

SEC. 2. There is hereby established a commission to be known as the United States Harvard University Tercentenary Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission) to be composed of 15 commissioners, as follows: The President of the United States and four persons to be appointed by him, the President of the Senate and four Members of the Senate to be appointed by said President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and four Members of the House to be appointed by said Speaker.

SEC. 3. The commission, on behalf of the United States, shall cooperate with representatives of Harvard University, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and the cities of Cambridge and Boston in the appropriate observance of such anniversary, and shall extend appropriate courtesies to the delegates of foreign universities and other foreign learned bodies or individuals attending the celebration as guests of Harvard University.

SEC. 4. The members of the commission shall serve without compensation and shall select a chairman from among their number, but the President of the United States shall be designated the "honorary chairman" of the commission.

SEC. 5. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 to be expended by the commission for expenses, including actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, incurred while discharging its functions under this resolution. The commission shall have power to select, hire, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees as shall be necessary for the performance of its duties without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to employment or compensation of officers or employees of the United States.

SEC. 6. Any vacancies occurring in the membership of the commission shall be filled by the President of the United States.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the recognition of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of Harvard College and of the beginning of higher education in the United States, and providing for the representation of the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the anniversary."

CONDITION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCERS—EXTENSION OF TIME FOR REPORT

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I report back without amendment House Joint Resolution 553, extending the time for the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation and file final report with respect to agricultural income and the financial and economic condition of agricultural producers generally.

The resolution merely provides for an extension of Public Resolution 61 of the last session of Congress, which directed the Federal Trade Commission to make a study and investigation of "agricultural income and the financial and economic condition of agricultural producers generally."

Under that resolution the Commission was directed to make a final report to Congress not later than July 1, 1936. Due to the failure of passage of the deficiency appropriation bill in the last session, the money for the investigation was not actually appropriated until February 11, 1936. It has not been possible for the Commission to assemble this material for a report by July 1 and the resolution merely extends this date to October 1, 3 months. No additional money is appropriated and no additional authority is given the Commission hereunder.

I ask that a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 2, 1936.

The Honorable ELLISON D. SMITH,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

In the matter of House Joint Resolution 553, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session. Joint resolution extending the time for the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation and file final report with respect to agricultural income and the financial and economic condition of agricultural producers generally.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 1, 1936, enclosing copy of House Joint Resolution 553, which passed the House of Representatives March 30, 1936, in which you state that you will welcome a report on the legislation as soon as the Commission has had an opportunity to give it consideration.

In reply to your letter, I beg to state that the resolution is for the purpose of extending the time within which the Commission is directed to complete the investigation and to file final report, with recommendations for legislation, from July 1, 1936, to October 1, 1936, and the preamble to the resolution states the reasons for the proposed extension of time. The resolution further provides that any unexpended balance of the appropriation of $150,000 made in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1936 for the purpose of making the investigation and the report thereon be also made available for like purposes to and including October 1, 1936.

For the reasons stated in the preamble, the Commission recommends the passage of the joint resolution.

I desire to thank you for referring the matter to the Commission for its consideration.

By direction of the Commission.

CHARLES H. MARCH, Chairman.

Mr. WHEELER. I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire if the joint resolution has passed the House?

Mr. WHEELER. It has passed the House.

Mr. McNARY. Has it been reported favorably by the proper committee of the Senate?

Mr. WHEELER. It has been reported favorably without amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I understand its only purpose is to extend the time within which the Federal Trade Commission may submit a report on the subject matter.

Mr. WHEELER. It extends the time for 3 months, from July to October 1.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Whereas the Federal Trade Commission was authorized under the provisions of Public Resolution No. 61, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, approved August 27, 1935, to make an investigation with respect to agricultural income and the financial and economic condition of agricultural producers generally; and

Whereas the said Commission was directed to present an interim report to the Congress on January 1, 1936, describing the progress made and the status of its work under said public resolution, and a final report with recommendations for legislation not later than July 1, 1936; and

Whereas it appears that the appropriation for conducting this investigation carried in the deficiency appropriation bill failed of passage in the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, and was not actually made until February 11, 1936, although the resolution authorizing the investigation was introduced some 18 months prior to the date specified for the completion of the investigation and report, and was approved August 27, 1935; and

Whereas the extensive information called for under the terms of the said public resolution has caused frequent and numerous requests for extensions of time upon the part of persons from whom such information has had to be obtained, such extensions amounting to from 1 to 3 months in addition to 30 days' time originally allowed by the Commission; and

Whereas it is learned that much of the necessary information cannot be secured by July 1, 1936; and

Whereas it appears that it will be possible for the Commission to secure and present much more comprehensive data and to present a much more thorough and accurate study and report upon the same if the time within which it is directed to complete its investigation and to submit its final report thereon with recommendations for legislation be extended: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Federal Trade Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to proceed under the public resolution aforesaid and is directed to complete the investigation thereunder and to submit a final report to the Congress with recommendations for legislation not later than October 1, 1936.

It is hereby further provided that any unexpended balance of the appropriation of the $150,000 made in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1936 in accordance with the authority contained in Public Resolution No. 61, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, is hereby made available for like purposes to and including October 1, 1936.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 4531) for the relief of Alfred Y. Davenport; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4541) to reserve certain lands in the State of Utah for the Shivwitz, Koosharem, and Kanosh Bands of Paiute Indians; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

EDITORIAL ON RITTER IMPEACHMENT TRIAL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD an editorial which was published in the Memphis Commercial Appeal of April 21, 1936, relating to the Ritter impeachment case.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Commercial Appeal, Memphis, Tenn., Apr. 21, 1936]

A WARNING TO JUDGES

Cumbersome though the process may be, the United States Senate, in returning a judgment against Judge Ritter, served notice upon Federal judges that general unfitness for office is quite as serious as a specific misdemeanor. In fact, the main conclusion to be drawn from the Ritter conviction is that while a judge may err in isolated cases, this will be overlooked if his general temperament and integrity are not too conspicuously involved.

Judge Ritter was acquitted of charges setting out particular offenses, but was caught on an article which enabled Senators to weigh his fitness and consider that fitness in connection with its effect upon the administration of justice.

Ritter should have never been named to the Federal bench in the first place. He lived in Colorado for 30 years, and showed up in Florida in 1925. A bare 3 years later President Coolidge named him to the bench. It was a political appointment and smacked too much of the carpetbaggism of other days to be a popular appointment. However, a vigorous and wholesome conduct of the court would have overcome all prejudices; but from the testimony presented to the Senate the conduct of the Court was quite the reverse of this.

Ritter's conviction is the fourth in the history of the country, the twelfth impeachment to be tried.

Already there is a movement on foot to simplify the process by providing that testimony may be taken by a select senatorial committee and presented to the whole body with such briefs and arguments as may be necessary. It seems out of date to tie up the Senate with details of the trial, even to the taking of testimony. This is especially true since the Senate sits, not as a jury, where it might be confined to certain rules, but as a Court where it is the sole judge of the law and the facts.

While the Constitution recites that judges may be impeached for the high crimes and misdemeanors, it has been generally conceded that such crimes need not be conclusively shown. This was evidenced by the Ritter judgment. This is a warning to judges that they will be held to a strict accountability in spite of the life term to which they are appointed or of the rare instances in which they are called to answer.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. JOHN T. BUCKBEE, late a Representative from the State of Illinois, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4335) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the centennial celebration of Cleveland, Ohio, to be known as the Great Lakes Exposition, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12098) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. CARY, Mr. TARVER, Mr. McANDREWS, Mr. RABAUT, Mr. BACON, and Mrs. KAHN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

CONSIDERATION OF UNOBJECTED BILLS ON THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no resolutions coming over from a previous day, under the unanimous-consent agreement the calendar is in order for the consideration of unobjected bills.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate consider at this time Senate Resolution 229, requesting the Civil Service Commission to furnish the Senate certain information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised by the parliamentary clerk that there are no resolutions coming over from a previous day.

Mr. CAREY. Can I not move to have the resolution considered?

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order that under the agreement entered into yesterday the Senate must proceed at this time to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I was not present at the close of the session yesterday, but I thought we would have the ordinary routine morning business.

Mr. ROBINSON. We have had it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate has transacted its routine morning business.

Mr. McNARY. I am not familiar with the position taken by my colleague from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. I know his resolution does not come over from a previous day, but is on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution is on the table at the present time.

Mr. McNARY. It would require a motion to proceed to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would.

Mr. McNARY. Is the motion of the Senator from Wyoming excluded by virtue of the unanimous-consent agreement?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, when the Senate concluded the routine morning business today it was to proceed to consider unobjected bills on the calendar. The clerk will state the first bill in order on the calendar.

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION AND STEAMBOAT INSPECTION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8599) to provide for a change in the designation of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, to create a marine casualty investigation board and increase efficiency in administration of the steamboat-inspection laws, and for other purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it will be recalled that some days ago we partially perfected this bill when the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] said he wished to prepare an amendment to it. He has done so, and the amendment is entirely satisfactory to the Commerce Committee. I inquire if the Senator from Vermont has a copy of it?

Mr. GIBSON. I have a copy of the amendment and desire to offer it at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask to have the amendment read?

Mr. GIBSON. I should like to have the amendment stated. I send a copy of it to the desk.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I may say the proposal is to strike out section 4, on page 3, and insert the language presented by the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, after line 19, it is proposed to strike out down to and including line 13, on page 4, being section 4, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 4450. (a) There is hereby created a marine casualty investigation board, which board is authorized and directed, under such rules as such board may prescribe, to investigate and prepare written reports on all marine accidents and disasters resulting in loss of life and involving either any merchant vessel of the United States, or any ocean-going commercial craft of any sort whether designed to travel in the air or on or in the water, and, in the discretion of the board, any other marine accident or disaster, in order to determine whether any incompetence, misconduct, negligence, unskillfulness, or willful violation of law on the part of any licensed officer, pilot, seaman, employee, owner, or agent of such owner of any vessel involved in such accident or disaster, or any inspector, officer of the Coast Guard, or other officer or employee of the United States, or any other person, caused or contributed to the cause of such accident or disaster. The board shall consist of a chairman and two other members; the chairman shall be an officer or employee of the Department of Justice (learned in maritime laws) designated by the Attorney General; one member shall be a supervising inspector of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation designated by the Secretary of Commerce; and the other member shall be an officer of the United States Coast Guard designated by the Secretary of the Treasury. Neither the chairman nor any of the other members shall receive any salary by virtue of service on the board in addition to that received from the department to which he is attached. All reports shall be made to the Secretary of Commerce and such reports shall be public records and be open to inspection at reasonable times by any person. Copies of such reports shall be sent to the Attorney General and to the Secretary of the Treasury. The findings of this board with respect to the conduct of any officer, pilot, or person now or hereafter licensed by the Department of Commerce, and the record upon which such findings are based, shall be admissible in evidence in proceedings before the proper local board of inspectors for the revocation or suspension of the license of such officer, pilot, or person.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill, including the reason for changing the name, and also an explanation of the amendment which has just been tendered. It seems to me the bill proposes to create an organization within an existing organization which is competent to deal with the subject.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to promote safety at sea. Senators are aware that a great many newspaper articles are being published these days about the failure of the Federal Government and the Department of Commerce to provide adequate safeguards. The purpose of the bill is to enlarge somewhat the function of the Bureau of Navigation. It is proposed to change the name in order that it may conform more with similar organizations of other countries.

The amendment which has been presented by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is, in my judgment, a wise amendment, because it provides for a permanent board in the Department instead of one created or appointed in each instance to deal with the accident. The trouble with the old plan was that the very department which was considered responsible for the defects in providing safety devices was the department which was to pass upon the accident and its cause. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont provides for a permanent board to investigate accidents, which board is to be presided over by a representative of the Department of Justice. That is very wise, because criminal acts are usually involved in these accidents. It is provided that the Department of Justice, the Department of Commerce, and the United States Coast Guard shall have representatives to constitute the board. This is without expense to the Government. It is simply an interdepartmental board.

Another matter which I wish to mention is that as this bill came to us the appointments in the Bureau were to be made without regard to the civil-service law. The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] presented an amendment placing them under the civil-service law, and the committee is of the view that that should be done. If the Senator from Utah is satisfied with the amendment presented by the Senator from Vermont, I shall suggest the other amendment relating to civil service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, are employees to be put under the civil service?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the members of the board, too?

Mr. COPELAND. No; not the members of the board. They will be outstanding members of the Government—the Attorney General, the Secretary of Commerce, and the head of the Coast Guard. They are not under the civil service, of course. The other amendment relates to other employees, who should be under the civil service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that the amendment on page 2, in lines 3 and 4, be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. Now, I move, on page 2, in line 3, to strike out the words "without regard to the civil-service rules and regulations."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the words "without regard to the civil-service rules and regulations", so as to make the sentence read:

There shall be seven supervising inspectors, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask now that the committee amendment on page 3, lines 3 and 4, be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 3, after the word "commerce", it is proposed to insert the words "without regard to the civil-service clause or the Classification Act of 1925, as amended", so as to read:

SEC. 3. That there shall be in the field service of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation in the Department of Commerce without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1925, as amended, not to exceed 10 principal traveling inspectors to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, the compensation of such principal traveling inspectors to be fixed by the Secretary of Commerce at not to exceed $5,000 per annum.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 4, to strike out:

(b) For the purpose of investigating marine casualties not involving loss of life and all cases of acts of incompetency or misconduct or any act in violation of any of the provisions of this title, or of any of the regulations issued thereunder, committed by any licensed officer or holder of a certificate of service while acting under the authority of his license or certificate of service, whether or not any of such acts are committed in connection with any marine casualty, the Director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, is hereby authorized and directed to appoint marine boards, each consisting of two principal traveling inspectors and a supervising inspector of the said Bureau.

And insert:

(b) The Secretary of Commerce shall establish rules and regulations for the investigation of marine casualties and accidents not involving loss of life, any act in violation of any of the provisions of this title or of any of the regulations issued thereunder, and all cases of acts of incompetency or misconduct committed by any licensed officer or holder of a certificate of service while acting under the authority of his license or certificate of service, whether or not any of such acts are committed in connection with any marine casualty or accident. The Secretary of Commerce shall classify marine casualties and accidents not involving loss of life according to the gravity thereof and in making such classification the Secretary shall give consideration to the extent of injuries to persons, the extent of property damage, the dangers actual or potential which such marine casualties or accidents may create to the safety of navigation or commerce. All such marine casualties or accidents classified as serious shall be investigated by a marine board appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, consisting of two principal traveling inspectors and a supervising inspector of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation. Marine casualties or accidents classified as less serious shall be investigated by a marine board consisting of representatives of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation designated by the Director thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 12, to strike out:

(d) Immediately after the occurrence of a marine casualty, the appropriate board shall conduct an investigation into any acts of incompetency or misconduct or any acts in violation of any of the provisions of this title, or of any of the regulations issued thereunder, committed by any licensed officer acting under authority of his license, or by any chief or assistant steward, purser, or radio operator acting under authority of a certificate of service issued to him by the board of local inspectors of steam vessels, or by any seaman; and into all circumstances surrounding such marine casualty, and shall determine, so far as possible, the cause of such casualty, the persons responsible therefor, and whether or not United States Government employees charged with the inspection of the vessel or vessels involved and with the examination and licensing of the officers thereof have properly performed their duties in connection with such inspection, examination, and licensing.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

(d) All acts in violation of any of the provisions of this title or of any of the regulations issued thereunder, whether or not committed in connection with any marine casualty or accident, and all acts of incompetency or misconduct, whether or not committed in connection with any marine casualty or accident, committed by any licensed officer acting under authority of his license or by any chief or assistant steward, purser, radio operator, electrician, able seaman, or lifeboatman acting under authority of a certificate of service issued to him by the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, and all marine casualties and accidents and the attendant circumstances shall be immediately investigated by the appropriate board as provided in subsection (b) of this section. Such board shall determine, as far as possible, the cause of any such casualty or accident, the persons responsible therefor, and whether or not United States Government employees charged with the inspection of the vessel or the vessels involved and with the examination and licensing of the officers thereof have properly performed their duties in connection with such inspection, examination, and licensing. In all investigations conducted under the authority of this section, a full and complete record of the facts and circumstances shall be submitted to the Director of the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in order that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont may be properly referred to, I move to amend, on page 7, in line 18, by striking out "subsection (b)" and inserting "subsections (a) and (b)", so as to read, "Subsections (a) and (b)."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 13, line 15, after the word "vessels", to insert the words "except as far as existing law places definite responsibility on the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation", so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That approved plans and certificates of the American Bureau of Shipping classed vessels may be accepted by the Director as evidence of the structural efficiency of the hull and the reliability of the machinery of such vessels, except as far as existing law places definite responsibility on the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. On page 13, beginning in line 17, the sentence ending with the word "calculations", in line 24, should be stricken out. I offer that as an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, line 17, it is proposed to strike out the following:

In the case of passenger ships building to class with the American Bureau of Shipping, certificates of the said American Bureau of Shipping certifying to the adequacy of the subdivision arrangement, on the basis of any regulations issued by the Department of Commerce, may be accepted by the Director, subject, however, to the submission to the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation and the approval of the Director of all flooding calculations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 17, after line 4, to strike out "the said extra compensation for overtime services shall be paid by the master, owner, or agent of such vessel to the" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "A fee of $25, for each 8 hours or fraction thereof that an inspector is engaged for overtime, holiday, or Sunday work, shall be paid by the master, owner, or agent of the vessel to the", so as to read:

A fee of $25, for each 8 hours or fraction thereof that an inspector is engaged for overtime, holiday, or Sunday work, shall be paid by the master, owner, or agent of the vessel to the local United States collector of customs or his representative, who shall deposit such collection into the Treasury of the United States to an appropriately designated receipt account.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 19, to insert a new section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 19, line 4, to change the section number from "8" to "9."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2003) to amend section 13 of the act of March 4, 1915, entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea" was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I inquire if this is the general merchant marine bill?

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSFER OF POWDER AND OTHER EXPLOSIVE MATERIALS

The bill (S. 3646) to repeal an act of March 3, 1933, entitled "An act to provide for the transfer of powder and other explosive materials from deteriorated and unserviceable ammunition under the control of the War Department to the Department of Agriculture for use in land clearing, drainage, road building, and other agricultural purposes" was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the transfer of powder and other explosive materials from deteriorated and unserviceable ammunition under the control of the War Department to the Department of Agriculture for use in land clearing, drainage, road building, and other agricultural purposes", approved March 3, 1933, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3154) making it unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to discriminate in price or terms of sale between purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, to prohibit the payment of brokerage or commission under certain conditions, to suppress pseudo-advertising allowances, to provide a presumptive measure of damages in certain cases, and to protect the independent merchant, the public whom he serves, and the manufacturer from whom he buys, from exploitation by unfair competitors was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM H. CLINTON

The bill (H. R. 3604) to place William H. Clinton on the retired list of the Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Over.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection until I make an explanation?

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand the Department opposed the bill and ascertained that it would be vetoed if passed. However, I am willing to hear the Senator's explanation.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, as I understand, William H. Clinton, an enlisted man in the Navy, was advanced to the rank of gunner during the World War and served on the destroyer Sterrett in the war zone.

During a severe storm at sea the personnel and the vessel itself became endangered due to heavy seas breaking over the ship, smashing lifeboats and other fittings about the ship. Clinton volunteered to clear away this wreckage, and while doing so another heavy sea came on board and he was pinned under the wreckage. With great difficulty he was extricated from this wreckage and carried below.

This small vessel carried no doctor, and no mention was made of the injuries received in his health record. However, an entry was made in the ship's log book that he was injured on this occasion. An affidavit to this effect has been furnished by the commanding officer of the vessel.

The Veterans' Administration finds this man to be 60 percent disabled and that the injury was received in line of duty. He is now drawing compensation from the Administration at the rate of $42.80 per month.

Regarding the unfavorable report from the Navy Department, it may be stated that they probably made their report on the medical record in this case—no medical record was made in this case, as the ship carried no doctor—and failed to consider the entry made in the ship's log book.

This bill merely authorizes this man to appear before a Navy retiring board, and he will not be placed on the retired list unless the board finds that he was permanently injured in line of duty.

The Committee on Naval Affairs reported unanimously in favor of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to insert in the RECORD at this point the report of the committee, including a letter from former Secretary of the Navy Adams, and after that shall have been done I will ask that the bill go over.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Report to accompany H. R. 3604

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3604) to place William H. Clinton on the retired list of the Navy, having considered the same, report it to the Senate without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The House report which explains the merits of the bill and also contains the letter from the Secretary of the Navy is hereby made a part of this report.

[H. Rept. No. 601, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

"The Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3604) to place William H. Clinton on the retired list of the United States Navy, having considered the same, report it to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

"A similar bill (H. R. 1845) was reported to the House in the Seventy-second Congress. A similar bill (H. R. 4079) was reported to the House, and passed the House, in the Seventy-third Congress.

"The purpose of this bill is to appoint William H. Clinton a warrant gunner and place him on the retired list as such, provided a naval retiring board finds that he incurred physical disability incident to the naval service while on the active list of the Navy.

"The records of the Navy Department show that after a period of over 8 years' service as an enlisted man, William H. Clinton was appointed a temporary gunner in the Navy on October 13, 1917, to rank from September 24, 1917, and served as such until April 28, 1920, when his resignation was accepted at his own request.

"It was established to the entire satisfaction of the committee that Mr. Clinton was seriously and probably permanently injured on December 17, 1917, while serving on the U. S. S. Sterrett, during a storm at sea, when the wreckage of a lifeboat and life rafts were thrown on his back. Through a mistake, no medical notation was made of this injury, but there was a notation of this fact made on the official log of the Sterrett and affidavits were presented from Captain Simpson and Lieutenant Commander Alexander showing that Clinton was seriously and probably permanently injured at the time. These statements are hereto attached and made a part of this report.

"3. The circumstances, in few words, are as follows:

"(a) A heavy gale was running.

"(b) At about 5 a. m. on the morning of December 17, while laying to, running before the gale, a sea came over and carried away the starboard lifeboat, which was properly secured in her cradle on deck. The same sea also carried away two small life rafts secured on deck. These loosened fragments were a menace to other fittings and possible safety of the ship. Manifestly, this wreckage was also a danger to the crew, should it become necessary to send a man down the deck to relieve the watch in the fireroom or engine room.

"(c) Lieutenant Alexander, Clinton, and I endeavored to clear the wreckage. There were volunteers from the members of the crew of the gun's crew, but it was considered the situation was too dangerous to allow too great a number out of shelter from the seas. While at work endeavoring to clear away the wreckage another sea came over. Lieutenant Alexander and I were able to grab the jackstay on the smokestack, but Clinton, not being near that, stooped down and held onto the fireroom hatch. A spud locker nearby, which had been partially cast adrift by the first sea, fell on Clinton's leg, pinning him to the deck. Another sea came aboard and threw the wreckage of the lifeboat and life rafts on his back.

"(d) It was with great difficulty and danger that Clinton was extracted from the wreckage and carried below. At the time he complained of his back, his right leg, and stomach being very sore.

"(e) During the stress of the weather, the force of which may be realized by the fact that all the boats were lost, the radio shack smashed in, and even both pipes to the oil-settling tanks carried away, a notation in Clinton's medical record was overlooked.

"4. It is a fact, however, that a notation was made in the official log over my signature, as follows:

" 'December 17, 1917. U. S. S. Sterrett.

" '5:15 a. m. starboard whaleboat carried away.

" '5:25 a. m. Gunner (T) W. H. Clinton, U. S. N., injured clearing away wreckage.'

"5. Clinton was laid up for some time and, in my opinion, uncomplainingly went back to duty before he had recovered from the effects of this injury. With his high sense of duty, it was characteristic of him not to complain or even to ask medical advice during the continuance of war, for fear that he might be laid up and not do what he considered his part.

"6. The injury to the spine received on this occasion, not being treated through the following years, naturally became aggravated and I understand giving him a great amount of trouble at the present time.

"7. It is trusted that the Veterans' Bureau will give Clinton the maximum compensation it can for this very deserving case; anything further I can do I will be only too glad to do so.

"G. W. SIMPSON."

"UNITED STATES FLEET,
"AIRCRAFT SQUADRON'S BATTLE FLEET,
"U. S. S. 'SARATOGA',
"Coronado Roads, Calif., May 8, 1929.

"WILLIAM H. CLINTON,
"Roslindale, Mass.

"DEAR CLINTON: I have learned with sincere regret that you have been having trouble from that injury you received while attached to the U. S. S. Sterrett. I also regret that a full and complete record was not made at the time. This was due, of course, to our not having a doctor on board and to the stress of those hectic days which followed.

"The incidents leading up to and following your accident are very vividly stamped on my memory for the reason that, on December 17, 1917, the Sterrett was being punished by seas, the magnitude of which I had never before (or since) seen a ship live in.

"I recall during our struggle with the loose gear on deck that morning the wave which smashed you up with the bread box, etc., also washed me along and after it passed, and not seeing you I feared that you had gone overboard. I was the one who called out "Where is the gunner?" When we got you onto the wardroom cot I was afraid your leg was broken and desired to cut your boot off rather than to compound a fracture.

"During the stress of weather which followed and getting the ship safely to port I am afraid we did not give you the attention and sympathy you deserved at the time, but we did the best we could except to log full and complete report, if, as you say, only the fact that you were injured was logged.

"I kept a personal diary all during the war and have an entry therein concerning the wave that hit us and your and my reception of same and a notation of your injury.

"As I recall your departure from the Sterrett, you still had a stiff leg and back when you left us. I cannot understand why the pharmacist failed to record injury to your back and leg in your medical record.

"As stated above, having you saved from going overboard that morning and due to the fact that you bore your misfortune silently and in a seamanlike manner without complaint are the only reasons I can give as accounting for such a brief entry in the log.

"I am prepared, if necessary, to furnish an affidavit to the effect that you received a severe injury to the leg and back on December 17, 1917, which caused you pain and severe stiffness of body and limb for over a period of 1 week or more (exact time I cannot recall).

"Having served with you under the acid test of war, I know you to be of the type and caliber of a man who would bear your troubles without complaint. If now, as a result of an injury incurred in line of duty, to which I personally assigned you, you are incapacitated, you can be assured that, if advised as to the proper person to address, I will gladly forward any further information dealing on the subject of your injury or relative to your excellent performance of duty while serving with me on the Sterrett.

"With my sincere regret to learn of your misfortune, I am,

"Yours truly,

"J. T. ALEXANDER,

"Lieutenant Commander, United States Navy.

"Some years ago Clinton applied to the Veterans' Bureau for compensation and was rated 70 percent disabled, which rating was changed to 60 percent. He is receiving $42.80 per month.

"The Veterans' Bureau found that his present condition was service connected.

"As a result of these injuries he was operated on at the naval hospital in New York in 1919, and the medical record of the case states that the origin of the trouble was in line of duty. The operation was for appendicitis and hernia.

"The following letter from the Secretary of the Navy sets forth the Navy Department's views of the bill, and is hereby made a part of this report:

"NAVY DEPARTMENT,
"OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
"Washington, D. C., January 26, 1935.

"The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
"House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The report and recommendations of the Navy Department on the bill listed below are the same as those previously submitted to the chairman, House Naval Affairs Committee on the date indicated:

"H. R. 3604, February 5, 1932.

"Sincerely yours,

"CLAUDE A. SWANSON.

"The letter above referred to is as follows:

"WASHINGTON, February 5, 1932.

"CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
"House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Replying further to the committee's letter of December 19, 1931, transmitting the bill (H. R. 1845) to place William H. Clinton on the retired list of the Navy, and requesting the views of the Navy Department thereon, I have the honor to inform the committee as follows:

"The purpose of the bill is to appoint William H. Clinton a warrant gunner and place him on the retired list as such, provided a naval retiring board finds that he incurred physical disability incident to the naval service while on the active list of the Navy.

"The records of the Navy Department show that, after a period of over 8 years' service as an enlisted man, William H. Clinton was appointed a temporary gunner in the Navy on October 13, 1917, to rank from September 24, 1917, and served as such until April 28, 1920, when his resignation was accepted at his own request.

"The only individuals who have been placed on the retired list in the rank temporarily held are those who contracted physical disability in the line of duty during the World War. The Navy Department is not aware of any permanent disability incurred in the service which would entitle Mr. Clinton to retirement, even were he still on the active list of the Navy. Further attention is invited to the fact that in a letter to the Bureau of Navigation dated February 28, 1921, requesting enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force, class 1, Mr. Clinton made the following statement:

"'I am of the opinion that I am physically qualified to perform all the duties of a gunner on active duty at sea.'

"The bill, H. R. 1845, would, if enacted into law, result in an additional cost to the Government of approximately $1,512 per annum.

"In view of the above, the Navy Department recommends against the enactment of the bill H. R. 1845.

"Sincerely yours,

"C. F. ADAMS, Secretary of the Navy."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

The bill (S. 2883) to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories was announced as next in order.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I shall not ask for consideration of the bill under the present order, but it is expected that a motion will be made to make it a special order at an early date. I ask that it go over at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I feel considerable interest in the bill to which the Senator just addressed himself; but, because of confusion in the Chamber, I did not understand the remarks of the Senator. Did he ask that it be made a special order at a later date?

Mr. GEORGE. I did not ask it, but gave notice that it is expected to ask to have it made a special order at an early date. It could hardly be disposed of under the present order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

GOVERNMENT FOR AMERICAN SAMOA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3113) to provide a government for American Samoa, which was read.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, similar bills have passed the Senate three times heretofore. The measure was first introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, the former Senator from Connecticut, Mr. Bingham, having been prepared by a commission, of which I myself was one of the members. Subsequently, I introduced the bill and it was passed; and I think similar bills have passed this body three times. No action has been taken on them in the House of Representatives. I think the bill might very well be passed again.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, may I ask what happened to Senate bill 3113?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been passed.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be returned to the calendar. I was busy with another matter at the time it was reached.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not object to that request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I may say—perhaps it is not quite germane—that similar bills have been before the Senate a number of times. I think most of us are familiar with the measure. It has received the approval of the Senate upon three different occasions.

Mr. COPELAND. At a future time I desire to present some argument relative to the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be returned to the calendar.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 205) providing for disposition of certain cotton held by the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3627) for the relief of Francis Gerrity was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ALLOCATION OF RADIO FACILITIES

The bill (S. 2243) relating to the allocation of radio facilities was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there should be an explanation of that bill. It relates to an important subject.

The Senator who reported the bill is not present at this moment; and I ask that it go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. WHEELER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1652, Senate bill 2243, relating to the allocation of radio facilities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana to return to Senate bill 2243?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, personally I have no objection. There are a number of absentees on this side of the Chamber, however.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that I do not think there is any objection at all to the bill.

Mr. McNARY. There must have been objection, or it would have passed.

Mr. WHEELER. Some Senator objected to it and asked for a statement with reference to it.

Mr. McNARY. May I inquire of the Chair, if the clerk has the record before him, who asked that the bill go over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] asked to have the bill go over.

Mr. WHEELER. I am sure the Senator from Arkansas would have no objection to the bill, because it is a bill which the Communications Commission itself asked to have enacted.

Mr. McKELLAR. My recollection is, if the Senator will yield, that the Senator from Arkansas asked for an explanation of the bill; and as the Senator from Montana was not here at the time, he then asked to have the bill go over.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

The passage of this bill has been recommended by the Communications Commission. I introduced the bill. It came before the Committee on Interstate Commerce and was unanimously reported to the Senate by the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I should be mistaken in my recollection and if the bill should pass, the Senator would not object to a reconsideration if the Senator from Arkansas should desire to have it?

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all. If any Senator desires reconsideration of the bill, I shall not object to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. What is the calendar number of the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. It is Calendar No. 1652.

Mr. KING. What is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. The purpose is to restore the provisions of the original act.

The original act contained practically the same provisions as the bill in question. Later there was an agitation to divide the country into various zones, and to provide that the Commission should allocate radio frequencies only to those particular zones. The engineers of the Commission and the Commission itself since that time have found many difficulties in allocating frequencies to particular zones; and they desire to have the matter left to their discretion, because the zone idea has tied them down on account of the contour of the country in some places, and so forth.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Communications Commission recommend the enactment of the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; the Commission has recommended it in language which I will read. I first read from the report of the committee:

> The legislation is recommended for practical reasons of administration by the Communications Commission, which has found that the drawing of artificial zone lines for guides in allocating radio facilities cannot satisfactorily be applied because of the physical laws governing radio transmission. As a consequence, the policy of Congress, to so distribute radio facilities that every section of the country will be adequately supplied, has been very difficult of effectuating.
>
> On May 23, 1935, the Chairman of the Communications Commission wrote the chairman of your committee as follows:
>
> "With further reference to S. 2243, which was introduced by you March 13, 1935, I beg to advise that this Commission favors its adoption for the following reasons"—

A similar bill was recommended for passage at the last session of Congress, as I recall, by the Communications Commission—

> "The existing law, which S. 2243 seeks to repeal, is contrary to natural laws and has resulted in the concentration of the use of frequencies in centers of population, and the restriction of facilities in sparsely populated States, even though interference consideration would permit the operation of one or more additional stations. Because of the size of the zones provided for by existing law, the distribution required by the Davis amendments has resulted in providing ample broadcast service in small zones and lack of service in large zones. The experience of the Federal Radio Commission and this Commission has proved that the Davis amendment is very difficult of administration and cannot result in an equality of radio broadcasting service.
> "This Commission is, therefore, in hearty accord with and favors the passage of S. 2243."

Let me say to the Senate that when the Davis amendment was adopted, the former Senator from Washington, Mr. Dill, and myself and other Senators from the West were very anxious that the bill should become law. Subsequently, however, we found that the operation of the so-called Davis amendment has discriminated against the West, because of the fact that the zones in the West are so large and the zones in the East are small. Consequently, the big cities of the country, such as those in New York, have found that the law works all right; but in the case of the larger zones in the West and Middle West it has hampered us in securing the facilities we ought to have to meet the demands of that section of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 12, after the word "provide", to strike out "an" and insert "a fair, efficient, and", so as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That section 302 of the Communications Act of 1934 is hereby repealed.
> SEC. 2. Subsection (b) of section 307 of such act is amended to read as follows:
>
> "(b) In considering applications for licenses, and modifications and renewals thereof, when and insofar as there is demand for the same, the Commission shall make such distribution of licenses, frequencies, hours of operation, and of power among the several States and communities as to provide a fair, efficient, and equitable distribution of radio service to each of the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 3340) for the relief of Jessie S. Post was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3974) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide more effectively for the national defense by increasing the efficiency of the Air Corps of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes", approved July 2, 1926, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

EDUCATION, MEDICAL ATTENTION, ETC., FOR INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3452) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to arrange with States or Territories for the education, medical attention, relief of distress, and social welfare of Indians, and for other purposes", which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think there should be an analysis of this bill by its author.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the bill proposes an amendment to what is known as the Johnson-O'Malley law, passed in 1934. Under the provisions of that law, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, acting through the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to contract with the States for furnishing certain services to Indians. This bill proposes to modify and extend the provisions of the Johnson-O'Malley Act by making it possible for the Secretary to contract with the States for providing for the medical attention, relief of distress, and social welfare of the Indians.

The bill does one additional thing. The original act provided that the Secretary must contract with some legally authorized institution in the State for these services. Some of the States have not passed an enabling act on the subject, so the bill provides that the Secretary may contract with the Governor, and in some States the Governor may make the contract in the exercise of his inherent powers as Governor.

Those are the two things the bill does.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not object to the consideration of the bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 5, after the word "education", to insert "medical attention, relief of distress, and social welfare of Indians", so as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the act of April 16, 1934 (48 Stat. 596), entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to arrange with States or Territories for the education, medical attention, relief of distress, and social welfare of Indians, and for other purposes", be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, to enter into a contract or contracts with any State or Territory, or political subdivision thereof, or with any State university, college, or school, or with any appropriate State or private corporation, agency, or institution, for the education, medical attention, agricultural assistance, and social welfare, including relief of distress, of Indians in such State or Territory, through the agencies of the State or Territory or of the corporations and organizations hereinbefore named, and to expend under such contract or contracts, moneys appropriated by Congress for the education, medical attention, agricultural assistance, and social welfare, including relief of distress, of Indians in such State or Territory.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior, in making any contract herein authorized, may permit such contracting party to utilize, for the purpose of this act, existing school buildings, hospitals, and other facilities, and all equipment therein or appertaining thereto, including livestock and other personal property owned by the Government, under such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon for their use and maintenance.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations, including minimum standards of service, as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect: Provided, That such minimum standards of service are not less than the highest maintained by the States or Territories within which said contract or contracts, as herein provided, are to be effective.

"SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall report annually to the Congress any contract or contracts made under the provisions of this act, and the moneys expended thereunder."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIM OF HEIRS OF JAMES TAYLOR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill [S. 3301] to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the heirs of James Taylor, deceased Cherokee Indian, for the value of certain lands now held by the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, in section 4, page 4, line 7, after the word "suit", to insert "or suits", and in line 8, after the words "Court of Claims", to strike out "is authorized to allow attorney's fees not exceeding 10 percent on the amount of the judgment which may be rendered in favor of plaintiff, if any, and the same shall be made a part of the court's decree" and to insert "shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 percent of the recovery, together with all necessary and proper expenses incurred in the preparation and prosecution of said suit or suits, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by said claimant heirs of James Taylor, and the same shall be included in the decree and paid out of any sum or sums found to be due said claimants", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, both legal and equitable, notwithstanding any statutes of limitations, to hear, determine, and render final judgment upon the claim of the heirs of James Taylor, a deceased Cherokee Indian, named in his last will and testament dated the 7th day of October 1905 (codicil dated Jan. 7, 1907), as recorded in the office of the clerk of the Superior Court of Cherokee County, State of North Carolina, in Book of Wills, page 139 and the following, against the United States for the value of certain lands, including the value of all timber and other property taken therefrom and appropriated to the use and benefit of the United States since the 15th day of March 1869, and for the value of the use of such lands and other property by the United States since said date, March 15, 1869. The lands referred to are in the State of North Carolina and were the subject matter in Congressional Case No. 1344, James Taylor against the United States (H. Doc. No. 1344, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), described in a letter to the Secretary of the Interior dated May 5, 1933, signed by H. A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture (S. Rept. No. 875, 73d Cong., 2d sess., p. 6), and are now under administration by the United States as a part of the Nantahala National Forest.

SEC. 2. The Court of Claims shall consider the findings of fact reported to the House of Representatives, as found by said court in Congressional Case No. 1344, James Taylor against the United States (H. Doc. No. 187, 64th Cong., 1st sess), as evidence in any suit filed and prosecuted hereunder; but additional evidence and testimony may be submitted by the claimant heirs or by the United States. Records, deeds, correspondence, or other papers recorded or on file in any department of the United States Government or of the State of North Carolina, or certified copies thereof, may be used as evidence; and the departments of Government shall give access to and permit inspection of any such records, deeds, correspondence, or other papers by the claimant heirs of James Taylor or by their attorney in the preparation and prosecution of any suit filed under the authority of this act. It is the intention of this act that the said claim of the heirs of James Taylor against the United States shall be heard and finally determined on its merits and on the basis of justice and equity to both parties, and the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to exercise unrestricted discretion to that end.

SEC. 3. Any suit filed hereunder shall make the heirs of James Taylor party plaintiff and the United States party defendant, and the petition shall be verified by one of the heirs named in the will mentioned in section 1 of this act, or by the attorney representing said heirs, or representing one of them for and on behalf of all of them, and no other verification shall be necessary. Petition hereunder shall be filed within 1 year from the date of approval of this act with right of amendment at any time before final judgment. The case shall be advanced on the court's docket for hearing; and the court shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to such suit any or all periods or corporations deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of all questions and matters involved.

SEC. 4. Upon the final determination of any suit or suits filed hereunder the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 percent of the recovery, together with all necessary and proper expenses incurred in the preparation and prosecution of said suit or suits, to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed by said claimant heirs of James Taylor, and the same shall be included in the decree and paid out of any sum or sums found to be due said claimants.

SEC. 5. In the event judgment shall be rendered in favor of the heirs of James Taylor, and when the money shall have been appropriated to pay the same it shall be paid to the said heirs, less the attorney's fees, respectively or to their respective legal representative, or to the duly appointed and then acting administrator or executor of the estate of James Taylor, deceased, such payment to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, however, That before making such payment the Secretary of the Treasury shall have delivered to him by the said heirs, or by a duly appointed and acting administrator or executor of the estate of James Taylor, deceased, a conveyance to the United States of all the right, title, claim, or interest of said heirs in and to the lands referred to in this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF ASSINIBOINE INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3053) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Assiniboine Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 5, after the word "notwithstanding", to insert "anything in the Judicial Code of the United States to the contrary, and without regard to", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, notwithstanding anything in the Judicial Code of the United States to the contrary, and without regard to the lapse of time, former adjudication or statutes of limitation, to hear, determine, adjudicate, and render judgment in any and all claims arising under or growing out of the Treaty of Fort Laramie of September 17, 1851 (11 Stat. L. 749), between the Government of the United States and the Assiniboine Indian Nation and other Indian nations therein specified, or any subsequent act of Congress, treaty, agreement, or Executive order or treaty with any other Indian tribe, or any nation that violates any of the rights of the Assiniboine Indian Nation, arising under or growing out of the said treaty, which said Assiniboine Nation or Tribe may have against the United States; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the said court to determine whether or not any provision in such treaty has been violated or breached by the Government of the United States, by acts of Congress or otherwise; and if so, to render judgment for the damages resulting therefrom.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 18, after the word "sums", to strike out "heretofore"; and in line 19, after the word "Indians", to insert "prior to March 2, 1927", so as to read:

SEC. 2. Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within 5 years from the date of the approval of this act, such suit shall make the Assiniboine Nation or Tribe party plaintiff and the United States party defendant. The petition shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with the Assiniboines, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior.

Official papers, letters, documents, records, including records of evidence heretofore taken before the Court of Claims pertaining to the subject matter of the suits herein authorized or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of such Indian Nation to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys of said Indian Nation.

SEC. 3. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said court it shall determine the rights of the parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation or former adjudication and any payment which may have been made by the United States upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as a set-off in any suit, and the United States shall be allowed credit subsequent to the date of any Executive order, law, treaty, or agreement under which the claims arise for any sum or sums paid or expended for the benefit of said Indians prior to March 2, 1927, including gratuities: Provided, however, That there shall not be set off or credited any sum or sums of money paid by the United States to or for the benefit of the Assiniboine Indian Nation for lands lying north of the Missouri River; nor any sum or sums of money received by the Assiniboine Nation or members thereof for surplus lands in the Fort Peck or Fort Belknap Reservations; nor any lands, nor the value thereof allotted to the Assiniboine Nation or members thereof in the Fort Peck or Fort Belknap Reservations, nor any land, nor the value thereof still held undisposed of in those reservations; nor shall there be set off or credited disbursements for agency building and repairs, miscellaneous agency expenses, pay of miscellaneous employees, pay of superintendents and agents, expenses of delegations, or pay of interpreters or Indian police.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, page 5, line 21, after the word "decree", to insert "and shall be thereafter subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of said Indians, including the purchase of land and building of homes, and no part of said judgment shall be paid out in per-capita payments to said Indians", so as to read:

SEC. 4. That if it be determined by the court that the United States, in violation of the terms and provisions of any Executive order, law, treaty, or agreement, set forth and referred to in section 1, has unlawfully appropriated or disposed of any money or other property belonging to the Indians, damages therefor shall be confined to the value of the money or other property at the time of such appropriation or disposal, with a minimum value of lands at $1.25 per acre. With reference to all claims which may be the subject matter of the suits herein authorized, the decree of the court shall be in full settlement of all damages, if any, committed by the Government of the United States, and shall annul and cancel all claim, right, and title of the said Assiniboine Indians in and to such money or other property.

SEC. 5. Upon final determination of such suit or suits, the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee for services heretofore or hereafter rendered the Assiniboine Nation not to exceed 10 percent of the recovery, together with all necessary and proper expenses heretofore or hereafter incurred in preparation and prosecution of the claims and suits, to be paid to the attorneys employed by said tribe or nation of Indians, who have heretofore prosecuted and shall hereafter prosecute said claims and suits and the same shall be included in the decree, and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found to be due said tribe.

SEC. 6. A copy of the petition shall, in such case, be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend the interests of the United States in such case.

SEC. 7. The proceeds of all amounts, if any, recovered from said Indians shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians decreed by said court to be entitled thereto, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum from the date of the judgment or decree and shall be thereafter subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of said Indians, including the purchase of land and building of homes, and no part of said judgment shall be paid out in per-capita payments to said Indians. The costs incurred in any suit hereunder shall be taxed against the losing party; if against the United States such costs shall be included in the amount of the judgment or decree, and if against said Indians shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That actual costs necessary to be incurred by the Assiniboine Indians as required by the rules of court in the prosecution of this suit shall be paid out of the funds of the Assiniboine Tribe in the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 8. All laws and parts of law inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FURNISHING OF INFORMATION BY SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am compelled at this time to leave the Chamber for a few minutes.

There is on the calendar Senate Resolution 265, Calendar No. 1824, a resolution introduced by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] which probably will be reached during my absence from the Chamber.

It is desired by a number of Senators that opportunity be afforded to discuss the resolution. I therefore ask that it be passed over for the present, and that on Monday next at 2 o'clock p. m. the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is it the purpose of the Senator to propose a unanimous-consent agreement to that effect at this time?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I am asking such an agreement, because I shall probably be absent from the Chamber when the resolution is reached.

Mr. McNARY. At what hour and what date does the Senator desire to have the resolution considered?

Mr. ROBINSON. Next Monday. I suggested the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. I understand that that is satisfactory to the author of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2041) for the relief of Charles E. Wilson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ASSISTANT JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL OF THE ARMY

The bill (S. 3659) to promote the efficiency of the Judge Advocate General's Department of the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I find that there is an adverse report with regard to this bill. Unless there is some explanation of the bill, I ask that it go over.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I made an explanation of this bill when it was reached on the calendar heretofore. It provides for the establishment of the office of Assistant Judge Advocate General in the Army, with the rank of brigadier general. It does not increase the cost to the Government further than about $20 a month.

The Judge Advocate General's Office think it very important that they have an officer to act in the absence of the Judge Advocate General, to be selected and appointed as provided by law for assistant chiefs of branches, because of the fact that under the present procedure the ranking officer usually acts when the Judge Advocate General is away, and he may or may not be very competent for this particular task. That is the only purpose of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the letter of the Secretary of War concludes with this sentence:

This proposed legislation was submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, which reports that it is not in accord with the financial program of the President.

A paragraph before the one I have read from the letter of the Secretary of War says:

In drafting the act of June 4, 1920, careful consideration was given to the number of assistant chiefs required by the various branches. The organization then established has proven most effective and, in the main, adequate.

The next paragraph reads as follows:

Moreover, the War Department feels that the Congress in its last session, by enacting a bill providing accelerated promotion for the commissioned personnel of practically the entire Army, has done all it can reasonably be expected to do in regard to promotion for officers, and that no effort should be made toward the enactment of legislation providing increased promotion among the commissioned personnel, particularly of the higher ranks, in the absence of a pressing need therefor.

Obviously, if the bill should pass, the President would veto it.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know whether or not the President would veto the bill. I do not know, however, that the Military Affairs Committee had that report before it when it considered all the facts; and the Military Affairs Committee thought, from talking with those who are members of the Judge Advocate General's Office and others, that the enactment of the bill is necessary. Of course, the Secretary of War recommended against the passage of the bill upon the ground that if it should be passed, perhaps other assistants would be called for; but the bill does not materially increase the cost to the Government, and I can see no particular reason why the Secretary of War should object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been made, the bill will be passed over.

FRANZ J. FEINLER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2158) for the relief of Franz J. Feinler, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the President of the United States is authorized to cause a War Department board of officers to review the case of Franz J. Feinler, including such additional evidence as may be submitted, to find whether the said Franz J. Feinler shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on April 20, 1918, and, if as a result of such review, it is found that it should be so held and considered and upon approval of such findings by the President, Franz J. Feinler shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged on April 20, 1918: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3726) to provide suitable rank for the Deputy Chief of Staff, United States Army, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8588) to authorize the deposit and investment of Indian funds was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in order that an amendment may be offered to this bill—and I am not now prepared to offer the amendment—I ask that the bill be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

ELIZABETH HALSTEAD

The bill (H. R. 4638) for the relief of Elizabeth Halstead was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHARINE I. KLEIN

The bill (S. 4019) for the relief of Catharine I. Klein was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Catharine I. Klein, the widow of Nelson B. Klein, a special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, who was killed in the line of his official duty at College Corner, Ohio, August 16, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

RODMAN CHEMICAL CO.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 223) conferring upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction of the claim of the Rodman Chemical Co. against the United States was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETRA M. BENAVIDES

The bill (H. R. 1363) for the relief of Petra M. Benavides was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

The bill (S. 4025) to authorize a preliminary examination of the Republican River, with a view to the control of its floods, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a House bill to the same effect as this Senate bill having been passed by the Senate and House and signed by the President, I ask that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

VESSEL FOR RESEARCH WORK IN PACIFIC OCEAN FISHERIES

The bill (S. 3989) to provide for the construction and operation of a vessel for use in research work with respect to Pacific Ocean fisheries was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when funds are made available as authorized by section 2 of this act, the Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed (1) to cause plans and specifications to be prepared for the construction and equipment of a vessel for use in such research work with respect to Pacific Ocean fisheries as the Secretary finds will be useful to persons engaged in the fishing industry; and (2) to contract for the construction and equipment of such vessel. Such vessel shall be maintained and operated under the supervision of the Secretary of Commerce.

SEC. 2. There is authorized to be appropriated $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the purposes of the first sentence of section 1 of this act.

COLUMBIA NATIONAL FOREST, WASH.

The bill (S. 2694) to add certain lands to the Columbia National Forest, in the State of Washington, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to any valid existing claim or entry, all lands of the United States within the areas hereinafter described be, and the same are hereby, added to and made parts of the Columbia National Forest, in the State of Washington, to be hereafter administered under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests; and the provisions of the act approved March 20, 1922 (U. S. C., title 16, secs. 486, 487), as amended, are hereby extended and made applicable to all other lands within the said described area:

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, and 11 and 12, township 2 north, range 4 east; sections 1 to 3, inclusive, 6 to 8, inclusive, and 10 to 36, inclusive, township 3 north, range 4 east; sections 1 to 26, inclusive, 34 to 36, inclusive, township 4 north, range 4 east; all of township 5 north, range 4 east; sections 1, 2, 11 to 15, inclusive, 22 to 27, inclusive, and 33 to 36, inclusive, township 6 north, range 5 east; sections 4 to 9, inclusive, 16 to 21, inclusive, 28 to 33, inclusive, township 6 north, range 5 east, all in the State of Washington, Willamette meridian.

BILLS AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3580) granting and confirming to the East Bay Municipal Utility District, a municipal utility district of the State of California and a body corporate and politic of said State and a political subdivision thereof, certain lands, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 239) to investigate the circumstances attending the removal of Maj. Gen. Johnson Hagood from command of the Eighth Army Corps Area was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the recent developments in the Hagood case, I inquire of the Senator who introduced the resolution whether he desires its consideration?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], who introduced the resolution, is unavoidably absent. Under the circumstances I suggest that it go over for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 70) for the relief of agriculture, the producers of livestock, and the producers of raw materials generally, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

J. HAROLD ARNOLD

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 179) authorizing the President to present in the name of Congress a Navy Cross to J. Harold Arnold was announced as next in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Let that go over.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I call attention to the fact that the Navy Department's opposition to this measure was to the granting of a medal of honor? The joint resolution was changed in the House of Representatives so as to provide for granting a Navy Cross, which it seems to be generally agreed the man richly deserves. The Navy Department's second objection was that it would add $2 a month to the service compensation. The sum total of the compensation is $32.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I should like to confer with the Senator about the joint resolution and explain the situation as I understand it. Perhaps I will have no objection, but I should like to confer with the Senator about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under objection, the joint resolution will be passed over.

PENSIONS

The bill (H. R. 9074) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependents of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it would take some time to consider this bill, and it could not be explained and presented under the 5-minute rule. Let it go over temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL AND LEGISLATIVE EMPLOYEES

The bill (H. R. 3044) to amend the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 349), for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service and in certain positions in the legislative branch of the Government to include all other employees in the legislative branch was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. NEELY subsequently said: Mr. President, during my temporary absence from the Chamber, consideration of Order of Business 1749, which is House bill 3044, was postponed. I ask unanimous consent to return to that bill in order that I may have read from the clerk's desk a relevant letter which I have received from Mr. Claude Babcock, president of the American Federation of Government Employees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, again I may state that I have no personal objection, but the Senator who objected to the bill may not be present in the Senate at this time, and unless the record clearly indicates the name, I do not think it would be fair to recur to the bill.

Mr. NEELY. Let me inform the Senator from Oregon that the record does not show who objected to the bill. Does the Senator object to a return to it in order that the letter to which I have referred may be read?

Mr. McNARY. I do not object to that being done, but I think it should be the practice that when objection is made to a bill and then later a Senator comes in and asks to recur to the bill, unless the Senator who objected is present, I do not think any action should be taken. In this case the Senator from West Virginia is unable to ascertain from the clerk the name of the Senator who objected. Therefore, I think the record should be completed and the bill ordered to go over for the day.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, let me assure the Senator that it is not my intention to take advantage of the Senator who objected, or of any other Senator present, but I should like to have put into the RECORD Mr. Babcock's letter; and, in order to do that, I ask unanimous consent to return temporarily to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia to return to the bill named by him? The Chair hears none.

Mr. NEELY. I ask that the clerk read the letter, which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the letter.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES,
Washington, D. C., April 23, 1936.

The Honorable MATTHEW NEELY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR NEELY: There have come to my attention rumors to the effect that certain civilian employees of the executive branch of the United States Government have been quoted as being opposed to the passage of H. R. 3044, which was passed in the House and amended in the Senate by the substitution of your bill, S. 3205.

I have examined the bill with the substitution with considerable care and feel that I am authorized to say for all civilian employees that they should not have any objection to the passage of the measure as it left the Senate committee.

The employees of the executive branch have expressed themselves as desirous of favoring a solution of the troublesome problem of retirement for the legislative employees of the Government. They do not presume to express to the Congress that it should take any particular action with respect to such retirement privilege. In other words, we feel that the retirement of civilian employees of the legislative department of the Government should and may well be handled by the legislative authority without the criticism of employees of the executive branch.

My examination of your bill shows further that it did not confer upon the legislative employees any extraordinary or even substantial benefits not enjoyed by the executive branch employees.

May I not for a second review the substance of the civil-service retirement law? It provides two things: First, a deferred-payment plan to be financed and paid for by the Government which is not greatly different from the plan contained in your bill for legislative employees.

Secondly, it provides for an additional amount of annuity to be obtained from contributions from the salaries of executive branch employees.

There are serious reasons why it might not be advisable for the Congress to provide for the contributory part of the retirement act for legislative employees. Among these are the general short tenure of most of the employees and the extremely complicated bookkeeping costs which would result. Also the elimination of the contributory part of the Civil Service Act is not of material interest to the civil-service employee since it simply permits the civil-service employee to obtain a larger annuity for which he pays and since the payment or nonpayment by a legislative employee would not effect the civil-service employee I think it can be said that reasonably the civil-service employee can have no objection to the omission from the retirement law as effecting the legislative branch of the contributory portion.

Now, to return for a moment or two to the deferred-pay feature—your bill provides for deferred payment of these employees, in certain instances, of an amount usually $30 a month. The Civil Service Retirement Act provides for the same payment of the same amount in the usual case.

It is true that there is a slightly increased payment for the last five years of 30 years' service and there is restriction to $1,200 but that is compensated for in the Civil Service Retirement Act by Government contribution of the amount of the deficiency between $900 and $1,200 if contributions have not been sufficient to buy a $300 annuity.

In summary may I say that far from being a Treasury raid I am surprised at the modest requirements of your bill. I predict with all sincerity that there will not be built up under the bill any onerous charges on the Government and I dare assume that the payment per capita per employee-days or years will be less to the United States Government under your bill than under the civil-service retirement bill.

My purpose in forwarding this letter to you is to let you know that although rumors may be afloat concerning the fact that some special privilege is apparently to be given to legislative employees, in fact this is not true and the legislative retirement bill proposed by you will be less expensive per capita and certainly cannot be objected to by executive branch employees.

I assure you that this organization will be of what assistance it may in favoring the protection of legislative employees on the pure basis of equity to them and interest in them as other workers for Uncle Sam.

Respectfully,

CLAUDE BABCOCK, President.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that objections to the consideration of the bill have been made on both sides of the Chamber I shall not insist upon its being taken up today, but I now give notice that at the earliest appropriate time I shall move that it be passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

FACILITIES FOR RECREATIONAL-AREA PURPOSES

The bill (H. R. 10104) to aid in providing the people of the United States with adequate facilities for park, parkway, and recreational-area purposes, and to provide for the transfer of certain lands chiefly valuable for such purposes to States and political subdivisions thereof was announced as next in order.

Mr. ADAMS. Let that go over.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold his objection to the bill. It has been amended in such a way as that all of the objections raised when the bill was previously considered have been removed. It now limits the authorization to merely a study of parks, parkways, and recreational-area programs, and authorizes no transfer of property. This is a study which ought to be made, and I make an appeal to the Senator to withdraw his objection so that the bill may be passed today.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what the survey would cost?

Mr. WAGNER. No appropriation at all is sought. The bill is limited to a study by the Department of the Interior of the park, parkway, and recreational-area programs. All the objections the Senator made when the bill was considered heretofore have been removed. Can I reach the heart of the Senator from Colorado at all in this matter?

Mr. ADAMS. I think the bill ought to go over, Mr. President.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well. At the first opportunity I shall move that the bill be taken up for consideration by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4886) providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporters in the executive branch of the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WASHINGTON GAS LIGHT CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3977) to authorize the Washington Gas Light Co. to alter its corporate structure, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "Company", to insert the word "may"; in line 6, after the word "purposes", to strike out the words "may, by vote of its directors" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "by a vote of two-thirds in number of the outstanding shares of stock of the company"; on page 2, line 23, to strike out the word "the" and insert in lieu thereof the word "The"; on page 3, line 1, to strike out "the" and insert in lieu thereof "The"; on line 4, to strike out "the" and insert in lieu thereof "The"; on line 6, to strike out "the" and insert in lieu thereof "The"; on line 8, to strike out "the" and insert in lieu thereof "The"; on line 16, to strike out "the" and insert in lieu thereof "The"; on line 17, strike out "the" and insert in lieu thereof "The"; on line 20, strike out "the" and insert in lieu thereof "The"; on page 4, line 4, after the words "District of Columbia", to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That said work and its incidents, including the replacement of pavement or roadway cut, shall be without cost or expense to the District of Columbia or to the United States: Provided further, That except as specifically provided in this act nothing contained herein shall be taken or construed as altering, repealing, or changing any provision of existing charter or franchise or rights of the Washington Gas Light Co. or of any statute, law, ordinance, or regulation pertaining thereto", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, provided the same shall be found by the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia to be in the public interest, the Washington Gas Light Co. may, for lawful corporate purposes, by a vote of two-thirds in number of the outstanding shares of stock of the company, increase its capitalization and from time to time issue such additional stock, in such amounts, for such considerations, of such classes, either with or without par value, and with such rights, privileges, and conditions, as said Commission may approve.

All shares of capital stock of said company hereafter issued for which the agreed consideration shall have been paid to the company, and all shares of capital stock of the company heretofore issued, as well as shares into which such shares heretofore issued may be changed, shall be deemed and taken to be fully paid and nonassessable, and there shall be no liability to the company or to creditors of the company on the part of any subscriber to, or holder of, such shares.

Said company may, upon obtaining approval of said Commission, change all of the shares of its capital stock at any time outstanding into the same or a different number of shares issued pursuant to the provisions of this act, by following the same procedure and complying with the same requirements as are now prescribed in section 639a of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, as amended (41 Stat. 1195), in respect of a change of name by a corporation.

SEC. 2. Provided the same shall be found by said Commission to be in the public interest, said company is further authorized to consolidate or merge with The Georgetown Gaslight Co., upon such conditions as may be approved by said Commission; and upon such consolidation or merger The Georgetown Gaslight Co. shall, without further proceedings, become dissolved and merged into the Washington Gas Light Co., and all property, rights, privileges, and franchises of The Georgetown Gaslight Co. shall, subject to encumbrances or liens thereon to secure the bonds or other securities issued by The Georgetown Gaslight Co., and to the payment of any valid claims against, or indebtedness of, The Georgetown Gaslight Co. existing at the time of such merger, pass to and be vested in the Washington Gas Light Co. as its property, with all the powers, rights, privileges, and franchises now possessed by either or both of said companies, including the right in the Washington Gas Light Co. to institute and prosecute in its own name any action in connection therewith: Provided, That pending actions against The Georgetown Gaslight Co. may continue against The Georgetown Gaslight Co. until the merger of said companies, and thereafter against the Washington Gas Light Co. Actions or claims against The Georgetown Gaslight Co. filed after the said merger shall be brought against the Washington Gas Light Co.

The Washington Gas Light Co., after such merger, shall have the full power and authority to manufacture, transmit, distribute, and sell gas in all parts of the District of Columbia and adjoining territory, for any purposes for which gas is now or may hereafter be used; and to lay, repair, and replace gas mains and pipes in any of the streets, avenues, and alleys of the District of Columbia: Provided, That said work and its incidents, including the replacement of pavement or roadway cut, shall be without cost or expense to the District of Columbia or to the United States: Provided further, That except as specifically provided in this act nothing contained herein shall be taken or construed as altering, repealing, or changing any provision of existing charter or franchise or rights of the Washington Gas Light Co. or of any statute, law, ordinance, or regulation pertaining thereto.

SEC. 3. All charters, statutes, acts and parts of acts, laws, ordinances, and regulations inconsistent with or repugnant to the provisions of this act, but only so far as inconsistent herewith or repugnant hereto, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved to the Congress.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah state the purpose of this particular measure?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will state in brief, the important provisions of the bill. The Washington Gas Light Co. has a rather small capital structure, and has a rather large funded indebtedness, the bonds being held largely by the banks and local people. It needs additional money to meet its recurring obligations, and with such a small capital it finds greater difficulty in negotiating loans to meet its necessary obligations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3486) to repeal the act entitled "An act relating to Philippine currency reserves on deposit in the United States" was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3744) to amend the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there should be some explanation of this bill.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

OPERATION OF FOREIGN AND AMERICAN SHIPS IN THE FOREIGN TRADE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 260) submitted by Mr. ROBINSON (for Mr. TYDINGS) on March 19, 1936, and considered and amended on March 27, requesting certain information concerning the operation of foreign ships and of American ships engaged in foreign trade.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce is requested to furnish to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the following information: (1) A list of all the acts of Congress governing the operation of American ships in foreign trade; (2) a brief summary of the handicaps which confront American-flag ships when competing with ships of a foreign flag; (3) show how these handicaps result in higher operating costs to the American shipowner; (4) whether it is the general practice of American shipowners to purchase fuel and supplies in this country or abroad, and the approximate annual amount of such purchases for all foreign-trade ships of the American Merchant Marine; (5) whether it is the general practice of foreign shipowners to purchase fuel and supplies in this country or abroad, and the approximate annual amount of such purchases for all foreign-flag ships trading with the United States and its possessions; (6) the estimated percentage of the relative operating costs of ships flying the flags of Great Britain, Germany, France, Italy, and Japan, on the basis of 100 percent for ships flying the flag of the United States; (7) the percentage of American and trans-Atlantic cargo carried by American-flag ships and the percentage carried by foreign-flag ships during each year from 1918 to 1935, inclusive; (8) the percentage of American trans-Pacific cargo carried by American-flag ships and the percentage carried by foreign-flag ships during each year from 1918 to 1935, inclusive; (9) the profit or loss of each of the American lines operating American-flag tonnage for each of the years 1926 to 1935, inclusive; (10) the operating expenses of the same lines for the same years and their gross incomes for such years; (11) how many of such lines held mail contracts, either on a poundage of per-mile basis, and the aggregate amount of money paid to them under such contracts.

ADMISSIBILITY OF WRITINGS IN EVIDENCE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4197) relating to the admissibility in evidence of certain writings and records made in the regular course of business, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That", to insert the words "in any court of the United States and any court established by act of Congress"; in line 7, after the word "admissible", to strike out the words "in evidence in proof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "as evidence"; and to add a new section at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in any court of the United States and any court established by act of Congress, any writing or record, whether in the form of an entry in a book or otherwise, made as a memorandum or record of any act, transaction, occurrence, or event shall be admissible as evidence of said act, transaction, occurrence, or event, if it shall appear that it was made in the regular course of any business, and that it was the regular course of such business to make such memorandum or record at the time of such act, transaction, occurrence, or event or within a reasonable time thereafter. All other circumstances of the making of such writing or record, including lack of personal knowledge by the entrant or maker, may be shown to affect its weight, but they shall not affect its admissibility. The term "business" shall include business, profession, occupation, and calling of every kind.

SEC. 2. This act shall be prospective only, and not retroactive.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 11098) to provide for terms of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania to be held at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. This bill should not be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is a special order for Wednesday, April 29, and will be passed over.

CONSTRUCTION OF A MODEL BASIN ESTABLISHMENT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10135) to authorize the construction of a model basin establishment, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to acquire a site at a cost not to exceed $100,000 in the vicinity of Washington, D. C., and to construct thereon a model basin establishment, with buildings and appliances, in which the Bureau of Construction and Repair of the Navy Department shall conduct the work of investigating and determining the most suitable and desirable shapes and forms to be adopted for United States vessels, including aircraft, and the investigation of other problems of ship design, at a cost not to exceed $3,500,000: Provided, That upon the authorization of the Secretary of the Navy experiments may be made at this establishment for private parties, who shall defray the cost thereof under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may from time to time prescribe: Provided further, That the results of such private experiments shall be regarded as confidential and shall not be divulged without the consent of such private parties, except that the right is reserved to the Secretary of the Navy to use data so obtained for governmental purposes, subject to the patent laws of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, every country which maintains a navy and has a merchant marine has provided a model basin for testing the parts of ships before constructing a naval vessel or a merchant ship. Such basins are long basins, are filled with water, and in them miniature models of naval craft and of merchant ships are placed and tested. We have one such basin in this country, at the Navy Yard here at Washington. It is obsolete and useless.

The object of the bill is to provide a modern up-to-date model basin establishment where models of new ships, private as well as public, and aircraft may be tested for the purpose of securing the most efficient and economical design.

This establishment will be a highly technical laboratory wherein exact knowledge may be acquired for scientific use in the development of ship, high-speed boat, and seaplane construction.

There are such basins in England, Germany, France, Japan, and all other maritime countries. In the absence of a proper basin here the builder of a merchant ship must hire the use of a foreign basin for the purpose of making the necessary tests.

The Navy Department, the Shipping Board, the Coast Guard, and practically every other branch of the Government having to do with shipping recognize the importance of having a model basin suitable for the purposes of making proper tests in order that we may have the best equipment in the construction of merchant ships and naval craft.

When such basins are used by private individuals or companies that construct merchant ships, they must pay the Government for the use of the basins, so that it is expected that about 50 percent of the cost of maintenance will be paid by the uses private enterprise may make of the proposed basin. It is said that the basin at the Washington Navy Yard was paid for in a few years by reason of the advantages and benefits which came from the scientific experiments that were made there.

We are now building many naval craft and attempting to encourage private shipbuilders. Unless we have a basin of this character and kind there can be no assurance that we will have the benefit of the latest and most scientific construction. The cost will be $3,500,000. A location has already been selected on the shore of the Potomac River in the vicinity of Cabin John Bridge.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask the Senator whether this basin would be used principally by the Government for war vessels, or by commercial organizations?

Mr. WALSH. Mostly by the Government. Let me add that it will be used—and it is a very important use—in the construction of naval aircraft. They must be tested in a basin of this kind. The small models first must be built in order to determine the power and strength and scientific value of the completed craft.

The bill is considered of the utmost importance by the Navy Department and by all of the departments of our Government interested in ship construction. It is only an authorization bill, and opportunity will be given later to consider the wisdom of appropriating the money. I hope the bill will be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS OF CERTAIN ACTS TO ALASKA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3784) to extend the benefits of the Adams Act, the Purnell Act, and the Capper-Ketcham Act to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the committee amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before that is done, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] with respect to the statement made by the Secretary of War, as follows:

> You are advised, however, that legislation authorizing additional aid in approximately one-half of the amounts proposed in the bill would not be in conflict with the financial program of the President.

From that, I assume that objection would be made to the other half.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the committee amendments are all made to conform to that suggestion. The Secretary said objection would be made if the amounts were more than one-half those proposed; so the committee amendments are made to cover that objection.

Mr. KING. So the amendments are made to conform to his views?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the committee amendments.

The amendments of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry were, on page 2, line 12, after the name "Alaska", to insert "to the extent herein provided"; in line 16, before the word "for", to strike out "1936, $10,000" and insert "1937, $5,000"; in line 17, before the word "for", to strike out "1937, $15,000" and insert "1938, $7,500"; in line 18, before the word "for", to strike out "1938, $20,000" and insert "1939, $10,000"; in line 19, before the word "for", to strike out "1939, $25,000" and insert "1940, $12,500"; in line 20, after "June 30", to strike out "1940, $30,000" and insert "1941, $15,000"; in line 21, after "June 30", to strike out "1941, $35,000" and insert "1942, $17,500"; in line 22, after "June 30", to strike out "1942, $40,000" and insert "1943, $20,000"; in line 24, before the word "for", to strike out "1943, $45,000" and insert "1944, $22,500"; in line 25, before the word "for", to strike out "1944, $55,000" and insert "1945, $27,500"; on page 3, line 1, before the word "for", to strike out "1945, $65,000" and insert "1946, $32,500"; in line 2, after "June 30", to strike out 1946, $75,000" and insert "1947, $37,500"; in line 3, after the words "equal to", to insert "one-half of"; in line 5, before the words "Purnell Act", to strike out "same" and insert "said"; in line 12, after the name "Alaska", to insert "to the extent herein provided,"; in line 15, after "June 30", to strike out "1936, $5,000" and insert "1937, $2,500"; in line 16, after "June 30", to strike out "1937, $10,000" and insert "1938, $5,000"; in line 18, before the word "for", to strike out "1938, $15,000" and insert "1939, $7,500"; in line 19, before the word "and", to strike out "1939" and insert "1940"; and in the same line, after the word "thereafter", to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$10,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following acts, to wit, an act entitled "An act to provide for an increased annual appropriation for agriculture experiment stations and regulating the expenditure thereof", approved March 16, 1906, and known as the Adams Act; an act entitled "An act to authorize the more complete endowment of agricultural experiment stations, and for other purposes", approved February 24, 1925, and known as the Purnell Act; and an act entitled "An act to provide for the further development of agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefit of the act entitled 'An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts', approved July 2, 1862, and all acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture", approved May 22, 1928, and known as the Capper-Ketcham Act, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the Territory of Alaska.

SEC. 2. To carry into effect the above provisions for extending to the Territory of Alaska to the extent herein provided, the benefits of the said Adams Act and the said Purnell Act the following sums are hereby authorized to be appropriated: For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, $5,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, $7,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, $10,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, $12,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, $15,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1942, $17,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, $20,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, $22,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945, $27,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1946, $32,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, $37,500; and thereafter a sum equal to one-half of that provided for each State and Territory under the said Adams Act and the said Purnell Act: Provided, That no appropriations shall be made under this act until annually estimated as to funds and amounts by the Secretary of Agriculture, the estimates to be based upon his determination of the ability of the Territory of Alaska to make effective use of the funds in maintaining agricultural experiment stations.

SEC. 3. To carry into effect the above provisions for extending to the Territory of Alaska, to the extent herein provided, the benefits of the said Capper-Ketcham Act the following sums are hereby authorized to be appropriated: For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, $2,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, $5,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, $7,500; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and annually thereafter, $10,000: Provided, That no appropriations shall be made under this act until annually estimated as to funds and amounts by the Secretary of Agriculture, the estimates to be based upon his determination of the ability of the Territory of Alaska to make effective use of the funds: And provided further, That, whereas the said Capper-Ketcham Act provides that "at least 80 percent of all appropriations under this act shall be utilized for the payment of salaries of extension agents in counties of the several States to further develop the cooperative extension system in agriculture and home economics with men, women, boys, and girls", the several established judicial divisions of the Territory of Alaska, as the same shall exist from time to time, shall be considered as counties for the purpose of complying with the provisions of this act until a subdivision of the Territory of Alaska into counties is effected.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POSTHUMOUS CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR TO WILLIAM MITCHELL

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 219) authorizing the President of the United States to award a posthumous Congressional Medal of Honor to William Mitchell, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I will say for the information of the Senate that the amendments to the joint resolution as it was proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] are to make it conform exactly with the bill which has already been reported favorably by the House Military Affairs Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the committee amendments.

The amendments were, in line 6, after the word "largely", to insert "in the World War"; in line 8, after the word "power", to strike out "for the defense"; and in line 10, after the word "has", to insert "thereby", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to award, posthumously, in the name of Congress, a Medal of Honor to William Mitchell, who died February 19, 1936, after having contributed so largely in the World War by his energy, his valor, and his vision to the development of aviation and of military air power of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That the said William Mitchell has thereby deserved well at the hands of our Republic.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPEAL OF ACT FOR SALE OF PROPERTY IN NEWARK

The bill (H. R. 10985) to repeal Public Law No. 246 of the Seventy-second Congress was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL DAY SERVICES AT ARLINGTON AND OTHER NATIONAL CEMETERIES

The bill (H. R. 10388) to aid the veteran organizations of the District of Columbia in their joint Memorial Day services at Arlington National Cemetery and other cemeteries on and preceding May 30 was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTINUATION OF TRADING IN UNLISTED SECURITIES

The bill (S. 4023) to provide for the continuation of trading in unlisted securities upon national securities exchanges was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. Senate bill 4023 is a proposed amendment to the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. Senators will recall that the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 were outgrowths of the Banking and Currency Committee's investigation into stock exchange and banking practices.

At the time the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 was being drafted, however, the committee had not definitely decided what should be done with the then existing unlisted trading on the exchanges; hence, it recommended to the Congress a continuation of unlisted trading which enjoyed that privilege at the time but forbade an extension of this privilege. At the same time it directed that the Securities Exchange Commission make a study of trading in unlisted securities upon exchanges and to report the results of its study and its recommendations to Congress on or before January 3, 1936. At the same time Congress provided, in the event no further amendments were made to the law, that unlisted trading should cease at midnight on May 31, 1936. That time, of course, is very rapidly approaching, and it is very important to pass this measure now.

The report and recommendations of the Commission were submitted on January 3, 1936.

This bill has been drawn by the committee after deliberate consideration has been given to the report of the Commission, and after having held extensive hearings on the original language contained in Senate bill 4023. As a result of our hearings and deliberations the committee has stricken out all of the original language of Senate bill 4023, and recommends the passage of the amendments which are now drawn in the nature of a substitute.

The bill reported by the committee is designed to solve the essential problems presented in the report of the Commission and by witnesses heard in open hearings.

Section 1 would amend subsection (f) of section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 to permit certain categories of unlisted trading.

As a practical matter, if we do not enact this piece of legislation, thereby leaving the present dead line of May 31, 1936, to stand, approximately 2,000,000,000 shares of stock, comprising 1,370 issues, will be driven off the exchanges. Moreover, 564 issues of bonds, having a total face value of approximately $7,000,000,000, will likewise be expelled at midnight of May 31, 1936. That is not desirable.

The first category to which I wish to call attention has to do with a continuation of trading in those unlisted securities which enjoyed the privilege prior to March 1, 1934.

These securities, though deemed to be "registered" for various purposes under the act, are not registered in any true sense; that is, full and continuing information concerning them is not filed pursuant to law. In consequence they constitute an unfortunate anomaly.

Under subsection (f) of section 12 of the Exchange Act, as amended by this bill, it would be the duty of the Commission by order to terminate such privileges for any particular security upon a finding of fact that, because of inadequate public distribution of the security in the vicinity of the exchange or of inadequate public trading activity therein on the exchange, or because of the character of trading therein on the exchange, such termination was necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

It may be expected, moreover, that the number of securities traded on this basis will gradually diminish through retirement, redemption, liquidation, reorganization, or the transition of seasoned securities to a listed status.

Thus this should lead to a gradual and orderly adjustment of the peculiar problem created by this category of securities.

The second category of securities which could, under this bill, be admitted to unlisted trading privileges on a national securities exchange would comprise securities duly listed and registered on another national securities exchange.

The third category of securities which could, under this bill, be admitted to unlisted trading privileges on a national securities exchange would include any security in respect of which there is available from a registration statement and periodic reports or other data filed pursuant to rules or regulations of the Commission under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 or the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, information substantially equivalent to that available pursuant to rules or regulations of the Commission in respect of a security listed and registered on a national securities exchange.

Among securities which might qualify within this third category would be securities of an issuer any other security of which is listed and registered on a national securities exchange, as well as new issues of securities which fall within the scope of subsection (d) of section 15 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended by the bill as reported. Subsection (d) of section 15, just referred to, begins at the top of page 16.

Any exchange seeking to admit any security in the second or third category to unlisted trading would have to meet the burden of proving to the satisfaction of the Commission that there existed in the vicinity of the exchange sufficiently widespread public distribution of, and sufficient public trading activity in, that security to render the admittance thereof to unlisted trading on that exchange necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. In a measure, this requirement would make necessary a judgment by the Commission as to a future course of development—that is, as to whether the conditions of adequate public distribution and adequate public trading activity found to exist at the time of application would continue to exist after the admittance of the security to trading on the applicant exchange. Again, save in very exceptional situations in which the public interest appeared to the Commission to demand the creation of an unlisted exchange market for such a security, no such security would be eligible for unlisted trading if the issuer, or its officers, directors, or principal stockholders, would by the admission thereof to such trading, acquire the benefits of an exchange market therefor without assuming the same obligations, especially in regard to proxies and trading by officers, directors, and principal stockholders, as would arise if the security were listed and registered. Finally even if the foregoing conditions were satisfied, the Commission would be required to deny an application to admit such a security to unlisted trading unless it found that such admittance would be in all other respects necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. After such a security had been admitted to unlisted trading, the Commission would be under a duty to suspend or terminate such trading if it found, after proceedings instituted on the application of any person having a bona fide interest or on its own motion, that by reason of inadequate public distribution of the security in the vicinity of the exchange or inadequate public trading activity in the security on the exchange, or by reason of the character of trading in the security on the exchange, such termination was necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

It will readily be perceived that the second and third categories reflect the same basic approach. This approach may be described as an endeavor to create a fair field of competition among exchanges and between exchanges as a group and the over-the-counter markets and to allow each type of market to develop in accordance with its natural genius and consistently with the public interest.

Section 2 of the bill as reported would make unnecessary new applications by exchanges which have been permitted to continue unlisted trading privileges for securities of the first category under rules or regulations of the Commission adopted pursuant to subsection (f) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, prior to the amendment thereof by section 1 of such bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, did the Committee on Banking and Currency hold hearings on this bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. It held very extensive hearings on it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Were there any objections to the measure?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know of anyone presenting objections to it. The objections which had been raised were met by the amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That subsection (f) of section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is amended to read as follows:

"(f) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, any national securities exchange, upon application to and approval of such application by the Commission and subject to the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth, (1) may continue unlisted trading privileges to which a security had been admitted on such exchange prior to March 1, 1934; or (2) may extend unlisted trading privileges to any security duly listed and registered on any other national securities exchange, but such unlisted trading privileges shall continue in effect only so long as such security shall remain listed and registered on any other national securities exchange; or (3) may extend unlisted trading privileges to any security in respect of which there is available from a registration statement and periodic reports or other data filed pursuant to rules or regulations prescribed by the Commission under this title or the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, information substantially equivalent to that available pursuant to rules or regulations of the Commission in respect of a security duly listed and registered on a national securities exchange, but such unlisted trading privileges shall continue in effect only so long as such a registration statement remains effective and such periodic reports or other data continue to be so filed.

"No application pursuant to this subsection shall be approved unless the Commission finds that the continuation or extension of unlisted trading privileges pursuant to such application is necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. No application to extend unlisted trading privileges to any security pursuant to clause (2) or (3) of this subsection shall be approved except after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing. No application to extend unlisted trading privileges to any security pursuant to clause (2) or (3) of this subsection shall be approved unless the applicant exchange shall establish to the satisfaction of the Commission that there exists in the vicinity of such exchange sufficiently widespread public distribution of such security and sufficient public trading activity therein to render the extension of unlisted trading privileges on such exchange thereto necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. No application to extend unlisted trading privileges to any security pursuant to clause (3) of this subsection shall be approved except upon such terms and conditions as will subject the issuer thereof, the officers and directors of such issuer, and every beneficial owner of more than 10 percent of such security to duties substantially equivalent to the duties which would arise pursuant to this title if such security were duly listed and registered on a national securities exchange; except that such terms and conditions need not be imposed in any case or class of cases in which it shall appear to the Commission that the public interest and the protection of investors would nevertheless best be served by such extension of unlisted trading privileges. In the publication or making available for publication by any national securities exchange, or by any person directly or indirectly controlled by such exchange, of quotations or transactions in securities made or effected upon such exchange, such exchange or controlled person shall clearly differentiate between quotations or transactions in listed securities, and quotations or transactions in securities for which unlisted trading privileges on such exchange have been continued or extended pursuant to this subsection. In the publication or making available for publication of such quotations or transactions otherwise than by ticker, such exchange or controlled person shall group under separate headings (A) quotations or transactions in listed securities, and (B) quotations or transactions in securities for which unlisted trading privileges on such exchange have been continued or extended pursuant to this subsection.

"The Commission shall by rules and regulations suspend unlisted trading privileges in whole or in part for any or all classes of securities for a period not exceeding 12 months, if it deems such suspension necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors or to prevent evasion of the purposes of this title.

"Unlisted trading privileges continued for any security pursuant to clause (1) of this subsection shall be terminated by order, after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, if it appears at any time that such security has heretofore been withdrawn or if such security is hereafter withdrawn from listing on any exchange by the issuer thereof, unless it shall be established to the satisfaction of the Commission that such delisting was not designed to evade the purposes of this title or unless it shall appear to the Commission that, notwithstanding any such purpose of evasion, the continuation of such unlisted trading privileges is nevertheless necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. On the application of the issuer of any security for which unlisted trading privileges on any exchange have been continued or extended pursuant to this subsection, or of any broker or dealer who makes or creates a market for such security, or of any other person having a bona-fide interest in the question of termination or suspension of such unlisted trading privileges, or on its own motion, the Commission shall by order terminate, or suspend for a period not exceeding 12 months, such unlisted trading privileges for such security if the Commission finds, after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, that by reason of inadequate public distribution of such security in the vicinity of said exchange, or by reason of inadequate public trading activity or of the character of trading therein on said exchange, such termination or suspension is necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

"In any proceeding under this subsection in which appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing are required, notice of not less than 10 days to the applicant in such proceeding, to the issuer of the security involved, to the exchange which is seeking to continue or extend or has continued or extended unlisted trading privileges for such security, and to the exchange, if any, on which such security is listed and registered, shall be deemed adequate notice, and any broker or dealer who makes or creates a market for such security, and any other person having a bona-fide interest in such proceedings, shall upon application be entitled to be heard.

"Any security for which unlisted trading privileges are continued or extended pursuant to this subsection shall be deemed to be registered on a national securities exchange within the meaning of this title. The powers and duties of the Commission under subsection (b) of section 19 of this title shall be applicable to the rules of an exchange in respect of any such security. The Commission may, by such rules and regulations as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, either unconditionally or upon specified terms and conditions, or for stated periods, exempt such securities from the operation of any provision of section 13, 14, or 16 of this title."

SEC. 2. Any application to continue unlisted trading privileges for any security heretofore filed by any exchange and approved by the Commission pursuant to clause (1) of subsection (f) of section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and rules and regulations thereunder shall be deemed to have been filed and approved pursuant to said subsection (f) as amended by section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. Section 15 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. (a) No broker or dealer (other than one whose business is exclusively intrastate) shall make use of the mails or of any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce to effect any transaction in, or to induce the purchase or sale of, any security (other than an exempted security or commercial paper, bankers' acceptances, or commercial bills) otherwise than on a national securities exchange, unless such broker or dealer is registered in accordance with subsection (b) of this section.

"(b) A broker or dealer may be registered for the purposes of this section by filing with the Commission an application for registration, which shall contain such information in such detail as to such broker or dealer and any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, such broker or dealer, as the Commission may by rules and regulations require as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. Except as hereinafter provided, such registration shall become effective 30 days after the receipt of such application by the Commission or within such shorter period of time as the Commission may determine.

"An application for registration of a broker or dealer to be formed or organized may be made by a broker or dealer to which the broker or dealer to be formed or organized is to be the successor. Such application shall contain such information in such detail as to the applicant and as to the successor and any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by, or under direct or indirect common control with, the applicant or the successor, as the Commission may by rules and regulations require as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. Except as hereinafter provided, such registration shall become effective 30 days after the receipt of such application by the Commission or within such shorter period of time as the Commission may determine. Such registration shall terminate on the forty-fifth day after the effective date thereof, unless prior thereto the successor shall, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe, adopt such application as its own.

"If any amendment to any application for registration pursuant to this subsection is filed prior to the effective date thereof, such amendment shall be deemed to have been filed simultaneously with and as part of such application; except that the Commission may, if it appears necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, defer the effective date of any such registration as thus amended until the thirtieth day after the filing of such amendment.

"The Commission shall, after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, by order deny registration to or revoke the registration of any broker or dealer if it finds that such denial or revocation is in the public interest and that (1) such broker or dealer, or (2) any partner, officer, director, or branch manager of such broker or dealer (or any person occupying a similar status or performing similar functions), or any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by such broker or dealer, whether prior or subsequent to becoming such, (A) has willfully made or caused to be made in any application for registration pursuant to this subsection or in any document supplemental thereto or in any proceeding before the Commission with respect to registration pursuant to this subsection any statement which was at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it was made false or misleading with respect to any material fact; or (B) has been convicted within 10 years preceding the filing of any such application or at any time thereafter of any felony or misdemeanor involving the purchase or sale of any security or arising out of the conduct of the business of a broker or dealer; or (C) is permanently or temporarily enjoined by order, judgment, or decree of any court of competent jurisdiction from engaging in or continuing any conduct or practice in connection with the purchase or sale of any security; or (D) has willfully violated any provision of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, or of this title, or of any rule or regulation thereunder. Pending final determination whether any such registration shall be denied, the Commission may by order postpone the effective date of such registration for a period not to exceed 15 days, but if, after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, it shall appear to the Commission to be necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors to postpone the effective date of such registration until final determination, the Commission shall so order. Pending final determination whether any such registration shall be revoked, the Commission shall by order suspend such registration if, after appropriate notice and opportunity for hearing, such suspension shall appear to the Commission to be necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. Any registered broker or dealer may, upon such terms and conditions as the Commission may deem necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors, withdraw from registration by filing a written notice of withdrawal with the Commission. If the Commission finds that any registered broker or dealer, or any broker or dealer for whom an application for registration is pending, is no longer in existence or has ceased to do business as a broker or dealer, the Commission shall by order cancel the registration or application of such broker or dealer.

"(c) No registered broker or dealer, or any other person, shall make use of the mails or of any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce to effect any transaction in or to induce the purchase or sale of any security (other than commercial paper, bankers' acceptances, or commercial bills) otherwise than on a national security exchange, in contravention of such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest to prevent fraud, concealment, unfair discrimination, or manipulative or deceptive practices or otherwise to insure to investors protection comparable to that provided by and under authority of this title in the case of national securities exchanges.

"(d) Each registration statement hereafter filed pursuant to the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, shall contain an undertaking by the issuer of the issue of securities to which the registration statement relates to file with the Commission, in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, such supplementary and periodic information, documents, and reports as may be required pursuant to section 13 of this title in respect of a security listed and registered on a national securities exchange; but such undertaking shall become operative only if the aggregate offering price of such issue of securities, plus the aggregate value of all other securities of such issuer of the same class (as hereinafter defined) outstanding, computed upon the basis of such offering price, amounts to $2,000,000 or more. The issuer shall file such supplementary and periodic information, documents, and reports pursuant to such undertaking, except that the duty to file shall be automatically suspended if and so long as (1) such issue of securities is listed and registered on a national securities exchange, or (2) by reason of the listing and registration of any other security of such issuer on a national securities exchange, such issuer is required to file pursuant to section 13 of this title information, documents, and reports substantially equivalent to such as would be required if such issue of securities were listed and registered on a national securities exchange, or (3) the aggregate value of all outstanding securities of the class to which such issue belongs is reduced to less than $1,000,000, computed upon the basis of the offering price of the last issue of securities of said class offered to the public. For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'class' shall be construed to include all securities of an issuer which are of substantially similar character and the holders of which enjoy substantially similar rights and privileges. Nothing in this subsection shall apply to securities issued by a foreign government or political subdivision thereof or to any other security which the Commission may by rules and regulations exempt as not comprehended within the purposes of this subsection."

SEC. 4. Subsection (a) of section 17 of such act is amended by striking out "every broker or dealer making or creating a market for both the purchase and sale of securities through the use of the mails or of any means or instrumentality of interstate commerce", and inserting in lieu thereof "every broker or dealer registered pursuant to section 15 of this title."

SEC. 5. Subsection (a) of section 18 of such act is amended by inserting immediately before the comma following "any rule or regulation thereunder" the following: "or any undertaking contained in a registration statement as provided in subsection (d) of section 15 of this title."

SEC. 6. Subsection (c) of section 20 of such act is amended by inserting immediately before the period the following: "or any undertaking contained in a registration statement as provided in subsection (d) of section 15 of this title."

SEC. 7. Subsection (f) of section 21 of such act is amended by inserting immediately before the period the following: "or with any undertaking contained in a registration statement as provided in subsection (d) of section 15 of this title."

SEC. 8. Subsection (a) of section 23 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Commission and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall each have power to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in them by this title, and may for such purpose classify issuers, securities, exchanges, and other persons or matters within their respective jurisdictions. No provision of this title imposing any liability shall apply to any act done or omitted in good faith in conformity with any rule or regulation of the Commission or the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, notwithstanding that such rule or regulation may, after such act or omission, be amended or rescinded or be determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason."

SEC. 9. Section 32 of such act is amended by striking out "Sec. 32." and inserting in lieu thereof "Sec. 32. (a)"; by inserting immediately before the comma following the phrase "filed under this title or any rule or regulation thereunder" the following: "or any undertaking contained in a registration statement as provided in subsection (d) of section 15 of this title"; and by adding thereto a new subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b) Any issuer which fails to file information, documents, or reports pursuant to an undertaking contained in a registration statement as provided in subsection (d) of section 15 of this title shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each and every day such failure to file shall continue. Such forfeiture, which shall be in lieu of any criminal penalty for such failure to file which might be deemed to arise under subsection (a) of this section, shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States and shall be recoverable in a civil suit in the name of the United States."

SEC. 10. All brokers and dealers for whom registration is in effect on the date of enactment of this act in accordance with rules and regulations of the Commission prescribed pursuant to section 15 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 shall be deemed to be registered pursuant to section 15 of such act as amended by section 3 of this act.

SEC. 11. Nothing in this act shall be deemed to extinguish any liability which may have arisen prior to the effective date of this act by reason of any violation of section 15 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 or of any rule or regulation thereunder.

SEC. 12. This act shall become effective immediately upon the enactment thereof; except that clause (2) of subsection (f) of section 12 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended by section 1 hereof, and subsections (a) and (d) of section 15 of such act, as amended by section 3 hereof, shall become effective 90 days after the enactment of this act, and that clause (3) of said subsection (f), as amended by section 1 hereof, shall become effective 6 months after the enactment of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the continuation of trading in unlisted securities upon national securities exchanges, for the registration of over-the-counter brokers and dealers, for the filing of current information and periodic reports by issuers, and for other purposes."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7092) for the relief of Capt. Percy Wright Foote, United States Navy, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

REUBEN M. WRIGHT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4207) for the relief of Reuben M. Wright, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after "Company", to strike out "L" and insert in lieu thereof "A", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws or any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Army, Reuben M. Wright, formerly a private, Company A, Eighteenth Regiment United States Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged on November 15, 1889: Provided, That no pension, bounty, back pay, or allowance shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENTRY UNDER BOND OF ARTICLES FOR EXPOSITION PURPOSES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3843) to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits of arts, sciences, and industries, and products of the soil, mine, and sea, and all other exhibits for exposition purposes, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That as used in this Act:

(a) The term "exhibition" means any permanent exhibition or exhibitions, expositions, fairs, or any temporary exhibition or exhibitions, expositions, or fairs of the arts, sciences, and industries, or of the products of the soil, mine, and sea, or of any hobby, or other like pursuits.

(b) The "Port Authority" means the Port of New York Authority, a municipal corporate instrumentality organized pursuant to a compact entered into on April 30, 1921, between the States of New York and New Jersey, and consented to by the Congress of the United States (ch. 77, U. S. Stat. L., vol. 42, pt. I, p. 174), and designated as the municipal corporate instrumentality of the said States for the purpose of effectuating said compact.

SEC. 2. All articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibit or display at an exhibition to be held at any time and from time to time by the Port Authority or by its tenants or licensees in the building known as the Port Authority Commerce Building, located on the block bounded by Eighth and Ninth Avenues, Fifteenth and Sixteenth Streets, Borough of Manhattan, city and State of New York, upon which articles there shall be a tariff, or customs duty, shall be admitted free of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful, at any time during or at the close of any exhibition, exposition, or fair held pursuant to this act to sell for delivery at the close thereof any goods or property imported for and actually displayed at such exhibition, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when sold or withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal and to the requirements of the tariff laws in effect at such date: Provided further, That the Port Authority shall be deemed, for customs purposes only, to be the sole consignee of all merchandise imported under the provisions of this Act, and that the actual and necessary customs charges for labor, services, and other expenses in connection with the entry, examination, appraisement, release, or custody, together with the necessary charges for salaries of customs, officers, and employees in connection with the supervision, custody of, and accounting for, articles imported under the provisions of this Act, shall be reimbursed by the Port Authority to the Government of the United States under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that receipts from such reimbursements shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriation from which paid, in the manner provided for in section 524, Tariff Act of 1930: Provided further, That all such articles shall, at the expiration of 2 years, be subject to the import duty when in force, unless the same shall have been sold or exported from this country prior to that time: And provided further, That nothing in this Act contained shall be construed as an invitation, express or implied, from the Government of the United States to any foreign government, State, municipality, corporation, partnership, or individual to import any articles for the purpose of exhibition at the said exhibitions.

PRODUCTION COSTS OF CERTAIN PELTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 250) directing the Tariff Commission to investigate the production costs of certain pelts, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after "Persian lamb pelts" and the comma, to insert "krimmer pelts, karakul pelts", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed, under the authority conferred by section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930 and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the differences in cost of production of the following domestic articles and of any like or similar foreign articles: Dressed or dyed Persian lamb pelts, krimmer pelts, karakul pelts, Russian pony pelts, squirrel pelts, and mole pelts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

A. J. WATTS

The bill (S. 3067) for the relief of A. J. Watts, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons who have served in the military forces of the United States, the disabilities of A. J. Watts, formerly a private, Battery B, Georgia Volunteer Light Artillery, shall be held and considered to have been incurred by him in the active military service of the United States during the Spanish-American War: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued by reason of this act prior to its enactment.

PAYMENT OF CERTAIN INTEREST TO AMERICAN WAR MOTHERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3296) to provide for the payment to the American War Mothers of interest on the fund known as the "Recreation fund, Army", which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to set aside as a special fund in the Treasury the sum of $294,852.97, representing the unexpended balance of the sums transferred from the "Stars and Stripes fund" and "Other funds" by the act of March 4, 1933, to the fund entitled "Recreation fund, Army." The special fund created pursuant to this act shall be invested and reinvested by the Secretary of the Treasury in interest-bearing obligations of the United States.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay from the special fund created under this act to the American War Mothers, incorporated by the act entitled "An act to incorporate the American War Mothers", approved February 24, 1925, the sum of $20,000 a year, to be expended by said American War Mothers for such purposes as it sees fit.

SEC. 3. Said American War Mothers shall make a full and complete report to the Congress not later than February 1 of each year as to the purposes for which the sums paid to it under this act have been expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize certain payments to the American War Mothers, Inc."

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 242) authorizing and directing the Commodity Credit Corporation to facilitate the liquidation of loans to cotton producers was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the joint resolution. As the Senator in charge of the measure is not present, I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4105) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to convey certain lands to the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission of Maryland for park purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that bill by the Senator from Maryland.

As the Senator is not present at the moment, I ask that the bill be passed over until we may have an explanation of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PAYMENT TO CERTAIN NON-INDIAN CLAIMANTS

The bill (S. 4298) to authorize an appropriation to pay non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, but who have been found entitled to awards under said act as supplemented by the act of May 31, 1933, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah will recall that the pending bill is the final bill relating to this subject. At the last session we passed a similar bill, and the Secretary of the Interior then reported that there were several claims as yet unsettled and which had not been investigated. Since that time those claims have been investigated. Some 20 claims were filed. Fifteen were approved by the Secretary. The pending bill makes allowances for those 15 claims amounting to about $3,000.

Mr. KING. Do the claims come within the category of the claims which Mr. Harrington was designated a commissioner to consider and pass upon?

Mr. HATCH. They are along the same general lines; yes. They have been fully approved by the Department, and the ones provided for in the bill are the final ones.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum to compensate white settlers or non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. 636), but who have been found by the Secretary of the Interior, in conformity with the proviso to section 3 of the act of May 31, 1933 (48 Stat. L. 108, 109), to be entitled to increased compensation by reason of errors in the amount of award previously allowed or entitled to original awards by reason of errors in the omission of legitimate claimants. The non-Indian claimants, or their successors, as found and reported by the Secretary of the Interior, to be compensated out of said appropriation to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in the amounts found to be due them, as follows: Within the pueblo of Nambe, $456.40; within the pueblo of San Ildefonso, $141.88; within the pueblo of Cochiti, $936.55; within the pueblo of Sandia, $1,292.21; within the pueblo of San Juan, $244.20; in all, $3,071.24.

PROMOTIONS IN THE MARINE CORPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4016) to repeal section 16 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes", approved May 29, 1934, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I will explain the bill.

The purpose of this bill is to repeal section 16 of the Marine Corps selection law, which prevents the retirement of majors and lieutenant colonels who were not selected for advancement, and removes the restriction upon those advanced from receiving the pay of their advanced rank. It also provides that every officer of the Marine Corps shall have another opportunity of being selected before being placed upon the retired list. It further provides that officers of the Marine Corps (with certain exceptions) shall not serve on active duty in Marine Corps Headquarters in Washington, D. C., more than 4 out of any 8 consecutive years, unless the President so requires.

Under the present law, section 16 prevents the retirement of majors and lieutenant colonels who have been passed over, and they stay in that rank until they are 64 years of age, unless otherwise retired. This backs up promotion all down the line in the Marine Corps and prevents a reasonable flow of promotion and advancement of all officers below this rank. The repeal of section 16 is necessary for the efficiency and morale of the Marine Corps. The repeal of this section also removes the restriction upon officers properly advanced, from receiving the pay of their advanced rank, which under the present law is an unwarranted discrimination.

Section 10 of the Marine Corps selection law is also amended, and the effects and reasons for these amendments are contained in the House report which is quoted in part:

The primary purpose of this legislation is to remedy a situation brought about by what the committee believes to have been a too drastic application of the act above referred to and which is hereby amended.

The amendments to section 10 of the Marine Corps Personnel Act of May 29, 1934, as indicated in the first section of this bill provides:

(a) That until January 1, 1938, officers in the upper three-sevenths of the grades of first lieutenant, captain, major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel, will be eligible for consideration by selection boards without regard to length of service in grade; but that on and after that date, all officers subject to selection will be required to serve 4 years in grade (3 years for first lieutenants) before becoming eligible for consideration by selection boards, as is now the case with officers of the line of the Navy:

(b) That no officer of the Marine Corps will become ineligible for consideration for selection or for promotion by reason of length of commissioned service or by age without having been at least once considered by a selection board. This makes eligible for promotion captains in the Marines Corps who have been placed on a promotion list, approved by the President, even though they may become 45 years of age prior to being promoted;

(c) That officers of the Marine Corps of the grade of second lieutenant and above, except the Major General Commandant, the Assistant to the Major General Commandant, the heads of staff departments, and officers on eligible lists for appointment as head of a staff department, a maximum of eight officers, shall not serve on duty in Marine Corps Headquarters, Washington, D. C., more than 4 out of any 8 consecutive years unless the President shall determine that the public interests so require.

Section 2, repealing section 16 of the Marine Corps Personnel Act of May 29, 1934, provides for—

(a) The involuntary retirement of not more than 6 lieutenant colonels and 11 majors each year, who have been passed over for selection for promotion, and who have completed the designated periods of service prescribed in the basic Navy selection law;

(b) The placing of officers of all grades on the same status;

(c) A reasonable and regular flow of promotion;

(d) The removal of the unwarranted discrimination against marine officers in the matter of pay on promotion;

(e) Greatly increased morale and efficiency.

Mr. President, as the law now stands with respect to the Marine Corps, officers in the grade of colonel, captain, first lieutenant, who become ineligible for promotion by reason of nonselection, retire under the same conditions as officers of corresponding rank in the Navy. Officers in the grades of lieutenant colonel and major who are not selected may remain on the active list until they retire for age at 64 years. This condition is obviously most harmful to the morale and efficiency of the Marine Corps.

The primary purpose of the Marine Corps personnel bill was to provide a reasonable and regular flow of promotion in order that officers might serve in each grade at an age appropriate to the mental and physical requirements of the duties of the grade. Its enactment has already been of great benefit to the corps, but in order to derive the full benefit, section 16 must be repealed. The harmful effects incident to the retention on the active list of officers in the grades of lieutenant colonel and major who have failed of selection are obvious and cannot be overestimated. In addition, their retention clogs the wheels of the promotion system and impairs the very object of the bill, namely, a steady and uniform rate of advancement of officers of appropriate age through the various grades, thus eliminating stagnation of promotion and overage of officers in their grades. In fact, section 16 so stifles the promotion system as seriously to impair its other beneficial features.

The evil effects of this section are already taking shape, and the danger signal has appeared on the horizon. Theoretically this section, if not removed, will retard the promotion of a second lieutenant entering the corps 10 years in going to the grade of lieutenant colonel, placing him there at the age of 53, when he should be entering the grade at 43. However, practically speaking, an estimate of the present situation discloses that the actual condition will be far more serious, and unless this harmful restriction is removed the beneficial results already obtained will be wiped out, and in a short time we will revert to an impossible condition approximating that in effect prior to the passage of the present act. For example, of the 40 captains selected by the last board, all were under 45 years of age, averaging 41 years, and if section 16 is removed, only 3 will become 45 before being promoted, the junior about June 30, 1939. But if section 16 is not repealed, 37 of the 40 will become 45 or over prior to being promoted, the junior, at the age of 50, on or about October 1, 1944, a loss of retardation of promotion of 5 years and 4 months. If the effect of section 16 is thus pronounced on captain no. 73, one can well imagine what the effect will be on captain no. 318 by the time he comes up for promotion. This prediction is no exaggeration, and I feel sure that the members of this committee can appreciate this almost impossible situation and will lend a helping hand toward its alleviation.

The effect of the passage of this bill would, with certain necessary minor modifications, be to place the Marine Corps on exactly the same footing as the line of the Navy regarding personnel legislation and would permit the Marine Corps to obtain the full benefit of such legislation.

In all other branches of the national defense, officer on promotion to a higher grade becomes entitled to the pay of the higher grade, which is as it should be. In the Marine Corps the pay restriction in section 16 operates to retain them in the lower rate of pay for a considerable time after promotion. It works the greatest hardship, too, on officers promoted from the grade of second lieutenant, whose pay to begin with is the lowest of commissioned officers. Ensigns in the Navy and Coast Guard and second lieutenants in the Army are automatically promoted after 3 years' service and draw the pay of the higher grade. In the Marine Corps second lieutenants are also promoted after 3 years' service, but as long as section 16 remains in the law continue to draw the pay of second lieutenants. At the present time approximately 60 first lieutenants are drawing second lieutenants' pay. On an average, this condition continues for about 2 years in each case, at a loss of approximately $1,000 a year. A similar condition, differing only in degree, obtains in all higher grades.

Mr. President, let me now read from some testimony introduced at the hearing on this bill:

Senator WALSH. What is the average age of those men, of the lieutenant colonels who have not been selected?

Mr. VINSON. Colonel Arthur can testify better as to that.

Colonel ARTHUR. The average age of the majors is 48.8 years, and the average age of the lieutenant colonels is 53 years and 10 months.

Senator WALSH. What retirement fund would they receive?

Colonel ARTHUR. The major receives from $2,126 to $3,937. It so happens that these officers who will probably be retired have a great deal of service and they will probably run from $3,500 to $3,937 a year. That is based on longevity.

The lieutenant colonels, the minimum is $3,552, and the maximum is $4,312.

As it so happens, practically every lieutenant colonel will draw the maximum of $4,312 a year.

Senator WALSH. So this means that those men whom the selection board finds in both groups to be the lowest standard of efficiency for the Navy, will be retired if they are lieutenant colonels with $4,000 compensation every year for the rest of their lives.

Mr. VINSON. Yes.

Senator WALSH. It is pretty good pay for a man found by his superiors to be of the lowest efficiency in his rank. I wish we had it in civil life.

Mr. VINSON. I only wish Congress was as generous with the Members of the House when they retire as we are with the Army, the naval, and the Marine officers.

Senator WALSH. What does the retirement pay in the Navy run?

Mr. VINSON. I think this year it is carrying between seven and nine million dollars in the bill right now.

Mr. President, there is another very important provision in this bill. The selection bill would require that the selection board should consider four-sevenths of the group of officers. Four-sevenths of any one group would be the group that would be considered for selection. They could start at the top and select the top man, or they could select the man at the bottom, but the group they had to select was four-sevenths of the total number in that group.

We have amended that to help officers and keep them from being eliminated too rapidly by reducing that down to three-sevenths, and the selection board now is required to confine their group to three-sevenths.

Another thing that we considered highly important to eliminate the criticism of favoritism, as the Marine Corps is a very small organization and the officers are known quite intimately to each other, we have provided here that no officer of the Marine Corps can be stationed in Washington City longer than one tour of duty, or 4 years at one time, and that applies to every officer except the commanders or major general commandant and his assistant, and the four staff officers; in other words, to keep down a little clique from running the Marine Headquarters, and therefore have it said that they are taking care of their particular friends who happen to be stationed in Washington City, and we have put in this bill that he has got to be out of the city 4 years before he can come back 4 years.

Mr. President, this is an important bill. It will tend to greatly increase the morale and efficiency of the Marine Corps.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator what provision is made as to the type of selection board to pass upon the qualifications of the officers?

Mr. WALSH. A selection board is to be set up immediately upon the passage of this bill, and between the time of its passage and the 1st of July another opportunity will be given to the officers passed over to be selected.

Mr. BLACK. Who will set up the board?

Mr. WALSH. I assume the Secretary of the Navy will do so.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask what provision is made for preventing the same board that acted upon the other officers from serving on this selection board?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator has in mind the selection board that was created a year ago?

Mr. BLACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. For the selection of brigadier generals and major generals in the Marine Corps?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Not to select officers in the grade of captain and major. The board referred to was selected by the Secretary of the Navy, as the Senator knows, but the Senator suspected that it was not an entirely disinterested board, because the selections were made from officers of the Marine Corps who were located here in Washington at the time of selection.

However, in the case of the Marine Corps, which is a comparatively small organization, it is difficult to select many officers of higher rank, because of the limited number available to serve on the selection boards.

I wish to say to the Senator, however, that this is a compromise measure, and we are doing what we have not done before, in that we are giving an opportunity for reexamination as to those who have not been selected in the grades referred to.

Mr. BLACK. The point I am interested in is that if the reexamination should be held by the same group of officers that passed upon the officers heretofore, in my judgment, it would not allay the criticism of promotions in the Marine Corps.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that, so far as I have any influence as acting chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I know I may say as much for the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. VINSON, our utmost influence will be used to see that an absolutely impartial board is created and that past criticisms made as to the attitude of selection boards shall be removed.

Mr. BLACK. And that it will not be the same board?

Mr. WALSH. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The only provision in the bill is that the selection board shall be constituted as provided by law. That is the provision in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYRNES. The effect of the bill, if enacted, would really be to accomplish a saving of from six to seven thousand dollars, would it not?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; the ultimate result would be a saving.

Mr. BYRNES. Over 4 or 5 years?

Mr. WALSH. However, its real purpose is to promote the younger officers whose promotion is retarded under existing law.

Let me remind the Senator that while section 6 remains unrepealed, officers who have been promoted from captain to major and from major to lieutenant colonel are not getting the salary which others of their rank receive. The repeal of section 16 of existing law alone will remedy this.

Mr. BYRNES. There is no reason for the discrimination.

Mr. WALSH. It is rank discrimination. I do not believe there is any question but that the Senate should pass this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs will be stated.

The amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That so much of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes", approved May 29, 1934 (48 Stat. 811), as provides: "and officers in the upper four-sevenths of the grades below brigadier general, subject to selection as established by the first section of this act, shall be eligible for consideration by selection boards and for promotion without regard to length of service in grade: Provided, That no officer of the Marine Corps shall be ineligible for consideration for promotion by reason of completion of length of commissioned service until he shall have been once considered by a selection board", is hereby amended to read as follows: "and until January 1, 1938, officers in the upper three-sevenths of the grades below brigadier general, subject to selection as established by the first section of this act, shall be eligible for consideration by selection boards without regard to length of service in grade: Provided, That hereafter no officer of the Marine Corps shall be ineligible for consideration by a selection board or for promotion by reason of completion of length of commissioned service or because of age without having at least once been considered by a selection board, and any officer of the Marine Corps now on a promotion list shall be eligible for promotion unless removed from said list in accordance with existing law: Provided further, That officers of the Marine Corps of the grade of second lieutenant and above, except those appointed or serving as major general commandant, as assistant to the major general commandant, as the head of a staff department, or whose names appear on an eligible list for appointment as head of a staff department, shall not serve on duty in the Marine Corps Headquarters, Washington, D. C., more than 4 out of any 8 consecutive years unless the President shall determine that the public interests so require."

SEC. 2. That section 16 of the said act of May 29, 1934 (48 Stat. 811), be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That officers of the Marine Corps in the grades of lieutenant colonel and major, who prior to June 30, 1935, completed the designated periods of service for their respective grades, shall retain their eligibility for consideration for selection until June 30, 1936, and such officers who on that date are not on a promotion or retention list shall be transferred to the retired list: Provided, That a duly constituted selection board appointed as provided by law shall be convened immediately after the approval of this act, which board, in recommending for selection for promotion the number of officers of the grades of lieutenant colonel and major directed by the Secretary of the Navy in accordance with law, shall recommend, from the officers now on the active list in those grades, four officers of the grade of lieutenant colonel and nine officers of the grade of major, who held commissions in those grades, respectively, on May 28, 1934.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to amend section 10 and repeal section 16 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the distribution, promotion, retirement, and discharge of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes', approved May 29, 1934 (48 Stat. 811), and for other purposes."

WALKER RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION, NEV.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3805) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to reserve certain lands on the public domain in Nevada for addition to the Walker River Indian Reservation, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 1, after the word "hereof", to insert the following proviso: "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall arrange, either by the maintenance of existing stock driveways or otherwise, to permit stock owned by others than Indians to cross the reservation at designated points", so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to set aside not to exceed 171,200 acres, or so much thereof as he may deem advisable, of the public-domain lands in townships 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 north, ranges 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 east, Mount Diablo meridian, Nevada, as an addition to the Walker River Indian Reservation: Provided, That the said withdrawal shall not affect any valid rights initiated prior to the approval hereof: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall arrange, either by the maintenance of existing stock driveways or otherwise, to permit stock owned by others than Indians to cross the reservation at designated points. Executive order of November 26, 1934, temporarily withdrawing public-domain lands for classification, etc., under the Taylor Grazing Act of June 28, 1934 (ch. 865, 48 Stat. L. 1269), is hereby revoked as to such of the above-described lands as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior for addition to the said Walker River Indian Reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 11, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. Title to all minerals in said lands is hereby reserved to the United States and shall be subject to all forms of mineral entry or claim under the public land mining laws: Provided, That the Paiute Indians of the Walker River Reservation shall be paid by mineral claimants for the loss of any improvements on any lands located or withdrawn for mining purposes under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That an annual rental of not less than 5 cents per acre shall be paid to the superintendent of the reservation to be deposited to the credit of the tribe as compensation for loss of use or occupancy of any lands withdrawn for mining purposes or mineral entry. No mineral patent shall be granted to any applicant who is delinquent in the payment of rental or in the payment of any damages due the tribe under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF KLAMATH, MODOC, AND YAHOOSKIN INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3797) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing certain tribes of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes", approved May 26, 1920, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "the", to strike out "suits" and insert "suit numbered E–346"; on the same page, after line 9, to insert "irrespective of any release or settlement, to reinstate and retry said case and"; on page 2, line 2, after the word "thereon", to strike out "irrespective of any release or settlement, and"; and on line 5, after the word "appeal", to insert "rather than by certiorari", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the suit numbered E–346 heretofore instituted in the Court of Claims by the Klamath and Modoc Tribes and Yahooskin Band of Snake Indians under an act entitled "An act authorizing certain tribes of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes", approved May 26, 1920, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court, and it is hereby authorized and directed, irrespective of any release or settlement, to reinstate and retry said case and to hear and determine the claims of the plaintiffs on the merits, and to enter judgment thereon upon the present pleadings, evidence, and findings of fact, with the right of appeal, rather than by certiorari, to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party: Provided, That any payment heretofore made to the said Indians by the United States in connection with any release or settlement shall be charged as an offset, but shall not be treated as an estoppel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN RESERVATIONS IN ALASKA

The bill (S. 4420) to extend certain provisions of the act approved June 18, 1934, commonly known as the Wheeler-Howard Act (Public Law No. 383, 73d Cong., 48 Stat. 984), to the Territory of Alaska, to provide for the designation of Indian reservations in Alaska, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the House has passed an identical bill, which is now on the calendar, being Order of Business No. 1996, House bill 9866. I move that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill and be considered at this time, after the passage of the House bill, I shall move that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill and will be now considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether this bill is approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is approved by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Bureau of the Budget.

The bill (H. R. 9866) to extend certain provisions of the act approved June 18, 1934, commonly known as the Wheeler-Howard Act (Public Law No. 333, 73d Cong., 48 Stat. 984), to the Territory of Alaska, to provide for the designation of Indian reservations in Alaska, and for other purposes, was read, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1, 5, 7, 8, 15, 17, and 19 of the act entitled "An act to conserve and develop Indian lands and resources; to extend to Indians the right to form business and other organizations; to establish a credit system for Indians; to grant certain rights of home rule to Indians; to provide for vocational education for Indians; and for other purposes", approved June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984), shall hereafter apply to the Territory of Alaska: Provided, That groups of Indians in Alaska not heretofore recognized as bands or tribes, but having a common bond of occupation, or association, or residence within a well-defined neighborhood, community, or rural district, may organize to adopt constitutions and bylaws and to receive charters of incorporation and Federal loans under sections 16, 17, and 10 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984).

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to designate as an Indian reservation any area of land which has been reserved for the use and occupancy of Indians or Eskimos by section 8 of the act of May 17, 1884 (23 Stat. 26), or by section 14 or section 15 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. 1101), or which has been heretofore reserved under any Executive order and placed under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior or any bureau thereof, together with additional public lands adjacent thereto, within the Territory of Alaska, or any other public lands which are actually occupied by Indians or Eskimos within said Territory: Provided, That the designation by the Secretary of the Interior of any such area of land as a reservation shall be effective only upon its approval by the vote, by secret ballot, of a majority of the Indian or Eskimo residents thereof who vote at a special election duly called by the Secretary of the Interior upon 30 days' notice: Provided, however, That in each instance the total vote cast shall not be less than 30 percent of those entitled to vote: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid existing claim, location, or entry under the laws of the United States, whether for homestead, mineral, right-of-way, or other purpose whatsoever, or shall affect the rights of any such owner, claimant, locator, or entryman to the full use and enjoyment of the land so occupied.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 4420, being Order of Business 1831, will be indefinitely postponed.

EDWIN E. DAILEY

The bill (S. 3369) providing for the posthumous appointment of Ernest E. Dailey as a warrant radio electrician, United States Navy, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint, posthumously, Edwin E. Dailey, late a radioman, first class, United States Navy, a warrant radio electrician, United States Navy, and to deliver to the widow of said Edwin E. Dailey the warrant of such appointment. Such appointment shall be effective as of February 11, 1935.

ROSCOE M'KINLEY MEADOWS

The bill (S. 3715) for the relief of Roscoe McKinley Meadows was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] a question in regard to this case? I call his attention to the fact that the person who is seeking this benefit, namely, Roscoe McKinley Meadows, said at the time of his resignation from the Navy—I quote from the letter of the Secretary of the Navy in the report:

At the time of his resignation on June 30, 1920, he signed the following statement:

"I hereby certify that I have no injury or disability which would entitle me to compensation under the War Risk Insurance Act."

Then there is a further explanation by the Secretary of the Navy. As I understand, the Department does not approve the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, let me say the Navy Department does not disapprove it.

Mr. KING. The person who is the applicant for the benefit resigned voluntarily; he stated that he had no disability whatever; and he is now seeking the passage of the bill which, if enacted into law, would result in additional cost to the Government of $1,950 per annum, chargeable to the Federal administration.

Mr. BYRD. I think the Navy Department, Mr. President, interposed no objection to the bill. It simply clears the record and provides that Mr. Meadows shall be considered to have served as an officer of the Navy of the United States during the World War other than as an officer of the Regular Navy.

Mr. KING. It means a pension for this man who resigned voluntarily from the Navy and had no disability whatever. Will the Senator let the bill go over until I may consult the Department regarding it?

Mr. BYRD. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BERNARD F. HICKEY

The bill (S. 4119) for the relief of Bernard F. Hickey was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Bernard F. Hickey, a major, United States Marine Corps, retired, the sum of $1,587.25 in full satisfaction of all his claims against the United States for the loss of certain of his personal property on September 1, 1923, in the earthquake and fire at Kamakura, Japan, while serving as an assistant attaché of the American Embassy at Tokyo, Japan.

WILLIAM H. BROCKMAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4233) for the relief of William H. Brockman, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "the", to strike out "Secretary of the Navy" and insert "Comptroller General of the United States", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cancel the charges entered on the pay accounts of William H. Brockman, lieutenant (junior grade), United States Navy, in the amount of $317.34, and to pay to said William H. Brockman, out of money appropriated for the pay of Navy personnel, any amount heretofore deducted from his pay on account of such charges; such charges having been entered on the accounts of said William H. Brockman by reason of extra pay received by him for the performance of duty at submarine escape training tanks, and a subsequent ruling that he was not entitled to such extra pay because such duty was not actually performed on board a submarine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHARINE I. KLEIN

The bill (H. R. 10575) for the relief of Catharine I. Klein was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Catharine I. Klein, widow of Nelson B. Klein, special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, killed in line of his official duty at College Corner, Ohio, on August 16, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. BAILEY subsequently said: Mr. President, may I inquire what action was taken with regard to Order of Business 1836, being House bill 10575?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was considered, the amendment was agreed to, and the bill was passed as amended.

Mr. BAILEY. There is a difficulty there.

That was a House bill, but by reference to Order of Business 1708, on page 10 of the calendar, it will be found that a similar Senate bill was also passed. I think the Senate should reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill was passed and indefinitely postpone it, the House bill, as stated by the Chair, having been passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which Order of Business 1708, being the bill (S. 4019) for the relief of Catharine I. Klein, was passed will be reconsidered, and, without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL REGISTER ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4405) to amend section 11 of the Federal Register Act approved July 26, 1935 (Public, No. 220, 74th Cong.), which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the name "Congress", to strike out "is hereby amended so as to relieve from publication in the special or supplementary edition or issue of the Federal Register those Presidential proclamations and Executive orders that are of record in the General Land Office and relate to the public lands and which were issued or promulgated prior to the date documents are required or authorized by said act to be published in the Federal Register" and in lieu thereof to insert "be amended by substituting a colon for the period at the end of the section and adding the following proviso: Provided, however, That this section shall not require the General Land Office to prepare and file for publication in the special or supplementary edition or issue of the Federal Register those Presidential proclamations and Executive orders which are of record in the General Land Office and relate to the public lands and which were issued or promulgated prior to the date documents are required or authorized by said act to be published in the Federal Register", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the Federal Register Act approved July 26, 1935 (Public, No. 220, 74th Cong.), be amended by substituting a colon for the period at the end of the section and adding the following proviso: Provided, however, That this section shall not require the General Land Office to prepare and file for publication in the special or supplementary edition or issue of the Federal Register those Presidential proclamations and Executive orders which are of record in the General Land Office and relate to the public lands and which were issued or promulgated prior to the date documents are required or authorized by said act to be published in the Federal Register.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARBARA JAECKEL

The bill (S. 4400) for the relief of Barbara Jaeckel, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Barbara Jaeckel, widow of Theodore Jaeckel, late consul general, Victoria, British Columbia, the sum of $8,800, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband who died while in the Foreign Service; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated a sufficient sum to carry out the purposes of this act.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES—GREAT LAKES EXPOSITION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4335) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the centennial celebration of Cleveland, Ohio, to be known as the Great Lakes Exposition, which were, on page 1, line 9, after "not", to insert "less than twenty-five thousand and not"; and on page 2, line 12, after "than", to strike out "five" and insert "twenty-five".

Mr. BULKLEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2119) for the relief of Mrs. E. L. Babcock, mother and guardian of Nelson Babcock, a minor, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

N. N. SELF

The bill (H. R. 1265) for the relief of N. N. Self was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. HUBBARD

The bill (S. 3080) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of John W. Hubbard was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of John W. Hubbard, of Pittsburgh, Pa., against the United States for damages for injury to the steamboat Senator Cordill, and its cargo, on February 5, 1934, when such steamboat struck a submerged wicket of United States Dam No. 14, on the Ohio River and sank.

SEC. 2. Such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the date of enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitation. Proceedings for the determination of such claim, and appeals from, and payment of, any judgment thereon, shall be in the same manner as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

STATE OF NEVADA

The bill (S. 3907) for the relief of the State of Nevada was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think we should have an explanation of the bill. I think it very appropriate that the explanation be made by the Senator now occupying the chair.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. McNARY subsequently said: Mr. President, when Senate bill 3907 was reached, a bill for the relief of the State of Nevada, I asked for an explanation of it. At the time the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] was in the chair, and, of course, he felt some embarrassment and did not make, as he could have made, a statement regarding the bill. Meantime, I have examined the measure and find that it is very meritorious.

At this time, therefore, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 1851, Senate bill 3907.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3907) for the relief of the State of Nevada, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of section 3646, as amended, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the Chief Disbursing Officer of the Treasury Department is authorized and directed to issue, without the requirement of an indemnity bond, a duplicate of original check no. 81257, drawn September 6, 1935, in favor of "State treasurer of Nevada, trust fund" for $3,978.97 and lost after delivery.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Oregon.

F. L. FORBES ET AL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3241) authorizing adjustment of the claims of F. L. Forbes, John L. Abbot, and the Ralph Sollitt & Sons Construction Co., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to insert at the end of the bill a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claims of F. L. Forbes for $1,035.30 as amount of judgment and costs in his favor, in the United States District Court at Lynchburg, Va., against Ralph Sollitt & Sons Construction Co., contractor for the construction of a Government building under contract Tisa-3198, dated May 26, 1932, concerning a party wall; a claim of John L. Abbott for $350 as attorney's fees for assisting in the defense of Ralph Sollitt & Sons Construction Co. in such suit; and the claim of Ralph Sollitt & Sons Construction Co. for a balance of $248.30 on account of its costs in connection with the matter, and to allow said amounts in full and final settlement of their respective claims. There is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,633.60, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of said claims: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RANDALL KRAUSS

The bill (S. 3839) granting a pension to Randall Krauss was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Randall Krauss, a minor child, and pay him a pension at the rate of $100 per month until he becomes 21 years of age, all the other members of the family of the said Randall Krauss having been killed when their automobile was struck by a United States Army airplane at Griffith Park, Calif., on June 20, 1935.

ROBERT C. E. HEDLEY

The bill (H. R. 4660) for the relief of Robert C. E. Hedley was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT THESING, JR.

The bill (H. R. 3823) for the relief of Albert Thesing, Jr., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the parents of Albert Thesing, Jr., Rochester, N. Y., the sum of $2,500, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for the death of the said Albert Thesing, resulting from an explosion and fire, caused by agents of the Bureau of Prohibition during a raid in the city of Rochester, July 7, 1933: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The title was amended so as to read, "An act for the relief of the parents of Albert Thesing, Jr."

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8089) for the relief of Joseph J. Baylin was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ANN RAKESTRAW

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3932) for the relief of Ann Rakestraw, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out the numerals "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,500", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Ann Rakestraw the sum of $3,500 in full and final settlement of any and all claims against the Government for personal injuries suffered by her when the automobile in which she was riding was struck by a Navy ambulance on September 13, 1935, at the intersection of Twenty-second and M Streets NW., Washington, D. C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE E. WILSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3652) for the relief of George E. Wilson, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$500" and insert in lieu thereof "$300", and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George E. Wilson the sum of $300, representing the amount paid by him on December 12, 1928, to the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi as surety on the forfeited appearance bond of one Ed Ward, who willfully defaulted on a charge of violation of the liquor law but who was subsequently rearrested and convicted through the efforts of the said George E. Wilson: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES MURPHY MORGAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7253) for the relief of James Murphy Morgan, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James Murphy Morgan, of Miami, Ariz., the sum of $10,000, and to Blanche Copelan, of Claypool, Ariz., the sum of $750. Such sums shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States for permanent personal injuries, medical expenses, property damage, and loss of wages sustained by the said James Murphy Morgan and Blanche Copelan when they were injured in an automobile collision with a United States owned truck (Civilian Conservation Corps truck) near Claypool, Gila County, Ariz., on November 18, 1934: Provided, That no part of the amounts appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claims. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claims, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read "An act for the relief of James Murphy Morgan and Blanche Copelan."

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, NATCHEZ, MISS.

The bill (S. 4208) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss., and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. On the calendar is a House bill of identical nature. I suggest that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed and the House bill placed upon its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection the bill (H. R. 11729) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss., and for other purposes was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 4208, bearing the same title, is indefinitely postponed.

FLOOD CONTROL ON SABINE AND NECHES RIVERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4214) to authorize the preparation of a comprehensive plan for controlling the floods, regulating the flow of waters, land reclamation, and conserving water for beneficial uses, in the basins of the Sabine and Neches Rivers, and for other purposes, which has been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Sabine and Neches Rivers, and their tributaries, with a view to controlling their floods and regulating, conserving, and utilizing the waters thereof, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1912, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for a preliminary examination of the Sabine and Neches Rivers, with a view to controlling their floods and regulating, conserving, and utilizing the waters thereof, and for other purposes."

CONNECTICUT RIVER BRIDGE, NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], in view of the number of measures we are now considering calling for bridge surveys, whether in the bill we passed some time ago carrying $187,000,000 for flood-control examination of streams with a view to their development, these cases were not included, or whether under that bill these surveys might not be made?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, these bills provide only for preliminary examinations and for reports back to Congress as to the desirability and cost of a survey. These will not be included in any measure until the Government engineers report the results of the preliminary examinations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, are all these bridge bills in like form, and do they contain the necessary precautions for the protection of the Government?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; they are in the usual form. They are the usual bridge bills. The interests of the Government are taken care of.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE, SISTERSVILLE, W. VA.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF CHICKASAWHA RIVER, MISS.

The bill (H. R. 8694) to provide a preliminary examination of the Chickasawha River and its tributaries in the State of Mississippi, with a view to the control of their floods was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, LOUISIANA

The bill (S. 4002) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between New Orleans and Gretna, La., was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the House has passed a similar bill, being House bill 11103, Calendar No. 1993. I ask unanimous consent to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill and will be considered at this time.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11103) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between New Orleans and Gretna, La., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between New Orleans and Gretna, La., authorized to be built by George A. Hero and Allen S. Hackett, their successors and assigns, by an act of Congress approved March 2, 1927, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved March 6, 1928, February 19, 1929, June 10, 1930, March 1, 1933, March 5, 1934, and June 3, 1935, are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the House bill, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 12, after the period, it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That the State of Louisiana, or any agency or authority created by it, may construct the bridge herein authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. OVERTON. I now move that Senate bill 4002 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PEARL RIVER BRIDGE, MONTICELLO, MISS.

The bill (S. 4095) granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Mississippi to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Pearl River at or near Monticello, Miss., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this bill is similar to House bill 11738, Calendar No. 1902. I ask that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill, and if the House bill shall be passed I will then move that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11738 in lieu of Senate bill 4095.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 11738) granting the consent of Congress to the State Highway Commission of Mississippi to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Pearl River at or near Monticello, Miss., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now move that Senate bill 4095 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

WEST PEARL RIVER BRIDGE, TALISHEEK, LA.

The bill (S. 4276) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Lamar Lumber Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the West Pearl River, at or near Talisheek, La.", approved June 17, 1930, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the House has passed House bill 11476, which is Calendar No. 1899, a similar bill; so I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill and passed, and if that shall be done I will then move that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (H. R. 11476) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Lamar Lumber Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge across the West Pearl River, at or near Talisheek, La.", approved June 17, 1930, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LOGAN. I now move that Senate bill 4276 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

WABASH RIVER BRIDGE, MEROM, IND.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4271) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Wabash River at or near Merom, Sullivan County, Ind., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 1, page 2, line 2, after "April 30", to strike out "1935" and insert "1936", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Wabash River, at or near Merom, Sullivan County, Ind., authorized to be built by Sullivan County, Ind., or any board or commission of said county which is or may be created or established for the purpose, by an act of Congress approved February 10, 1932, heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved April 30, 1934, and June 27, 1935, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from April 30, 1936.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF DELAWARE RIVER

The bill (S. 4355) to authorize a preliminary examination of the Delaware River with a view to the control of its floods was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Delaware River with a view to the control of its floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

YAKIMA AND WALLA WALLA RIVERS, WASH.

The bill (H. R. 8414) to provide a preliminary examination of the Yakima River and its tributaries and the Walla Walla River and its tributaries in the State of Washington, with a view to the control of their floods, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPHINE RUSSELL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4416) for the relief of Josephine Russell, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add at the end of the bill a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Employees' Compensation Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and determine the claim of Josephine Russell for disability resulting from injuries sustained by her on or about June 19, 1933, while employed by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior, as a nurse in the Pine Ridge Hospital, Pine Ridge S. Dak., under the provision of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, except that the time limitation in sections 15 and 20, inclusive, of said act are hereby waived: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN C. CROSSMAN

The bill (S. 3191) for the relief of John C. Crossman was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the records show that the beneficiary of this bill, John C. Crossman, was a sergeant in the National Guard, regularly on duty at a Federal camp. He was called into a supply camp to assist in lighting a gasoline lamp which was supplied by the Government. This particular lamp was an old-style affair. He worked with the lamp for some time, and was pouring some gasoline into it when it exploded. There was a considerable amount of explosives in the camp; and in order to prevent a further explosion, and avoid injury or death to a number of other men, Crossman courageously picked up the lantern and carried it outside. The result was that he was severely and permanently burned, and will always suffer disability. The committee believes this to be a very meritorious bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I observe that the Secretary of War reports, in part, as follows:

As the National Guard is in the State service, and not in the Federal service, when participating in field training, there is no provision of law under which further compensation may be paid by the Federal Government in Sergeant Crossman's case, or in similar cases of injury to members of the National Guard. Therefore the enactment of this legislation would single out an individual of a class for preferential treatment not accorded others of that class, to which the War Department is opposed, and would set up a precedent for the payment of all similar claims.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This was such an unusual act of heroism that the enactment of the bill could hardly be considered a precedent. Besides, this is the usual objection which the War Department makes to bills of this character.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Texas always has an undue influence over me, and I am going to withdraw any objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, on page 1, line 4, after the word "money", to strike out "in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert "appropriated for the support of the National Guard for the current fiscal year", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money appropriated for the support of the National Guard for the current fiscal year, to Sgt. John C. Crossman the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for injuries sustained by him while in the performance of his duties at Camp Hulen, Palacios, Tex., August 10, 1933, caused by the explosion of a gasoline lantern: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PURCHASERS OF LAND IN BROOKLAWN, N. J.

The bill (H. R. 11573) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain purchasers of lands in the borough of Brooklawn, State of New Jersey", approved August 19, 1935, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C. T. HIRD

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3441) for the relief of C. T. Hird, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the numerals "$839.22", to strike out "together with interest at the rate of 6 per centum per annum from May 1, 1927", and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to C. T. Hird, of Dubuque, Iowa, the sum of $839.22, in full satisfaction of the claim of said C. T. Hird against the United States for a refund of income taxes erroneously assessed against him and paid by him under protest, which claim was disallowed on the ground of failure to file within the statutory period of limitation: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per centum thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WABASH RIVER BRIDGE, INDIANA

The bill (H. R. 11685) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Wabash River at or near Merom, Sullivan County, Ind., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAN DIEGO RIVER, CALIF.

The bill (H. R. 10583) to authorize a preliminary examination of the San Diego River and its tributaries in the State of California, with a view to the control of its floods, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXAMINATION OF CREEKS IN CALIFORNIA

The bill (H. R. 11793) to authorize a preliminary examination of various creeks in the State of California, with a view to the control of their floods, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOANS SECURED BY NATIONAL FOREST RESERVES RECEIPTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3762) to authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans secured by receipts on account of national forest reserves, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment, on page 3, line 5, after the word "expended", to strike out the words "as the legislature of such State or Territory may prescribe, for the payment of general expenses, bonds, or other indebtedness of any county, or of any school district or other political subdivision thereof, to which any such funds may be paid under existing law" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "by any county, school district, or other political subdivision to which any such funds are payable for the repayment of any loan made to it by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to make loans out of the funds of the Corporation to any county, or to any school district or other political subdivision thereof, in any State or Territory in which is situated national-forest reserves, such loans to be secured by the assignment or pledge to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of the future annual receipts of such county, school district, or other political subdivision on account of national-forest reserves situated therein, or by bonds issued under authority of State law secured by such receipts: Provided, That no such loan shall be made unless (1) the county, school district, or political subdivision applying for the loan is authorized by the laws of the State or Territory in which it is located to use such receipts as security for such loan; (2) at least 40 percent of the area of such county, school district, or other political subdivision is in Federal ownership; and (3) the loan is amortized over a period of not to exceed 20 years: Provided further, That no such loan shall be made in an amount in excess of 10 times the amount of the average future annual share of such county, school district, or other political subdivision, in such receipts during the period of the loan, as estimated by the Department of Agriculture. Each such loan shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed 4 percent per annum. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in any case in which a loan is made pursuant to the provisions of this act, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the amount of all such receipts which are due to the county, school district, or other political subdivision making the loan until the full amount of the principal and interest of such loan is paid.

SEC. 2. In addition to the purposes for which the funds payable under existing law to any State or Territory on account of national-forest reserves situated in such State or Territory may be expended, such funds may hereafter be expended by any county, school district, or other political subdivision to which any such funds are payable for the repayment of any loan made to it by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under this act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER rose.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is this the bill the Senator from Florida stated earlier he desired to have taken up under a special order?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; that bill has been passed. This is not the same bill.

This bill would authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to counties, school districts, and political subdivisions of States or Territories in which are situated national forest reserves, such loans to be secured by the assignment or pledge to the Corporation of the future annual receipts on account of national forest reserves situated therein, or by bonds issued under authority of State law secured by such receipts.

The fiscal situation of numerous counties, cities, school districts, and other political subdivisions of States and Territories is somewhat as follows. In some instances, these national forest reserves impose tremendous burdens upon some political subdivisions, for the reason that all of these reserves are tax exempt, thereby throwing a tremendous burden upon other taxable properties.

On the other hand, the Federal Government has pledged a certain percentage of the future income which will be derived from these reserve areas to the local tax district. Under the provisions of this bill, the local taxing unit will be permitted to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation by pledging those future revenues, thereby making it possible for the local subdivisions to avoid the levying of confiscatory taxes on what little private property remains in the district, and at the same time adequately support its schools and other indispensable public services.

On page 3 the committee recommends the adoption of its amendment, which would restrict the use to which these funds, payable under existing law, may be put, and provides that the additional purposes for which such funds might be expended should be limited to the repayment of loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the present law does not permit any loans to counties or other subdivisions of States, does it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Not in circumstances like those of this case.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not this just open the door to all such loans?

Mr. FLETCHER. Loans are now made to districts, counties, and cities, but under different circumstances.

Mr. McKELLAR. Loans are authorized now to counties and cities?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not know the law provided for such loans. What is the nature of the security in this case?

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill provides—

No such loan shall be made unless (1) the county, school district, or political subdivision applying for the loan is authorized by the laws of the State or Territory in which it is located to use such receipts as security for such loan; (2) at least 40 percent of the area of such county, school district, or other political subdivision is in Federal ownership; and (3) the loan is amortized over a period of not to exceed 20 years.

There are specific instances to which the measure would apply, which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BENSON] can give.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not understand clearly the position of the Senator from Florida because of the confusion in the Chamber. Was this bill reported favorably by the committee?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; with the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. McNARY. Was it brought here by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; it is not brought here by them. They appeared before the committee and we discussed it with them and they are agreeable to it.

Mr. McNARY. Do they favor the enactment of the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; they are favorable to it. They appeared before the committee and we had a hearing on it. The officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are agreeable to it; they raise no objection to it.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BENSON] knows of specific instances where this relief is very much needed and would apply, and I yield to him.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, if any of the Senators have questions regarding the operation of the measure, I should be glad to answer, if I can.

Mr. McNARY. I think I am in favor of the general purpose of the bill. I simply desire to know whether the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are asking for an enlargement of their activities. Are the officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bringing the measure here, or who promoted the proposed legislation?

Mr. BENSON. I introduced the bill at the request of county officials in Cook County, Minn., the landed area of which has been more than 60 percent taken over by the National Government for national-forest purposes, and the county now finds itself in an embarassing position, because land which was formerly taxed is now owned by the Federal Government. Awaiting the time when they will receive returns from this forest area, they want to pledge those returns and borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, if the assets seem sufficient.

Mr. McNARY. Do those unfortunate communities desire and propose to reforest these lands and mortgage the future income from sales of timber?

Mr. BENSON. In the specific case of Cook County, prior to the time when the Federal Government took over a large portion of the county, the county built roads through this wilderness area and erected schools; but during the past few years more than 60 percent of the area has been taken over by the Federal Government, as I have said, and the Federal Government has pledged to the county 25 percent of the returns, as they have in the cases of many other counties and many other States. I think 38 States are similarly situated. How many counties in those States are similarly situated I do not know.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in years past I have made some study of the forest problem, and I know of the conditions that obtain in the Great Lakes States; and I also know that such conditions are not limited to those States, but extend to New England, to the Southern States, and to some of the Western States. I have no objection to the bill. I was only anxious to know the inspiration back of the movement to utilize this security for a loan. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STUDY OF FUTURE NEEDS OF THE PANAMA CANAL

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 412) to authorize an investigation of the means of increasing capacity of the Panama Canal for future needs of interoceanic shipping, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Governor of the Panama Canal is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the means of increasing the capacity of the Panama Canal for future needs of interoceanic shipping, and to prepare designs and approximate estimates of cost of such additional locks or other structures and facilities as are needed for the purpose, and to make progress reports from time to time of the results thereof.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not wish to assume an attitude of opposition, but I desire some information regarding this measure. We had before us recently a bill affecting Panama Canal tolls. Has this any connection with that measure, or does it provide for a mere study?

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, this measure was introduced at the request of the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, and other authorities in the Canal Zone, but it has no connection whatever with Canal tolls. It merely provides an authorization so that a study may be made from time to time and suitable drawings prepared, so that when the question comes before Congress as to whether there need be or should be enlargement, for instance, of the Canal, information will be available. I think there is no objection to it.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 6719) to amend the Canal Zone Code was announced as next in order.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DECORATIONS OF OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN OF THE ARMY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4391) authorizing certain officers and enlisted men of the United States Army to accept such medals, orders, diplomas, decorations, and photographs as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 9, after the word "Corlett" and the comma, to insert the words "Major John A. Weeks", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-named officers and enlisted men of the United States Army are hereby authorized to accept such medals, orders, diplomas, decorations, and photographs as have been tendered them by foreign governments in appreciation of services rendered:

Maj. Gen. George S. Simonds, Maj. Gen. Thomas Q. Ashburn, Brig. Gen. Alfred T. Smith, Lt. Col. Joen E. Ardrey, Lt. Col. David E. Cain, Lt. Col. John A. Considine, Lt. Col. Roland L. Gaugler, Lt. Col. Hans R. W. Herwig, Lt. Col. Dennis E. McCunniff, Lt. Col. Troy H. Middleton, Lt. Col. Lathe B. Row, Lt. Col. Clinton W. Russell, Lt. Col. Otis K. Sadtler, Lt. Col. Clemens W. McMillan, Maj. Elbridge Colby, Maj. Charles H. Corlett, Maj. John A. Weeks, Capt. Robert M. Eichelsdoerfer, and Capt. James H. Walker.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE AIR CORPS RESERVE

The bill (S. 4309) to increase the efficiency of the Air Corps Reserve was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that this bill be recommitted to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs for further study, together with another bill relating to the same subject, being the bill (S. 3974) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide more effectively for the national defense by increasing the efficiency of the Air Corps of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes."

I also ask that House bill 11920, to increase the efficiency of the Air Corps, now on the Senate calendar, be recommitted to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and the bills referred to are recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NATIONAL CEMETERY AT FORT BLISS, TEX.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4265) to authorize the Secretary of War to set apart as a national cemetery certain lands of the United States Military Reservation of Fort Bliss, Tex.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Texas how much it would cost to carry out the purposes of the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The total cost would be about $25,000. The land will cost nothing, because it is already owned by the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to set aside in the United States Military Reservation of Fort Bliss, Tex., a plot of land which shall include the existing post cemetery with such boundaries as he may prescribe therefor as a national cemetery, which hereafter shall be cared for and maintained as a national cemetery under the laws relating to the same.

HOURS OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10193) to amend the act to fix the hours of duty of postal employees, which had been reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, to strike out the word "weekly", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Public Law No. 275, entitled "An act to fix the hours of duty of postal employees, and for other purposes", approved August 14, 1935, shall be construed in its application to those employees of the mail-equipment shops covered therein to mean that the 40 hours per week of labor established by the act shall be compensated for at the same rate which had theretofore been allowed by law for 44 hours per week.

SEC. 2. This act shall be retroactive in effect to and including October 1, 1935.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN RAILWAY MAIL EMPLOYEES

The bill (H. R. 10267) to provide for adjusting the compensation of division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, assistant superintendents at large, assistant superintendent in charge of car construction, chief clerks, assistant chief clerks, and clerks in charge of sections in offices of division superintendents in the Railway Mail Service, to correspond to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee tell us what is the significance of this bill? Will its passage mean new employees, or merely adjustment of compensation? I take it that it provides for adjustment of compensation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the bill is for the purpose of adjusting the compensation of division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, assistant superintendent at large, and so forth.

Mr. COPELAND. So as to correspond with the Classification Act?

Mr. McKELLAR. Absolutely.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no objection. I think the bill should pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, with an amendment, on page 1, line 3, after the word "General", to strike out "with the concurrence of the Civil Service Commission", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to adjust the compensation of division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, assistant superintendents at large, assistant superintendent in charge of car construction, chief clerks, assistant chief clerks, and clerks in charge of sections in offices of division superintendents, Railway Mail Service, to correspond, so far as may be practicable, to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended for positions in the departmental service in the District of Columbia. Any appropriation now or hereafter available for the payment of the compensation of employees in the Railway Mail Service shall be available for payment of compensation in accordance with the rates adjusted in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENT OF EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT OF 1933

The bill (H. R. 9484) to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, this seems to be an important bill. I do not see the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] in the Chamber at the moment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have just obtained the report of the committee, which I think explains the bill, and I ask that the clerk may read it. I think the bill will make a commendable revision of the act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read the report.

The report (No. 1828) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9484) to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with an amendment and as amended recommend that the bill do pass.

The amendment merely restores substantially the language of existing law that the operations under the bill are not intended to bring additional lands into production. The language in the House bill was that "the terms of this act shall not permit additional or new land to be brought into production."

The statement as to the purposes of the bill, contained in House Report No. 2268 to accompany H. R. 9484, follows:

"STATEMENT

"This bill changes section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, in the following respects:

"(1) Present act authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to irrigation districts, whether or not they have any indebtedness, for the purpose of purchasing additional water rights, appurtenances, or improve the project. Drainage, levee, and reclamation districts by reason of a technical interpretation of the legal division of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are barred from securing loans for the above purposes. This amendment will clarify the act and make it possible for drainage, levee, and reclamation districts to secure loans for repairing levees, cleaning ditches, construct and repair pumping stations, or make any other improvements that are desirable for the proper functioning of the project.

"(2) Present act also limits loans to districts that have completed projects. There are a few districts in a number of States that are not entirely completed. This amendment authorizes loans to districts that do not have completed projects and for the purchase of partially completed projects. The present requirement, however, that no additional lands may be brought into production remains intact.

"It will only take a small amount of the $125,000,000 already appropriated to take care of the few projects that will qualify under the Pierce bill."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that seems to be an excellent explanation of the measure. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment, on page 2, line 20, after the word "Provided" and the comma, to strike out "That the terms of this act shall not permit additional or new land to be brought into production" and insert in lieu thereof "That it is not intended that additional lands will thereby be brought into production", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first two sentences of section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans as hereinafter provided, in an aggregate amount not exceeding $125,000,000, including commitments and disbursements heretofore made, to or for the benefit of drainage districts, levee districts, levee and drainage districts, irrigation districts, and similar districts, mutual nonprofit companies and incorporated water users' associations duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory, and to or for the benefit of political subdivisions of States and Territories which have or propose to purchase or otherwise acquire projects or portions thereof devoted chiefly to the improvement of lands for agricultural purposes. Such loans shall be made for the purpose of enabling any such district, political subdivision, company, or association (hereafter referred to as the "borrower") to reduce and refinance its outstanding indebtedness incurred in connection with any such project; or, whether or not it has any such indebtedness, to purchase, acquire, construct, or complete such a project or any part thereof, or to purchase or acquire additional drainage, levee, or irrigation works, or property, rights, or appurtenances in connection therewith, and to repair, extend, or improve any such project or make such additions thereto as are consonant with or necessary or desirable for the proper functioning thereof or for the further assurance of the ability of the borrower to repay its loan: Provided, That it is not intended that additional lands will thereby be brought into production.

SEC. 2. Such section is further amended by striking out the sentence therein which reads as follows: "When any loan is authorized pursuant to the provisions of this section and it shall then or thereafter appear that repairs and necessary extensions or improvements to the project of such district, political subdivision, company, or association are necessary or desirable for the proper functioning of its project or for the further assurance of its ability to repay such loan, and if it shall also appear that such repairs and necessary extensions or improvements are not designed to bring new lands into production, the corporation, within the limitation as to total amount provided in this section, may make an additional loan or loans to such district, political subdivision, company, or association for such purpose or purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BANKERS' RESERVE LIFE CO. AND WISCONSIN NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House bill 3155.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 3155) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the Bankers Reserve Life Co., of Omaha, Nebr., and the Wisconsin National Life Insurance Co., of Oshkosh, Wis., which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, the Senate sometime ago passed an identical bill, introduced by the Senator from Nebraska and myself. The House has now messaged to the Senate its own bill under its own number, and as I have said, the House bill is identical with the Senate bill. I ask that the House bill be considered and passed at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BADGE OF UNITED STATES DAUGHTERS OF 1812

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 11562, which provides for the renewal of patent no. 25909, relating to the badge of the United States Daughters of 1812.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California?

There being no objection the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11562) to renew patent no. 25909 relating to the badge of the United States Daughters of 1812, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. PERCY WRIGHT FOOTE, UNITED STATES NAVY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 1816, being House bill 7092. I understand that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who objected to the bill when it was reached on the calendar, has withdrawn his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7092) for the relief of Capt. Percy Wright Foote, United States Navy, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, after "admiral" and the colon, to strike out "Provided, That in the event of his selection and subsequent promotion he shall be carried as an additional number in grade" and to insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That he shall remain on the active list of the Navy in his present rank until the report of the next senior selection board of the Navy shall have been approved: Provided further, That if selected for promotion he shall be retained in his present rank on the active list until promoted to the rank of rear admiral, and in the event of his selection and subsequent promotion he shall be carried as an additional number in grade", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in recognition of his having been wounded in line of duty and of his "exceptionally meritorious service" in combat with the enemy during the World War when in command of the U. S. S. President Lincoln and when his conduct and bearing were found to have been "in accord with the best traditions of the naval service" and for which he was awarded the Navy Distinguished Service Medal, the line selection board of the Navy, as provided by the act of August 29, 1916, as amended (39 Stat. 578, 41 Stat. 319; U. S. C., title 34, sec. 292), in its consideration of the officers eligible for consideration for selection for promotion to the grade of rear admiral may base its recommendation in the case of Capt. Percy Wright Foote upon his comparative fitness for the shore duties of the grade of rear admiral: Provided, That he shall remain on the active list of the Navy in his present rank until the report of the next senior selection board of the Navy shall have been approved: Provided further, That if selected for promotion he shall be retained in his present rank on the active list until promoted to the rank of rear admiral, and in the event of his selection and subsequent promotion he shall be carried as an additional number in grade.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, WESTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4353) to provide for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Oklahoma at Shawnee, Okla., which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a term of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Oklahoma shall be held annually at Shawnee, Okla., on the first Monday in October: Provided, That suitable rooms and equipment for holding court at Shawnee shall be furnished without expense to the United States.

REOPENING OF CERTAIN CASES IN COURT OF CLAIMS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4444) directing the Court of Claims to reopen certain cases and to correct the errors therein, if any, by additional judgments against the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 6, after "(Virginia)" and the semicolon, to insert "William G. Maupin, Jr., and others (now represented by George W. Maupin, as administrator and in his own right, E. Griffith Maupin, S. Dawson Maupin, Alliene Maupin, and Ruth Maupin, all of Portsmouth, Va.) docket no. 34681"; and on the same page, line 25, after "(Stat. 207–208)", to insert "and taken for public use by the United States on September 20, 1918, by authority of acts of Congress of May 16, 1918 (40 Stat. 550–551), and June 4, 1918 (40 Stat. 595), and an Executive order of the President dated June 18, 1918", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims of the United States be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to reopen the following just-compensation cases on its docket, heretofore disposed of by said court, to wit: Willard R. Cook & Co., Inc., v. United States (no. 33984); A. E. Krise, receiver of the Fidelity Land & Investment Corporation (formerly Fidelity Land & Investment Corporation), v. United States (no. 33988); Pine Beach Hotel Corporation (now represented by Charles H. Consolvo and A. E. Campe, its receivers) and others v. United States (no. 34049); Harry L. Lowenberg and others v. United States (no. 34727); Norfolk-Hampton Roads Co. v. United States (no. 34751) (all of Norfolk, Va.); William G. Maupin, Jr., and others (now represented by George W. Maupin, as administrator and in his own right, E. Griffith Maupin, S. Dawson Maupin, Alliene Maupin, and Ruth Maupin, all of Portsmouth, Va.), docket no. 34681; and to ascertain and determine from the special findings of fact as therein made and recorded by said court, and with due regard to the requirements of the act applicable thereto under which such properties were taken and the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as defined by the Supreme Court in the case of Seaboard Air Line Railway v. United States (261 U. S. 299), and other like cases, the amount of just compensation by way of interest, if any, at the rate of 6 percent per annum, alleged to be due and owing by the United States to the parties plaintiff from the date of taking to the time of the payment to them of the original judgments in each of said cases for their lands situate at Hampton Roads, Va., and taken for public use by the United States on June 28, 1917, by authority of the act of Congress of June 15, 1917 (ch. 29, 40 Stat. 207–208), and taken for public use by the United States on September 20, 1918, by authority of acts of Congress of May 16, 1918 (40 Stat. 550–551), and June 4, 1918 (40 Stat. 595), and an Executive order of the President dated June 18, 1918.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 4, line 17, after "1917", to insert "and September 20, 1918, respectively", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. Before any money shall be paid to any of the parties plaintiff designated herein in satisfaction of a judgment obtained against the United States under the provision of this act, the Attorney General of the United States shall certify that all actions at law or suits in equity instituted by any such party plaintiff against the United States, or any officer of the United States, have been dismissed and a quitclaim deed has been delivered, conveying and releasing to the United States all the right, title, and interest of such party plaintiff in the said property taken for public use by the United States on June 28, 1917, and September 20, 1918, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER FOR FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I observe that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has returned to the Chamber, and I am going to suggest to him and others, in connection with the unfinished business, that the unanimous-consent agreement be modified so as to extend the time this afternoon sufficiently to conclude the consideration of the bills on the calendar.

There are only about five more pages of the calendar unconsidered. We have not considered the bills on the calendar for several weeks; and inasmuch as the Senate is in a calendar mood this afternoon, I think it would be well to go forward to complete it. I hope the Senator may arrange to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think it will be convenient to take the action proposed by the Senator from Oregon. I understand some conferences are in progress on the so-called deportation bill; and I ask unanimous consent that the agreement entered into yesterday afternoon be now modified as follows:

That when the hour of 2 o'clock shall arrive, the unfinished business be again temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed with the call of the calendar for unobjected bills until that order of business shall have been completed.

Mr. McNARY. I hope that order may be entered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 4148) for the relief of the Thomas Marine Railway Co., Inc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

M. WARING HARRISON

The bill (H. R. 2622) for the relief of M. Waring Harrison was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATRICK J. LEAHY

The bill (H. R. 4362) for the relief of Patrick J. Leahy was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THELMA L. EDMUNDS AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 5974) for the relief of Thelma L. Edmunds, Mrs. J. M. Padgett, Myrtis E. Posey, Mrs. J. D. Mathis, Sr., Fannie Harrison, Annie R. Colgan, and Grace Whitlock, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAUD KELLEY THOMAS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3824) for the relief of Maud Kelley Thomas, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the current appropriation, "Pay subsistence, and transportation, Navy", to Maud Kelley Thomas, sister of Orloff Allen Kelley, late chief machinist's mate, United States Navy, an amount equal to 6 months' pay at the rate said Orloff Allen Kelley was receiving at the date of his death: Provided, That the said Maud Kelley Thomas establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that she was actually dependent upon her brother, Orloff Allen Kelley, at the time of the latter's death, and the determination of such fact by the Secretary of the Navy shall be final and conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. FOSTER M'LYNN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3850) for the relief of Mrs. Foster McLynn, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

DEPORTATION OF CRIMINAL ALIENS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion with regard to the unfinished business?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have already made an announcement with respect to the matter the Senator has in mind.

Mr. KING. It is understood by the proponents of the so-called deportation bill and those who have been discussing the question on the other side that the bill may go over until Monday, and that meanwhile we shall probably come to an agreement.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what was the remark of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KING. I merely suggested that the proponents of the so-called deportation bill and those who have been speaking in opposition to it have agreed that the matter may go over until Monday.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I may say, in line with what my colleague the Senator from Utah has said, that we are going to meet tomorrow and Monday in an endeavor to get the matter straightened out to the satisfaction of the proponents of the bill and those opposed to the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, some parts of the bill are perfectly agreeable to everyone. There are only two sections of the bill on which there is any disagreement. After discussing the matter with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], we have decided to hold meetings tomorrow and on Monday morning, and that probably then we shall come to an agreement on the bill and probably end the discussion on it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is understood, however, that the bill is to come before the Senate again on Monday.

Mr. KING. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. DAVIS. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I will state that that has already been arranged; and when the call of the calendar shall have been completed, it is my intention to move a recess or adjournment until Monday, unless there is objection.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, at the proper time I desire to bring up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that. I also understand that the Senator from Georgia wishes to bring something before the Senate. The unfinished business has been temporarily laid aside.

MRS. FOSTER M'LYNN

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments reported by the Committee on Claims.

The amendments were on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$125.77" and insert "$110", and at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Foster McLynn, of Portland, Oreg., the sum of $110, in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States arising out of damages to her summer home in Mount Hood National Forest, which was struck by rocks thrown by blasting operations carried on by members of the Civilian Conservation Corps in connection with the Lady Creek water project, in March or April 1933: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2609) for the relief of Charles G. Johnson, State treasurer of the State of California, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

J. W. HEARN, JR.

The bill (H. R. 2623) for the relief of J. W. Hearn, Jr., was read, considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized and directed to receive and consider under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, the claim of J. W. Hearn, Jr., former employee of the Isthmian Canal Commission, for injury sustained by him while in the performance of his duties as a foreman on the construction of Colon breakwater on July 29, 1911: Provided, That he shall file notice of such injury and claim for compensation therefor not later than 60 days from the enactment of this act: And provided further, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

JOHN B. MEISINGER AND NANNIE B. MEISINGER

The bill (H. R. 8039) for the relief of John B. Meisinger and Nannie B. Meisinger was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon its compensation roll the names of John B. Meisinger and Nannie B. Meisinger, who shall be held and considered to be the dependent parents of Dr. Clarence L. Meisinger, who was killed June 2, 1924, by the explosion of a balloon in which he was making a series of observations for the United States Weather Bureau, and pay jointly to them compensation at the rate of $50 per month.

SEC. 2. The compensation of said John B. Meisinger and Nannie B. Meisinger shall cease if either of them dies, marries, or ceases to be dependent; and thereafter the remaining dependent shall be paid at the rate of $25 per month until he dies, marries, or ceases to be dependent.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of the calendar month following the date of its enactment.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, I tried to obtain recognition when House bill 8039 was being considered. I find that the bill has been reported adversely by the Chairman of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the bill was passed will be reconsidered.

Mr. KING. I now ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HARRY WALLACE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10991) for the relief of Harry Wallace, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Harry Wallace, of Polkadotte, Ohio, in full satisfaction of all claims against the Government of the United States for permanent injuries sustained and for medical and hospital expenses incurred by him and for the destruction of his automobile on September 29, 1934, when the automobile in which he was riding and which belonged to him was struck and completely demolished by a Government automobile truck operated by one of the employees of and in connection with the Civilian Conservation Corps stationed at Camp Dean, Lawrence County, Ohio, for which said automobile truck was at that time being used on official business and being operated on State Highway No. 141, in Lawrence County, Ohio, near Ironton, Ohio: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I inquire whether this bill was referred to any department?

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, the bill was referred to the Department and adversely reported by the Department, but the adverse report was based upon an investigation of this accident made by the commandant of the camp from which the truck that was involved in the accident proceeded. The House Committee on Claims reviewed the whole case and took further evidence, much of it from the same witnesses examined by the captain at the camp, and the House committee came to the conclusion that the fault in this automobile collision was on the side of the driver of the Army truck.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JENS H. LARSEN

The bill (H. R. 3573) for the relief of Jens H. Larsen was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jens H. Larsen the sum of $30.50, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages incurred to his automobile from snow and ice falling from the roof of the post-office building in St. Paul, Minn.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BERNARD V. WOLFE AND THE DIXON IMPLEMENT CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3673) for the relief of Bernard V. Wolfe and the Dixon Implement Co., which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Bernard V. Wolfe the sum of $2,500 for permanent personal injuries, and to the Dixon Implement Co. the sum of $119.33 for damage to its tractor, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for such injuries and damage sustained when said tractor, driven by Bernard V. Wolfe, was struck by an airplane owned by the United States and operated by an employee of the Department of Commerce, at the Dixon (Ill.) Airport on September 17, 1930: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, did the Senator from Arkansas inquire as to House bill 3573?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. LOGAN. As I recall, there is a disagreement in the reports from the several branches of the Department; but I believe, if the Senator had time to examine the reports, he would find that there is no doubt as to the negligence of the airplane pilot. The claimant, Wolfe, was the driver of a tractor at work on the grounds of the airport at Dixon, Ill. The air pilot says that he looked around and did not see the tractor, and so he started off and ran into it and damaged the tractor and also very seriously injured Mr. Wolfe. It appears to be a very clear case of negligence. As I recall, the Department of Commerce, or at least some bureau of it, recommended payment, while another bureau which perhaps had something to do in connection with this matter, recommended against it, on the ground that the negligence is not clearly shown.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Kentucky has examined the claim.

Mr. LOGAN. I have.

Mr. ROBINSON. I notice the Senator submitted a report from the committee. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to a statement made by the Secretary of Commerce. He states:

It would seem, therefore, that the accident was unavoidable, in view of which I am unable to recommend the payment of compensation for the injuries received by Mr. Wolfe.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes. He said that; but may I say to the Senator at the same time the facts which he sets forth clearly show that Wolfe was at work on the ground with a tractor and the pilot of the airplane just ran right into him. There was nothing unavoidable about it except the pilot says that he looked around and did not see anybody.

Mr. KING. The Chief Engineer of the Airway Division, after reviewing the facts, states:

In view of the fact that the pilot was not responsible for the accident it is recommended that compensation be not granted.

Mr. LOGAN. I may say to the Senator from Utah that, of course, it does not make any difference tc me; but if we expect the department that causes damage to correct its errors and if we expect always to rely on what it says we will never get anything done. Here is a case where the facts stated show that deliberately a man was run into and seriously injured and nobody disputes it.

Mr. KING. By whom?

Mr. LOGAN. By the airplane pilot in charge of the airplane. The man was on the ground at work, and he was run into, and the only excuse is that the pilot looked around and did not see anyone, although it was in the broad open daylight.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. KING. Was the pilot an employee of the Federal Government?

Mr. LOGAN. That is my information. One or the other of them was employed by the Federal Government, and I think it was the air pilot.

Mr. KING. I was wondering whether the pilot was in the employ of the Federal Government or of some commercial organization.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand he was in the employ of the Federal Government. That is my information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STANLEY T. GROSS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4031) for the relief of Stanley T. Gross, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Stanley T. Gross the sum of $500, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for the amount of a United States Treasury bond which he deposited in behalf of Stanislaw Walczak, an alien, who has been deported: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire what is the explanation of this claim?

Mr. LOGAN. It is very easy to explain. I may say to the Senator that Mr. Gross became surety on a bond of an alien who had been notified to appear in order that a hearing might be held to determine whether he should be deported. The alien moved from his address in the city to another address and went to the post office and notified the post office that he was moving, thinking that was notice to the Government. So when the notice was sent out to him to appear he did not receive it. He heard, however, the immigration officers were looking for him, and he went to the office of the immigration agent, said he was there, surrendered himself, and was deported.

The Commissioner of Immigration refused to return the $500 which had been forfeited because the alien did not appear promptly because he did not receive any notice, although just as soon as he heard about it he went to the proper office. It seemed to me very unfair that the Government, after he appeared and actually was deported, without the expense of a penny to the Government, should not refund the money to the bondsman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIE LINSENMEYER

The bill (H. R. 4999) for the relief of Marie Linsenmeyer was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Marie Linsenmeyer, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $112.50 in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of personal injuries received by the said Marie Linsenmeyer on the 18th day of December 1930, at the post-office building at Burlington, Des Moines County, Iowa: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

MAE C. TIBBETT, ADMINISTRATRIX

The bill (H. R. 6698) for the relief of Mae C. Tibbett, administratrix, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Mae C. Tibbett, administratrix of the estate of Leslie L. Tibbett, deceased, in full settlement of all claims against the United States as a result of a United States mail truck running over and killing said Leslie L. Tibbett while he was attempting to cross Plume Street at its intersection with Bank Street in the city of Norfolk, Va., on the afternoon of September 19, 1930: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

IZELDA BOISONEAU

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7468) for the relief of Izelda Boisoneau, which had been reported from the Committe on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$4,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000 to Izelda Boisoneau, of Mellen, Ashland County, Wis., mother of Eugene Boisoneau, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the death of her son, who was killed because of mistaken identity by Government agents on April 22, 1934, in their endeavor to apprehend one John Dillinger and his associates: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3075) for the relief of John L. Summers, former disbursing clerk, Treasury Department, and various former treasurers of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this bill carries a large amount, $93,000-plus. I should like to have an explanation of the bill. I see that it was reported by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who does not appear to be present.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CATHERINE DONNELLY AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 4725) for the relief of Catherine Donnelly, Claire E. Donnelly, John Kufall, Mary F. Kufall, and Elizabeth A. Tucker, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Catherine Donnelly and Claire E. VIRGINIA ENGINEERING CO., INC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 396) for the relief of the Virginia Engineering Co., Inc., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the word "costs", to insert "if any", and on line 7, after the word "requests", to insert "if any shall be found to have been made and complied with", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims of the United States be, and it is hereby, given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of the Virginia Engineering Co., Inc., and to award just compensation for extra costs if any incurred in complying with requests, if any shall be found to have been made and complied with, of the Director of the Veterans' Administration incident to the work performed under contract of June 24, 1924, for equipping the Veterans' Administration Hospital at Aspinwall, Pa., and to enter decree or judgment against the United States for such just compensation, if any, notwithstanding the bars or defense of lapse of time, laches, or any statute of limitation. Suit may be instituted by the claimant at any time within 4 months from the approval of this act. Proceedings in any suit brought in the Court of Claims under this act, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgment therein shall be had as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction by virtue of the judicial code: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?
